SEC. 2. Whenever the executive authority of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, demands any American citizen or national as a fugitive from justice who has fled to the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction, and produces a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, charging the fugitive so demanded with having committed treason, felony or other crime, certified as authentic by the Governor, chief magistrate, or other person authorized to act as such from whence the fugitive so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority to whom the demand has been made to cause such fugitive to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authorities making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent shall appear within 3 months from the time of the arrest, the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, including the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, shall be paid by the executive authority making such demand. The agent who receives the fugitive into his custody shall be empowered to transport him to the jurisdiction from which he has fled, and every person who, by force, sets at liberty or rescues the fugitive from such agent while so transporting him shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 1 year.

SEC. 3. Whenever, under this act, it is desired to obtain the provisional arrest and detention of a fugitive in advance of the presentation of the formal proofs, such detention may be obtained by telegraph upon the request of the authority competent to request the surrender of such fugitive addressed to the authority competent to grant such surrender: Provided, That such request for provisional arrest and detention be accompanied by an express statement that a warrant for the fugitive's arrest has been issued within the jurisdiction of the authority making such request charging the fugitive with the commission of the crime for which his extradition is sought to be obtained: Provided further, That in the case of a request so made by a State, Territory, District, or possession, the expenses of obtaining a fugitive upon telegraphic request shall be borne by such State, Territory, District, or possession: And provided further, That no person shall be held in custody under telegraphic request by virtue of the provisions of this section for more than 90 days.

SEC. 4. The provisions of section 244 of title 18 of the United States Code are hereby made applicable to proceedings in extradition instituted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 715, to award the Distinguished Service Cross to former holders of the certificate of merit, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Distinguished Service Cross shall be issued to all enlisted men of the Army to whom the certificate of merit was issued under the provisions of previously existing law in lieu of such certificate of merit.

SEC. 2. Those persons who have heretofore received the Distinguished Service Medal in lieu of the certificate of merit under the provisions of the act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 870–872), shall be issued the Distinguished Service Cross provided the Distinguished Service Medal is first surrendered to the War Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2837, to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet asking for recognition. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX]?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I object.

FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3521, to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not. I am making this reservation, for I should like to make a statement relative to the bill that invoked so much discussion a few moments ago; that is, the bill providing transportation for Filipinos to the Philippine Islands. A great many Members who spoke upon that bill were moved by passion or interest, and probably without having read the hearings or being thoroughly advised with reference to the matter. Personally, I have no opposition to the passage of that bill, but if some who have spoken had read the hearings and had attended the hearings, and if they knew that the War Department was not in favor of this bill, they would be inclined to hesitate whether or not to vote for it. If you knew the Navy Department did not operate these ships empty, as the gentleman stated, and that the Navy men have stated it would cost a large amount of money to transport these people, and that the Government would be required to spend a great deal for repairs to the ships and would have to provide many new transportation facilities for these people, then they would probably change their minds with reference to whether this bill should be passed.

Now, this is the situation: As far as I am concerned, everybody who knows me knows that for years I have stood here as a restrictionist, and I stand that way now. I should be very glad to have these Filipinos sent back, but there is one phase of this question that I am not sure the Members have thought of today. This is important. We are about to grant independence to the Philippine Islands. Why complicate that matter with the enforcement of this bill? In this bill provision was made that if the Philippine Legislature cooperated and coincided with the views of Congress, that the Philippine Legislature would be permitted to appropriate money to pay for the transportation of these Filipinos. The Philippine Legislature has never done that. They have never said they would provide the funds to transport these people. We have to go to all that expense and all that trouble in order to effectuate the purposes of this bill. If it is the consensus of opinion of the Membership, free of passion and prejudice, that we should do that and enter upon this work, with this great expense, I, for one, am perfectly willing to coincide and fall in with the rest, and I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

I wish to state to the chairman that if later today he can work a satisfactory arrangement with the Members on his side to provide for consideration of this bill I will withdraw my objection, providing the gentleman puts in the bill the amendment which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] insisted upon, and I think all objection from this side will be withdrawn.

I withdraw my reservation of objection to the bill under present conditions.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have two objections to this bill, which reduces the fee charged for naturalization papers and which also provides the amount that can be charged by attorneys who assist in securing citizenship papers for the alien.

First, I should like to know what the Department of Labor has to say about it? It is always the policy to have a report from the Department of Labor, and I do not find it in the report of the committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. To make sure we understand each other, what bill is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am talking about the bill before the House. The gentleman has a number of bills on the calendar, but my interest now is in the bill just reported by the Clerk.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Department of Labor approves it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Where is the letter from the Department of Labor? It should be in the committee report. That is the general policy in reporting bills of this character.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is in the file. I assure the gentleman the Department of Labor came before the committee and gave its approval. We have not printed it in the report. I want to practice economy as well as to preach it, and I do not propose to print hearings on every little bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. You could have used half of the fourth page of this report on which to have printed the letter from the Department of Labor. It would have cost nothing. No one asks that the hearings be in the report, but on a bill of this character the hearings should be on the floor and the Department letter in the report.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. There was no objection to the bill at the hearings.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; I have been so informed by the chairman. But I am talking about another matter. We are entitled to know what we are asked to vote for.

There is half a page here on page 4 on which the letter from the Department of Labor could have been printed. I do not question the chairman, but sometimes the letters say the Department is in favor of a bill if certain amendments are added. I think we have a new Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization since the hearings were held.

My second objection is to section 5 of the bill. I am not going to let the bill go through with section 5 in its present form. I see no reason in the world why a man should have to pay $25 to a lawyer to take out naturalization papers. What we should do is protect the aliens and see that no charge is made unless it is necessary for an attorney to appear in court on behalf of the petitioner.

Now, if you want to amend section 5 to provide that no fee shall be charged except where legal action before a court is required, I will withdraw my objection; but I am not going to let it go through in such shape that the lawyers of the country can shake an alien down for $25 to get his naturalization papers.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Section 5 limits the amount an attorney may charge for services rendered in connection with naturalization. The gentleman's suggestion of prohibiting any fee to be paid an attorney will, I fear, work harm to the aliens. From time to time some aliens seeking citizenship must of necessity avail themselves of the services of an attorney.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. When a man reaches the point where he cannot answer plain questions properly in court without the aid of an attorney he is not entitled to become a United States citizen. There are certain attorneys who prey upon these aliens. You seek to reduce the fee, taking money from the Government. This means they will have more to pay an attorney.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I can anticipate the gentleman's statement. Now, I come from a big city and I know how certain lawyers will prey upon aliens to get $25 out of them to prepare naturalization papers. The next thing you know we will have the Judiciary Committee of the House investigating lawyers who are charging aliens money to get their papers.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. LANZETTA. The gentleman knows that aliens at times have difficulty with the Department in respect of certain matters and certain information.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I wish the gentleman would state the certain matters and the certain information to which he refers.

Mr. LANZETTA. The services of an attorney are not required in the matter of answering questions before a court; and the gentleman knows it; but for the purpose of straightening out certain difficulties which the alien may be confronted with, at any time between his first application and his final admission to citizenship.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Just a moment. In my city there is a naturalization office in which there are clerks whose duty it is to fill out applications for the alien. All it requires to take out first papers, is to know the name of the boat the alien came over on. Is not that true?

Mr. LANZETTA. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Do you need a lawyer for that?

Mr. LANZETTA. At times it has been very difficult for the Department to find the names of these aliens on the registry. The services of an attorney are often required to to clear up such difficulties, and many others which may come up.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Unfortunately the law now does not prevent an attorney from charging an alien who seeks his naturalization papers. What we should do is to amend the law so as to prevent this type of lawyer from taking money from aliens when there is no necessity for it. If you really want to protect an alien why not do it in the proper way by enacting legislation that will prevent him from being shook down?

Mr. LANZETTA. We are not paving the way for anything. Attorneys are being paid today for doing this work. In this bill we try to limit the fee to $25.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, if you cut it out altogether you do not protect the alien but you leave it open and the attorney is not limited. No one should want an alien to pay a lawyer $25 for becoming a citizen of this country. It is not necessary. Further, it will result in undesirables making applications, depending upon their attorney to put it over.

Mr. LANZETTA. We cannot prevent an alien from employing an attorney. Any such law might work a hardship on many who require legal services.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; you can prevent him from employing if you provide no fee can be charged. Then the lawyer would not accept the case, because he would not be paid.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman realizes that under present law there is no limitation on the amount of fee an attorney may charge an alien for assisting him in procuring his naturalization. This amendment was offered by me in the committee with a view to restricting and limiting the fees being charged in some of the large cities of the country.

Evidence before our committee indicated very strongly that in a number of instances there were attorneys who were charging exorbitant fees to certain aliens in order to assist them in procuring their naturalization.

The purpose of this amendment is to limit the fees attorneys may charge. In the first amendment I offered the limitation was $10; but the members of the committee were of the opinion that $10 was too low; that there are cases in which the alien must have the aid of competent counsel to protect him and to defend him in the naturalization court; and for that reason the committee increased the limitation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The amendment reads $25 but it gives the court the power to grant a fee in excess of $25 in certain cases.

Mr. DIES. But now we have no limitation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let us so amend the law that unless the attorney goes before the court he gets nothing; then we will protect the alien, or limit the charge to $10. That will be a big improvement. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and I, I think, understand the situation and are in agreement as to the proper cure. He took what he could secure. I am trying to get more protection for the alien.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I do not believe the gentleman quite understands the purpose of this amendment, laudable as his intention is.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; I fully understand the purpose of it.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I believe the testimony in the committee showed that attorneys were charging as much as $500 and $1,000 for the services that we are going to limit to $25.

If it is necessary that we appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars for attorneys to serve the Government departments in handling legal questions, does not the gentleman think it is also possible that in the case of an alien a legal question may arise of such a nature and under such circumstances as to require the services of an attorney? We have gone just as far as we could to prevent chiseling and racketeering, remembering also that these men who are entitled to be citizens are today on the welfare roll because they have not $20 to take out citizenship papers. We are proposing in this bill to limit the amount that may be charged an alien by attorneys; and I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not stand in the way.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I believe if the gentleman will examine this bill carefully he will see it is for the protection of the alien. There are two kinds of service that are likely to be rendered.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I understand both of them. One is where the service is rendered in the office of the Bureau of Naturalization. The other is when the attorney must appear in court in behalf of his client.

Mr. CELLER. We have a provision in the immigration law which provides that no attorney assisting an alien can charge more than $25.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let us not cloud the issue with the immigration law. We all know that there is absolutely no comparison between the immigration law and the naturalization law. If you limit an attorney to $25 in an immigration case, you should limit him to $5 or less in a naturalization case.

Mr. CELLER. One is as important as the other. As to the court proceeding, it may be that a very intricate and cumbersome proceeding is involved. It may involve certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States. You could not limit the fee to be paid an attorney to $25 in a case so important as that. So that when there is a court proceeding you should allow a wider latitude and not put a limitation upon it. Where the alien needs some protection is in the Naturalization Bureau, and there $25 is the limitation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] that if he wants to accept an amendment which will provide that the charge for an immigration case will not exceed $10, I will not object to the bill. I am willing to leave it to the court as to the fee if it is necessary for the attorney to appear in court. Now, that is fair to both the attorney and the alien. Personally, if I thought I could get the House to agree, I would provide a penalty if any charge was made unless the lawyer appeared in court. I say again, there is absolutely no reason that can be advanced why an alien needs a lawyer to handle an ordinary naturalization case. The trouble is there are too many who make the alien believe that they can bring about his naturalization through influence. I do not say they have influence, but nevertheless they will make the alien feel it is necessary to employ him if he wants his papers.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman accept the amendment?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman give me the opportunity to explain something? If the gentleman will give me a chance to explain, I think I can explain it to him.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, pending the gentleman's statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the trouble in all of these matters is that I find people that can write a book about an alien who never saw an alien. I know people on the other hand that speak about naturalization who have never been in a naturalization court.

In 1929 under the old law the fee charged by the Government was $5 to become a citizen of the United States. In 1929 the administration thought there was a good chance to make more money from the alien, so they jammed through a bill jacking the naturalization fee up to $20. You even had to pay $10 for a certified copy of a document that cost about 10 cents. In other words, the Government has been making several million dollars profit on the aliens, in spite of the fact that we have had a very serious depression. These aliens, worthy people, men who are heads of families, could not become citizens because they could not possibly pay the required $20.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman this one question, and I am not going to object to the bill: Has the gentleman any report from the Department of Labor as to whether or not they favor this bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They do.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I did not get the remarks of the chairman, but, if I remember correctly, up until about 4 or 5 years ago, the fee was only about $5.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Five dollars.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And it was raised up to $20?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Twenty dollars. A charge of $10 for a certified copy of a certificate, and $5 for a certified copy of a declaration, and so forth.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman this: From the investigation made by the gentleman's committee, I take it you have a unanimous recommendation here that indicates your committee is in favor of the proposition?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The committee has gone into the matter extensively?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Absolutely. We are giving the Government a break; we are fixing it at $10. I will show you the effect upon fees by this bill.

	Prior to 1929	Present law	Under this bill
Certificate of arrival	(1)	$5.00	$2.50
Declaration of intention	$1.00	5.00	2.50
Certificate of citizenship	4.00	10.00	5.00
Total	5.00	20.00	10.00
Derivative certificate of citizenship	(2)	10.00	5.00
Duplicate of lost, destroyed—
Declaration		5.00	2.50
Certificate		10.00	5.00
Certificate to veteran of World War		10.00	(3)

[1] None. [2] No provision. [3] Free.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This fee will pay for all expenses?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not only pay all expenses, but it will leave a revenue in the hands of the Government of about $200,000 or $300,000 in connection with the charge of $10.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is it not true, as a matter of fact, that at the present time the Bureau reports something like $1,800,000 in profits?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. More than that.

Mr. ADAMS. If the gentleman will permit, I think the report shows about $1,900,000.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I call the attention of the House to section 5 that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is so much concerned about? We are very much interested in helping the alien who is here legally. We want to similate the alien with the American principles and the American doctrine. There are certain cases that were called to the attention of the committee in which they required some legal advice. Up to the present time there is nothing in the law that prevents a lawyer from charging $1,000 or up to $5,000. We thought we rendered a perfect service by adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], a member of the committee. In favoring that amendment and placing a deadline on fees for services that may be rendered by an attorney in a court proceeding we thought we were rendering a real service. If the gentleman will read that amendment that is exactly what it says.

I have no objection to striking that amendment all out. I am calling attention and appealing to your good judgment that by doing so you are leaving the door open. If you want to leave it open, I have no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I want to close the door.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman says he wants to close the door? If the gentleman had voted favorably on House Joint Resolution 50 to investigate smuggling—and the gentleman was one of those opposed to that resolution—the gentleman would have kept thousands of aliens from being smuggled into the country who are here today. The gentleman took a very active part in objecting to an appropriation of $2,000.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I took an active part in objecting to an appropriation of $2,000, not to keep aliens out of the country but to keep some Members from having a joy ride.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Look at the roll call on House Joint Resolution 50. The gentleman should read the newspapers of only a day or two ago in reference to the very thing I tried to do for this Government and this Congress a year ago. Partly through my instrumentality we have arrested at least a half dozen men on the border line of Canada, which includes a certain number of lawyers and chiselers.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I voted against the resolution and I spoke against the resolution, and I will take the responsibility for helping to beat the resolution. May I say to the gentleman that if he had such information he should have given it to the Department of Justice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman wants the truth——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Give it to the Department of Justice. I do not want it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman wants the truth, and the House is willing to listen to that tommyrot, may I say that our Department of Justice needs rejuvenation. [Applause.] Our Department of Justice is a tea-toy compared to that of the foreign governments, and I am going to present the evidence very soon when the Nazi resolution comes up. We cannot compete with these foreign spies, the foreign militia, and the foreign propaganda. We cannot compete with them. The whole of the Department of Justice has to be rebuilt. We have to have a Department of Justice that will keep spies out of this country, that will keep dope peddlers out of the country, and that will keep smuggling out of the country.

I just want to call your attention to an article that appeared in the New York Daily News of Sunday, February 4, 1934. Here it is:

UNITED STATES ALIEN QUIZ HITS LAWYERS FOR BEAUVAIS

A prominent Montreal attorney, who figured in the famous Stillman divorce, has been named to the Secret Service as the Canadian head of an international syndicate of smugglers, alien runners, and passport forgers which has operated for years with the aid of crooked customs and immigration officials on both sides of the border.

Evidence gathered by the picked company of Secret Service men marshaled by the President and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to end corruption in the Federal service indicates that the syndicate, which also has headquarters in New York, operated an underground railroad for the transportation of aliens and criminals across the border from St. John, New Brunswick, to Calais, Maine.

Forged birth certificates and passports, gem thefts, the smuggling of alien girls across the international line, indictments against United States Government officials and a New York lawyer which were dismissed for lack of evidence form other facets in the bizarre tangle of circumstances which the Secret Service is uncovering.

Other ramifications of the evidence point overseas, and to the possibility that American consular agents have betrayed their trust, for employees of the band have been able to travel freely on their forged passports wherever and whenever they pleased.

I could have done that a year ago, and I could have exposed this racket a year ago, but the restrictionists of this Congress refused to support a resolution to investigate smuggling from Cuba, from Mexico, and along the border line, and I have the record vote right over here.

The purpose of my investigation at that time was that there were certain witnesses who wanted to give me a statement as to who in this country were responsible for cooperation with foreign spies in the smuggling of dope and aliens and they did not want to give this to the Department of Justice. This is the answer to that question.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand the gentleman, the limit a lawyer may charge for services, no matter how great they may be, according to this bill, is the sum of $25?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is all; but if he goes into the higher courts or if his services are actually required and the court approves, only then can the court fix another fee, with the consent of the alien.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand, at the present time, a lawyer is permitted to charge any amount?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Any amount; yes. I have no objection to striking the amendment out if you want to strike it out. It is an amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. WELCH. What are the necessary qualifications for an alien to become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He has to be legally admitted in the first place; he has to produce a certificate of entry; he must have lived in the United States 5 years, and in the State where the application is made 1 year.

Mr. WELCH. That is all conceded.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; then he makes his application. There was a lot of difficulty for some people when they came to the country because they had a long name and some of the inspectors would shorten it for them by not using his regular name. If it was a long name he would shorten it and just write the short name. Then when the applicant goes to get his certificate of arrival he cannot find it because the inspector changed his name.

Mr. WELCH. The gentleman from New York is picking out isolated cases.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, I will give the gentleman a general case.

Mr. WELCH. Generally speaking, the necessary qualifications are that a person must be of good moral character and have a knowledge of our Government and its institutions.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They have to have such knowledge.

Mr. WELCH. Why should not a school-teacher be preferable to a lawyer?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We simply say in section 5 that if a lawyer is in the picture or is necessary for the purpose of helping out the alien in a legal way, all he can charge is $25.

Mr. WELCH. As a general rule, what legal questions arise or what legal services are necessary with respect to an application for citizenship?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The hearings on this measure were quite extensive, and the amendment which appears as section 5 was proposed by all the social service organizations of this country and of all religious denominations. There is not a community that does not want this bill, and they have recommended that there should be a deadline with regard to legal fees.

Mr. WELCH. In my city of San Francisco they have night schools where aliens are trained for citizenship.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We do that now; yes.

Mr. WELCH. This is the first time in my experience I have ever heard of the services of an attorney being necessary except in an isolated case.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman and I am in full sympathy with that position.

Mr. WELCH. The very fact you provide a fixed sum by law will create the impression that it is necessary in all cases that an applicant for citizenship shall retain a lawyer.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; it does not read that way at all.

Mr. WELCH. Therein lies the danger, it seems to me.

Mr. CROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. CROWE. Was it not the purpose and intent of this amendment not to declare that an attorney is necessary, but to take care of the cases where a shyster lawyer, we might say, did enter the picture and was getting a large sum of money from the applicant?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman agree to striking out the first $25 and inserting $10?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Strike it all out, if you want to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If you want to do something for the aliens, why not agree to that, as it will protect them? Now any charge can be made. This limits the amount to $10.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will do that.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROTECTION OF CERTAIN ALIENS ON AMERICAN VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 1497, a bill to repeal certain laws providing that certain aliens who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States shall be considered citizens for the purposes of service and protection on American vessels.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision "eighth" of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States", as amended by section 1 of the act entitled "An act to amend the naturalization laws and to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and other laws relating to naturalization, and for other purposes", approved May 9, 1918 (U.S.C., title 8, sec. 376), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 90 days after its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING POSTMASTER GENERAL TO HIRE VEHICLES FROM POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4224) to authorize the Postmaster General to hire vehicles from postal employees.

The Clerk read the bill.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 52 of title 39 of the United States Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"No postmaster, assistant postmaster, or clerk employed in any post office shall be a contractor or concerned in any contract for carrying the mail."

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and the words "in any contract for carrying the mail" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Postmaster General to hire vehicles from village delivery carriers', approved June 18, 1930 (46 Stat. 782; U.S.C., Supp. VI, title 39, sec. 52), is hereby amended to read as follows:"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

I notice that there is nothing in the report that shows whether the present Postmaster General has made any statement in regard to it.

Mr. MEAD. The bill was sent to us at the beginning of the session in a batch of bills that came from the Postmaster General with his recommendations.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought if it was a bill that came up under the former Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, someone should find out what the present Postmaster General thinks about it.

Mr. MEAD. It was recommended by the Postmaster General in 1933, but the present Postmaster General is in favor of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the bill cover contracts where the contract was abrogated and the carriers do not know whether they are to pay for it or not?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; it does cover that.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING BENEFITS OF A RECORD REGISTRY UNDER ACT OF MARCH 2, 1929, TO ALIENS WHO ARRIVED PRIOR TO JULY 1924

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H.R. 3522) to extend benefits of a record of registry under the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512), to aliens who arrived prior to July 1924, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT OR NEAR SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H.R. 6370) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr., authorized by section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, is hereby extended 1 year from June 10, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Amend the bill as follows: Page 1, line 6, after the date "June 10, 1930", insert the following words: "heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931"; page 1, line 6, after the word "hereby", insert the word "further."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LAWRENCE RIVER NEAR ALEXANDRIA BAY, N.Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6492, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CULKIN. Reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman from Washington it is rather important from the standpoint of labor and employment in that locality that speedy action be taken on this bill. This is not only a community proposition but it is a bill for which authority has been had from the Legislature of the State of New York. A commission has been appointed by the Governor, and this measure has the approval of all the State and local authorities. I cannot understand what conceivable objection there can be to it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The only conceivable objection is—I have no personal objection, but I should like to get a report from the Department of Agriculture as it is now constituted.

Mr. CULKIN. There is a report from the Department of Agriculture in the report of the committee. I am very familiar with it. I fought this out with the Department of Agriculture, and they have reported favorably on this bill on at least two occasions.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman will read the report, there is a report from the Department of Agriculture in the present administration.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have not seen that report. I ask that this be passed over without prejudice until I can see that report.

Mr. CULKIN. Well, the communication is in the committee report. I assume the gentleman will take his colleague's word for that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The letter is in the report.

Mr. CULKIN. I will read it to the gentleman.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CULKIN. Well, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would listen to me while I read this report to him from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Who signed the report?

Mr. CULKIN. The report is signed by C. F. Marvin, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is true.

Mr. CULKIN. Just a moment. Let us be fair about this. This proposition involves a great number of working people in my district. It involves public convenience. It is sanctioned by the Legislature of the State of New York and the county of Jefferson and every public body conceivably involved. The report dated January 13, 1934, states that the bill has the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. May I ask if this bill is passed today would this bridge be started next week?

Mr. CULKIN. It involves the proposition of a loan from the P.W.A. That is what makes speed necessary.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, its situation is more or less precarious, as its funds are vanishing. I have answered the objection of the gentleman, showing that it has the approval of the Department of Agriculture. Has the gentleman any further objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Only that it has not the approval of the present administration in the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Marvin was a member of the previous administration.

Mr. CULKIN. He must be in the present administration, because the report is dated January 13, 1934.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. May I say to the gentleman that Mr. Marvin has never objected to anything.

Mr. CULKIN. He has authority to speak for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for regular order.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

There was no objection.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER BETWEEN EASTON, PA., AND PHILLIPSBURG, N.J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6794, authorizing the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N.J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR WELDON SPRING, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6799, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Weldon Spring, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER of California. Reserving the right to object, I should like some information relative to this bill if there is anyone here who can give it.

I should like to know whether or not this is a toll bridge.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think there has been objection to the bill to which the gentleman is referring. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA] objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LANZETTA. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARTER of California. Is there anyone here who can give me any information with reference to this bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is a toll bridge. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, 7 years ago I started the fight in this House on toll bridges, private toll bridges, but there has never been any objection in this House from either side with reference to a toll bridge constructed by a municipality or a State. Whenever a municipality or a State desires to build a toll bridge, that means work for the people. For 7 years I have stopped bills where private people have desired to construct toll bridges. I have no interest in any bill on the calendar. I simply rise to make that statement. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, the people near the large rivers, especially on the international border, cannot have any transportation of this sort unless it is done by a toll bridge, is that not true?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have no objection to the bill. I object to the construction of private toll bridges by private individuals and always have.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The gentleman from Missouri does not object to public toll bridges?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No, sir. I am not objecting where a State or municipality is attempting to build one, because it will in the end become a free bridge but not so when private individuals construct a toll bridge.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I am wondering if the gentleman would object to a racketeering fee of $10,000 being paid certain lawyers for drawing up these contracts?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Indeed, I would object, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. CARTER of California. Can the gentleman tell me whether this is a toll bridge?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not object to a toll bridge if a State or municipality is building the toll bridge. I do not have the bill before me. If it is to be built by a private individual, I do object.

Mr. CARTER of California. I assume exactly the same attitude. I am trying to find out whether it is a toll bridge fostered by a State.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Some of the States and some of the municipalities have toll bridges. For instance, Louisville has one of the largest toll bridges in the country, and I understand it is paying.

Mr. CARTER of California. What about this one?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. New York has a toll bridge. I do not have the bill before me.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS DES MOINES RIVER AT ST. FRANCISVILLE, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6909, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my request to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. ROMJUE. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, this is not a toll bridge. In the second place, a bill was passed by the House and the Senate to provide for the construction of this bridge a few years ago, but in raising money to construct it, it was found that there was some illegality about the issue of the bonds of one of the counties involved. Since that time all this difficulty has been cleared up. I think Congress should let the people build this bridge.

Mr. MILLARD. It is not a toll bridge?

Mr. ROMJUE. It is not a toll bridge.

Mr. MILLARD. Is it a bridge built by two municipalities?

Mr. ROMJUE. It is a bridge built by the people of several counties.

Mr. MILLARD. Is any Federal money involved?

Mr. ROMJUE. Not at all in the way of any appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo., authorized to be built by Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, by an act of Congress approved February 14, 1933, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 14, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LAWRENCE RIVER AT ALEXANDRIA BAY, N.Y.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 46, H.R. 6492, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y., authorized to be built by the New York Development Association, Inc., a corporation organized under and by virtue of the membership corporation law of the State of New York, its successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1929, and heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 13, 1931, and further heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved April 15, 1932, and heretofore further extended by an act of Congress approved February 14, 1933, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from March 4, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT HANNIBAL, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7291, authorizing the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Hannibal, Marion County, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Hannibal, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Missouri, the State of Illinois, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 5 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages of compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 percent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Missouri and Illinois a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within 3 years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER AT TRENTON, N.J.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2029, to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River near Trenton, N.J.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the author of the bill desire to make a report on this matter?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator KEAN. It has passed the Senate. A similar bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FREY], who is sitting near the gentleman from Indiana, and who represents the district where the bridge is to be located.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I notice from the report that authority to build the bridge has been granted since 1912, but they do not appear to have done anything. Are we just granting them an exclusive right in perpetuity against anybody else to build a bridge at this point?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think if the gentleman will read the report he will understand the situation.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I have read the report.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Then the gentleman must have observed that over $2,000,000 has already been spent on this enterprise. It is part of a railroad construction project which up to the present time has been delayed because of conditions. The road is now being improved, and as soon as conditions permit, I assume construction of this bridge will be resumed.

Mr. GRISWOLD. As I understand the report they first acquired the right to build the bridge in 1912, prior to the World War. They also acquired some land, spending some money for it; but since that time they have not spent anything or made any progress and they have not started the bridge.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Of course, the gentleman will understand that since 1912 there has intervened a depression, then the World War, and then there was a Federal administration of railroads. These conditions, to a large extent, have accounted for the delay since that time. It is part of a construction project that has met with the approval of the different governmental departments having jurisdiction in the matter. It will undoubtedly be helpful in promoting better traffic conditions on that very important part of the Pennsylvania Railroad system.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Can the gentleman tell me the amount at which the company now carries this right—that is, the value at which they carry it for rate-making purposes in relation to what they have actually expended?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I cannot answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PRISON INDUSTRIES BOARD

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 6974, to provide for the regulation of prison industry and the appointment of a prison industrial board, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if this is the prison board that was discussed the other day when we had under consideration a particular appropriation bill?

Mr. TARVER. This is a bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously, and it has the consent, so far as I know, of manufacturers, of labor, and the approval, I am informed, of the President himself. This provides for the settling of this troublesome question of prison labor, with a view to reducing prison competition with private industry.

The first bill during this Congress on the subject was reported almost a year ago and is substantially the same as this, and, so far as I know or so far as the committee has been advised, no objection has ever been raised by any Member of Congress or by anybody else to the provisions of this bill, which provides for the creation of a commission that will serve without pay, and upon which there shall be representatives of labor, agriculture, manufacturers, vocational education, and of the general public interests, with the Director of the Budget and the Attorney General as ex-officio members, and which board shall have supervision over the question of prison industry. This board is directed to carry out the provisions of the act of May 27, 1930, which provided for the diminution of prison competition with free industry and for the diversification of prison industry with that end in view.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. According to the report of the committee on this particular bill, it would seem to me that this is a very important board we are creating. There is nothing in here about the attitude of labor toward a board of this kind, or the attitude of industry in general toward a board of this kind.

Mr. TARVER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The report does contain a statement relative to the attitude of labor and regarding the attitude of industry.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It contains a statement of the committee, but not of the people who may be affected one way or the other, of this board.

Mr. TARVER. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the act of May 27, 1930, which this bill proposes to make effective, was passed after hearing labor and representatives of labor, and with their full approval. This proposal, as I stated a while ago, has been pending for almost a year and the proposal has never attracted the opposition of any individual, so far as I am informed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think this is too important a bill to consider under unanimous consent, and I object.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I reserve my objection for a moment.

Mr. TARVER. May I state that the chairman of the committee has just been called to the telephone in order that he may confer with the President regarding this bill, the President himself having expressed a deep interest in it. I ask that the bill be temporarily passed without prejudice and with the object of asking that it be called up again after the chairman has returned.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a minute?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will withhold it, but I am going to object to considering it on the unanimous-consent calendar.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER BETWEEN EASTON, PA., AND PHILLIPSBURG, N.J.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we turn back to no. 47, a bill that was passed without prejudice, for the reason that the committee was under the impression that there had not been a favorable report from the Department of Agriculture on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Delaware River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N.J., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operations of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRISON INDUSTRIES BOARD

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 3 minutes in order to make a statement with regard to the Tarver bill, which was just objected to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a very brief statement with regard to the Tarver bill which has just been objected to. I do it for the purpose of inviting you to give attention to the measure between this time and the time when we hope to have the bill again before you.

The bill deals with one of the most troublesome things that the Committee on the Judiciary has to do with, and that is what is to be done with the prison-labor population. Always the difficulty in this sort of legislation of giving the people who are in the penitentiaries something to do and at the same time not transgress too much upon the territory of free labor presents a very serious question. Everybody, I believe, who understands anything about trying to rehabilitate these prisoners realizes it is essential to give them some sort of employment. After a long time, confronted with much difficulty, the Tarver bill has been evolved, which, in the judgment of the committee, is perhaps the best possible arrangement.

The President just called me by telephone a moment ago and said he hoped the Tarver bill could be enacted. So this brings the judgment of the people in interest, the judgment of the Judiciary Committee, that has first responsibility, and the judgment of the Executive, that has the executive responsibility, in harmony.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. How does the gentleman harmonize the implied purport of the bill—that it is to prevent competition with private free labor on the outside—with the statement in the report that it is necessary to broaden the field of occupation and carry on existing prison industries on a larger scale than now permitted? How are we going to carry on larger occupations and broaden the field of occupation without competing with free labor?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course, you can broaden the field of operation without increasing the competition, do more different things—but if you consider that broadening the field of operation broadens the field of competition——

Mr. PETTENGILL. That does not mean anything to me.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, no; you cannot do it. We might just as well be sensible about it. If these men in the penitentiary are to do anything, they have to do something which somebody on the outside of the penitentiary could do. There is no use being foolish about it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Then I favor the free man on the outside.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But the point is that in attempting to do that which would help to rehabilitate the men on the inside you work out a plan that least interferes with the man on the outside.

The men who belong to organized labor are not inhumane people. They are not unpatriotic people. They are just as good people as you are and as I am, and just as sensible people. They want something done for the rehabilitation of the men in the penitentiaries just as much as anybody in this Congress or anywhere else and, carrying out the spirit of their patriotism, while wanting to protect their interests, they are in agreement with this plan, so I am advised. Naturally, they want just as little conflict with their interests as they can have, and so do I.

This is not what I would like to have; it is not what my friend here would like to have; but, as I understand, all the people having an interest in the matter finally got together and agreed they would work out the plan of this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 more minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get in the way of the other bills.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

JAMES A. LOWELL, DECEASED

The Clerk read the next business on the Consent Calendar, House Resolution 226, as follows:

House Resolution 226

Resolved, That no further proceedings be had under H.Res. 120, agreed to April 26, 1933, providing for an investigation of the official conduct of James A. Lowell, United States district judge for the district of Massachusetts, and that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged.

Mr. LUCE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and so doing wholly for the purpose of making a statement and a request, I would say that this is the formal conclusion of proceedings begun at the last session for impeachment of Judge James A. Lowell, who, according to the report accompanying the resolution, died on the 31st of last November.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. May I make the correction that there was no 31st of November?

Mr. LUCE. The 30th of November, I have no doubt the report should have read.

The public at large does not understand the significance of a proposal on this floor to impeach an officer of the Government. Many assume that of itself such a proposal indicates some misfeasance or guilt, while we, of course, here know that not anything of the sort is necessarily to be inferred. To permit the formal conclusion of the proceedings to go without any explanation inevitably leaves on the memory of a man a shadow that may grieve his friends, his family, and his descendants. The gathering at the funeral of Judge Lowell, a large concourse, included many of the leading members of the bar and other distinguished citizens, who, by their presence, attested their confidence in Judge Lowell, their admiration for his life, and their grief at his passing.

I feel sure that the chairman of the subcommittee who visited Boston in order to make preliminary inquiries will be glad to state the conclusions reached by the subcommittee so that the record of an honorable man, a highminded man, a righteous man shall not be in any way blurred or stained by lack of a statement of the facts. I ask that the chairman of the subcommittee inform the House on this matter.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PERKINS] and I went to Boston to make a preliminary inquiry in regard to the charges against Judge Lowell.

We first contacted all Members of Congress we could reach who lived in that region, and then made inquiries of members of the bar, a considerable part of the bar. We spent 4 days in that work. We interviewed all the newspaper representatives, and I think it would be only fair to say that we did not find among the bar or the Members of Congress or the newspaper men anyone who did not have implicit confidence in Judge Lowell. They felt, as the subcommittee did, that the judge did some erratic things. He was a peculiar individual, as was reflected in some of the positions he took, but they were entirely typical of the man, as we learned, but in all he was thought to be honest.

He made mistakes in some decisions, as was shown by the decisions of the appellate court. But Mr. PERKINS and I came to the conclusion that there was nothing in what we found that would justify a formal hearing by the subcommittee. As far as I am personally concerned, I came to the conclusion that Judge Lowell was incapable of entertaining a dishonest impulse. [Applause.]

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARE AND TRANSPORTATION OF SEAMEN FROM SHIPWRECKED FISHING AND WHALING VESSELS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H.R. 7205) to provide for the care and transportation of seamen from shipwrecked fishing and whaling vessels.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 (relating to the care and transportation of shipwrecked merchant seamen) of the act approved December 21, 1898 (U.S.C., title 46, sec. 593), entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce" shall apply to fishing and whaling vessels, notwithstanding the provisions of section 26 of such act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF WAR TO SELL TRACT OF LAND TO THE PLATTSBURGH NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO.

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H.R. 93) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co. a tract of land comprising part of the Plattsburgh Barracks Military Reservation, N.Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will object unless an amendment is adopted. The bill authorizes the sale to the Plattsburgh National Bank and no one else. There is to be no competitive bids—the War Department is required to sell to one concern.

Mr. SNELL. There is no one else that would bid for the land, but if the gentleman thinks that such an amendment would protect the Government I would be willing to consent to it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is a matter of policy that there should be competitive bidding.

Mr. SNELL. Let the gentleman write out the amendment and I have no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The bill requires a sale to the Plattsburgh National Bank and to no one else.

Mr. SNELL. I do not see the advantage in the gentleman's amendment, but I will consent that he may put it in. That is a very small piece of land. The actual value of it is not 15 cents. It is the extreme end of the military reservation. As a matter of fact, that part of the land is separate from the reservation itself, and it is a little piece of land on the foot of a little slope.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will let me interrupt for a moment, even if it was only worth 15 cents and it was being given to a bank, I would object to it.

Mr. SNELL. Now, the gentleman understands that this street railway property is in the hands of a receiver. They are trying to get what money they can to pay the creditors of the corporation. That is all. The Plattsburgh National Bank seems to be the organization handling the receivership for the railroad. It does not go to the bank. It goes to the creditors of the company.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I thought there might be a hamburger joint that might want to buy the place.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know where they would sell hamburgers up in that country. If the gentleman will prepare his amendment, I am willing to have it put on the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will prepare the amendment——

Mr. SNELL. Oh, I do not want the amendment. If the gentleman has an amendment to offer, he should offer it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Just to strike out the Plattsburg National Bank.

Mr. SNELL. Those are the people who want the land.

Mr. MILLARD. Has the gentleman read the bill, which provides that the Secretary of War shall have the said tract appraised at the expense of the Plattsburg National Bank & Trust Co.?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SNELL. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to have the gentleman put his amendment in. It encumbers the bill and it is not so good as it was before, but if he desires the amendment to go in I have no objection to it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will offer his amendment, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. SNELL. In line 5, strike out, after the comma, down to and after the comma in line 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When we reach that point after the bill has been reported, the gentleman can offer his amendment.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell upon such terms and conditions as he considers advisable, to the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co., of Plattsburgh, N.Y., or its nominee, a tract of land containing approximately one half acre, comprising a part of the Plattsburgh Barracks Military Reservation, N.Y., and situated in the northwest corner thereof, which said tract is no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf, with and to the said Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co. any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale; the proceeds of the sale of the property hereinbefore designated to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the fund known as the "military post construction fund": Provided, That the Secretary of War shall have the said tract appraised at the expense of the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co.: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall not sell said tract of land for a less consideration than the appraised value thereof.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 1, line 5, after the word "advisable" strike out the comma and the words "to the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co. of Plattsburgh, N.Y., or its nominee"; and on page 2, in line 3, after the word "behalf", strike out "with and to the said Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co."; and on page 2, line 10, strike out the words "at the expense of the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXEMPTION OF PARENTS OF CITIZENS OF UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3519, to exempt from the quota parents of citizens of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

AMENDING SECTION 23 OF IMMIGRATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3524, to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874).

Mr. GRISWOLD. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object if the gentleman is willing to accept an amendment on page 2, line 2, to insert—

Provided, That any alien removed under this act to his native country shall not be permitted to return to the United States unless he reimburse the Government for expenses incident to his removal.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Now, this is a bill that was requested by the Department of Labor. If the gentleman is acquainted with section 23 of the act of 1917—and I doubt very much whether he is unless he has refreshed his memory—that section provides that an alien who has entered the country legally, finds himself stranded, who desires to return to his native country, may be sent out by the Department of Labor within 3 years after his entry. That is the present law. This simply advances that time from 3 years to 5 years; so it does not make any difference what amendment you put on there, because once he goes back as a pauper he cannot return, because he is already adjudged a pauper, and he cannot come back, because he is likely to become a public charge. Now, the Department of Labor wants this. If the gentleman wants something else, I do not know what it is. The amendment would be inconsistent with the policy of both the Department and the committee.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I cannot see where the amendment is inconsistent. I do not know what the provisions of the present law are. The Chairman may know, regarding the financial status of these people who come here, but it seems that every time we call the Private Calendar we are called upon to appropriate a few million dollars to deport them. I think there should be some provision made in every act that we pass, whether it is on this Consent Calendar or anywhere else, to keep these people from continually coming here and we provide the money to deport them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, we are providing for nothing. There is no appropriation here. There is no expenditure here. I will just refer my friend from Indiana to the following part of section 23 of the act of 1917. Please notice this:

SEC. 23. That the Commissioner General of Immigration shall perform all his duties under the direction of the Secretary of Labor. Under such direction he shall have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder; he shall establish such rules and regulations, prescribe such forms of bond, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contract for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid, and to remove to their native country, at any time within 3 years after entry, at the expense of the appropriations for the enforcement of this act, such as fall into distress or need public aid from causes arising subsequent to their entry and are desirous of being so removed; * * *— shall have authority to enter into contract for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress and need public aid, and to remove to their native country, at any time within 3 years after entry, at the expense of the appropriations for the enforcement of this act, such as fall into distress or need public aid from causes arising subsequent to their entry and are desirous of being so removed; * * *.

You will notice that this existing law states that the Commissioner General of Immigration—

You understand there is no smuggling or illegal entry connected with this bill. A man, within 3 years after his entry, may apply to the Secretary of Labor for permission to depart at Government expense. That is the present law and the appropriations for the Department provide for it. Now the Department of Labor wants to extend the time from 3 years to 5 years. What objection is there to that; and how will the gentleman's amendment aid what we are trying to do?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It appears from the report of the committee that it will cost $90 for each one of these men deported.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is exactly what it is costing now. We are simply extending the statute of limitations from 3 years to 5 years.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not see how the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] would afford an additional protection. If anything, it would set a precedent to these people who went back.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that one cannot sit here and legislate regulations by the Department. We legislate laws; we do not legislate regulations. The Department of Labor is not writing the laws for immigration in this country; Congress is doing that.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They, however, write the regulations under the laws we pass. So we want to pass laws in such a way that in writing the regulations they will have to stick to the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. If the gentleman now wishes to object, he is perfectly welcome to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATIVE TO CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3673, to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make a brief statement on this particular bill.

Be it understood that the substance of this bill was incorporated as an amendment to legislation which passed the Senate at the last session.

The bill seeks to do nothing more in its four provisions than to equalize the status between men and women so far as their capacity to transmit citizenship to children who are born outside the country is concerned.

We have this most anomalous situation: We provide equality of opportunity, privilege, and benefit for the seven very capable and intelligent ladies who are Members of this body in just the same proportion as those benefits and privileges are shared by the male Members of this body, yet the mother of a child that is born outside of the United States cannot transmit citizenship to that child, whereas the father can. A father at the present time can expatriate himself under the law. An American mother, however, cannot.

Now, it is a peculiar kind of inequality that amounts to a paradox in our citizenship and naturalization laws; and, manifestly, if we permit men and women to sit in legislatures, on school boards, in the House of Representatives, and in the Senate of the United States on terms of equality, is there any reason why this body should withhold from women the right to transmit citizenship, to expatriate themselves, and to give to their offspring all the benefits that they might at the present time derive from the father?

It adds nothing to an aggravated immigration or naturalization condition. It simply equalizes the status of men and women who are native-born or who enjoy citizenship in this country.

Having made this statement, if my good friend the gentleman from Ohio still insists upon his objection, it will be quite all right, but I do want the Membership to have a definite concept of the purport and object of this measure.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Without any disrespect to the gentleman, I still insist on my request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] probably went over the head of somebody. This is a rather intelligent bill outside of the fact that it bears my name.

I would have no objection to the gentleman's request if anything could be accomplished by it; but from the practices certain gentlemen have indulged in before, this is the only motion they know how to make—let it go over without prejudice; and that is the end of it; it is just another week, another week, but time slips by and nothing is done. If the gentleman is against it, why does he not object? Then we will know how to conduct ourselves in shaping legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from New York knows my attitude well enough to know that I have always been able to say "no" when I want to say no with reference to a bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio if there is any hope for this bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I made the request that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and I insist upon my request.

Mr. KRAMER. Does the gentleman know how to say no and mean it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In order to make some progress on this bill, Mr. Speaker, I object, because it will take three objections next time to prevent its consideration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute with respect to this same bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I wish to make this additional observation: Under the leadership of Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State, an international conference was held at Montevideo in South America. It appears that all of the countries in the Western Hemisphere with the exception of the United States of America have conferred an equal status upon women in conformity with the substance of this bill.

The United States happens to be the only country that has withheld this right of equal capacity to transmit citizenship.

GRANTING ABANDONED BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS AT SITKA, ALASKA, TO THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5745, granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following described public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, are granted to the Territory of Alaska, to be used by the said Territory as a home for aged, sick, and infirm pioneers and residents thereof at the expense of the Territory, to wit: A tract of land described hereafter by metes and bounds:

Beginning at a point common to corners no. 2, United States Forest Service reserve, and no. 3, United States reserve for public common; thence north 61°19′ east, 367.34 feet along north side of Lincoln Street to corner no. 3, United States reserve for public buildings; thence north 28°40′ west, 222.63 feet along west side of Barracks Street to corner no. 6, United States marine and military reserve; thence north 61°12′ east, 50.72 feet along north side of Barracks Street to corner no. 5, United States marine and military reserve; thence north 22°50′ west, 87.67 feet along west side of Barracks Street to corner no. 4, United States marine and military reserve, set on south side of Seward Street; thence south 68°33′ west, 164.04 feet along south side of Seward Street to a point common to corners no. 3, United States marine and military reserve, and no. 1, survey no. 407; thence south 29°10′ east, 64.11 feet along east boundary of survey no. 407 to a point common to corners no. 2, United States marine and military reserve, and no. 4, survey no. 407; thence south 58°19′ west, 70.37 feet along south boundary of survey no. 407 to a point common to corners no. 1, United States marine and military reserve, and no. 3, survey no. 407; thence north 41°8′ west, 25.84 feet along west boundary of survey no. 407 to the south boundary of the tract of land reserved for school purposes by Executive Order No. 4448, dated May 27, 1926; thence south 58°19′ west 121 feet along south boundary of tract of land reserved for school purposes to southwest corner of said tract; thence north 42°30′ west 108 feet along west boundary of tract of land reserved for school purposes to northwest corner of said tract; thence south 35° west 57.28 feet along north boundary of United States reserve for public common to corner no. 6 and meander corner, United States reserve for public common, on shore of Sitka Bay; thence with meanders along shore of Sitka Bay south 37°19′ east 57.09 feet, south 20°23′ west 43.43 feet, south 82°56′ west 31.56 feet, south 70°7′ west 29 feet, south 15°51′ east 19.37 feet, south 2°51′ east 36.17 feet, south 76°51′ east 14.59 feet to corner no. 5 and meander corner on the line between United States Forest Service reserve and United States reserve for public common; thence north 60° east 132.44 feet along north boundary of United States Forest Service reserve to a point common to corners no. 1, United States Forest Service reserve, and no. 4, United States reserve for public common; thence south 20°49′ east 237.66 feet along east boundary of United States Forest Service reserve to the point of beginning; containing 2.769 acres, and the buildings thereon.

SEC. 2. That the Territory of Alaska shall never sell or otherwise dispose of any part of said property; and if the same shall ever be abandoned for the uses herein declared the said premises shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "and sixty-seven."

On page 4, line 21, insert, after the word "thereon", the following language: "Provided, That all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, be reserved to the United States under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND BY THE UNITED STATES TO THE CITY OF NOME, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6173, to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the City of Nome, Alaska, and certain land situated therein.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the committee report shows an amendment that does not appear in the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct. The amendment was inadvertently overlooked in the printing of the bill, but I have the amendment ready to offer, making the same proviso as in the preceding bill, in reference to the rights of the United States.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Nome, Alaska, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lot 2, block 50, according to the official plat of the town site of Nome, on file in the office of the recorder of the Cape Nome mining and recording precinct, Territory of Alaska, for street purposes. Such conveyance shall contain the express condition that if said city of Nome, Alaska, shall at any time cease to use such lot for such purpose or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such lot, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the words "Attorney General" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "official."

On page 1, line 7, after the word "Nome", strike out "on file in the office of the recorder of the Cape Nome mining and recording precinct, Territory of Alaska, for street purposes" and insert "approved on April 13, 1905, by Porter J. Coston, town-site trustee, and now on file in the General Land Office."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: Page 2, line 5, after the words "United States", insert a colon in lieu of the period and insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same be reserved to the United States under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE TRANSACTIONS IN COTTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1517, to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON, Mr. FOSS, Mr. GOSS, and Mr. ZIONCHECK objected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments and ordered printed:

To The Congress:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1933 (ch. 212, 47 Stat. 1489, 1517), as amended by Title III of the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 8, 16), I am transmitting herewith an Executive order revoking section 18 of Executive Order No. 6166, of June 10, 1933, heretofore transmitted to the Congress, the purpose of which was to abolish in part the functions of:

Cooperative vocational education and rehabilitation.

Payments for agricultural experiment stations.

Cooperative agricultural extension work.

Endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 6, 1934.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. MCCARTHY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. FITZPATRICK, indefinitely, on account of the death of his brother.

AMENDMENT OF PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES ACT

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration out of order of the bill (H.R. 6525) to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be a very important bill, consisting of 14 pages. Should we consider it under the unanimous consent agreement?

Mr. BUCK. It is a most important bill, I will say to the gentleman. It is a bill resulting from suggestions made to the Committee on Agriculture last spring by the Secretary of Agriculture, with the idea of correcting certain definite weaknesses in the Perishable Commodities Act which have developed in its operation.

The Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act was passed by the House and Senate and signed by the President in February 1930. It has, therefore, been in effect about 4 years.

The act requires the licenses of commission merchants, dealers, and brokers handling fresh fruits and vegetables in car-lot quantities in interstate and foreign commerce. It requires such dealers to obtain licenses from the Secretary of Agriculture, for which an annual fee of $10 is charged. For violations of the act the Secretary may suspend the licenses of offenders or revoke licenses for flagrant violations. While the act has had a wholesome influence in the wholesale marketing of perishables, during this time a number of loopholes have been discovered and it is the purpose of this bill, which has been drafted by the Department of Agriculture in connection with myself, to close up these loopholes. The bill has been submitted to all of the cooperative and independent organizations and associations of growers and shippers engaged in the perishable marketing industry in the United States, whose names appear in the hearings on the original act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Have the commission merchants been given an opportunity to be heard with respect to this bill?

Mr. BUCK. The National League of Commission Merchants has been given an opportunity to be heard, and the measure has been endorsed by the Florida Citrus Union, the American Fruit and Vegetable Shippers Association, the Western Vegetable Growers Protective Association, the American Cranberry Exchange, the California Fruit Exchange, and various other growers' organizations. It has a unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture and the endorsement of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics as well as the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. This bill was first submitted to a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and was agreed to by every member of the subcommittee. It was then considered by the whole committee and unanimously endorsed by the committee, was it not?

Mr. BUCK. That is correct.

Mr. GLOVER. I think the gentleman's bill is well worked out and a wonderful improvement on what we have now.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does the bill give the Secretary additional power?

Mr. BUCK. The chief changes are these: When the Secretary of Agriculture now issues a reparation award against an unscrupulous receiver or consignee of perishable goods he has no power to enforce the award. It devolves upon the complainant to enforce the award through a suit in court, the Secretary's order being merely prima facie evidence in such proceedings. This bill provides either party may take the matter to court and make clear the manner in which the person against whom an order has been issued may protect himself. It further provides that in the event that the reparation award is neither paid, nor is the matter taken to court within 5 days of the expiration of the period allowed for compliance with the Secretary's order, the license of the respondent shall be automatically suspended until he shows that the amount specified by the Secretary's order has been paid. These amendments correct the weakest point of the present act, and one that has been the subject of most complaints from members of the trade.

The bill also makes it possible for the Secretary, in issuing licenses, to take cognizance of previous offenses and to refuse a license if the applicant has, either individually or in connection with a partnership or corporation, been guilty of violations of the act at any time within 2 years previously. It further makes it possible for the Secretary to withdraw a license which has been obtained through false or misleading statements or misrepresentation.

It corrects two matters which were not intended to become law by the original framers of the bill, but which have been construed to be the law as the act now stands. In doing so, it exempts from the definition from the term "dealer" canners and processors buying only raw products within the State where canned or processed. It makes the inspection certificates issued by the Department, which are prima facie evidence in United States courts, also prima facie evidence in proceedings under the act. It also provides that when a complainant has brought suit to collect a reparation award in the United States district court the process may run throughout the United States, so that it will not be necessary for the complainant to follow the unscrupulous rejector of his goods to the point of delivery.

Mr. Speaker, perishable commodities are not made basic commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and the producers thereof are not asking that they be made such. They do ask, however, that this bill be passed so that they may be given the assurance of the support and protection of the Department of Agriculture of the United States Government. No producers of any form of agriculture are more subject to victimizing than are those men who produce the fruits and vegetables that must be marketed almost instantly or they perish. With my personal knowledge and experience in the production of fruits, I would be the last man in the world to condemn the commission merchants of the United States as a class. I was their guest at their banquet at their recent convention here. Many of them are my friends, and most, if not all, of them are known to me by name and reputation. Those who are honest, scrupulous in their dealings with the producers are, I am satisfied, in favor of this bill, and it will redown to the credit of this Congress, which is doing so much to protect all forms of agriculture, to take affirmative action and strengthen the hands of the Department in dealing with those who are dishonest, unscrupulous, and victimizers of the producers of perishable commodities, who can look only to the strong arm of the Government of the United States to protect them.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With the gentleman's assurance that the commission merchants have not objected to this bill and have had an opportunity to be heard, I withdraw my reservation of objection. I might add, however, that such bills as this should not be on the Consent Calendar, in my opinion.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930, be, and hereby is, amended as hereinafter set forth:

That subsection 6 of section 1 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(6) The term 'dealer' means any person engaged in the business of buying or selling in carloads any perishable agricultural commodity in interstate or foreign commerce, except that (A) no producer shall be considered as a 'dealer' in respect of sales of any such commodity of his own raising; (B) no person buying any such commodity solely for sale at retail shall be considered as a 'dealer' in respect of any such commodity in any calendar year until his purchases of such commodity in carloads in such year are in excess of 20; and (C) no person buying any such commodity for canning and/or processing within the State where grown shall be considered a 'dealer' whether or not the canned or processed product is to be shipped in interstate or foreign commerce. Any person not considered as a 'dealer' under clauses (A), (B), and (C) may elect to secure a license under the provisions of section 3, and in such case and while the license is in effect such person shall be considered as a 'dealer.' As used in this paragraph, the term 'in carloads' includes wholesale or jobbing quantities as defined for any such commodity by the Secretary;"

SEC. 2. That subsection 2 of section 2 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(2) For any dealer to reject or fail to deliver in accordance with the terms of the contract without reasonable cause any perishable agricultural commodity bought or sold or contracted to be bought, sold, or consigned in interstate or foreign commerce by such dealer;"

SEC. 3. That subsection 4 of section 2 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(4) For any commission merchant, dealer, or broker to make, for a fraudulent purpose, any false or misleading statement in connection with any transaction involving or concerning the condition of the market for any perishable agricultural commodity which is received in interstate or foreign commerce by such commission merchant, or bought or sold, or contracted to be bought, sold, or consigned in such commerce by such dealer; or the purchase or sale of which in such commerce is negotiated by such broker; or to fail or refuse truly and correctly to account promptly in respect of any such transaction in any such commodity to the person with whom such transaction is had;"

SEC. 4. That paragraph (b) of section 4 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary shall refuse to issue a license to an applicant if he finds (1) that the applicant has previously, at any time within 2 years, been responsible in whole or in part for any violation of the provisions of section 2 for which a license of the applicant, or the license of any partnership, association, or corporation in which the applicant held any office, or, in the case of a partnership, had any share or interest, was revoked, or (2) if he finds after notice and hearing that at any time within 2 years said applicant was responsible in whole or in part for any flagrant or repeated violations of the provisions of section 2, or (3) in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding any office or, in the case of a partnership, having any interest or share in the applicant, had previously, at any time within 2 years, been responsible in whole or in part for any violations of the provisions of section 2 for which the license of such individual, or of any partnership, association, or corporation in which such person held any office, or, in the case of a partnership, had any share or interest, was revoked, or if he finds after notice and hearing that at any time within 2 years said applicant was responsible in whole or in part for any flagrant or repeated violations of the provisions of section 2, or (4) that the applicant, subject to his right of appeal under section 7 (b), has failed, except in case of bankruptcy, to pay within the time limit provided therein any reparation order which has been issued, within 2 years, against him as an individual, or against a partnership of which he was a member, or an association or corporation in which he held any office, or, in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding any office, or in the case of a partnership, having any interest or share in the applicant, subject to his right of appeal under section 7 (b), has failed, except in the case of bankruptcy, to pay within the time limit provided therein any reparation order which has been issued, within 2 years, against him as an individual, or against a partnership of which he was a member, or an association or corporation in which he held any office. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, the Secretary, in the case of such applicant, may issue a license if the applicant furnishes a bond or other satisfactory assurance that his business will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of this act, and that he will pay all reparation orders which may previously have been issued against him for violations, or which may be issued against him within 2 years following the date of the license, subject to his right of appeal under section 7 (b), but such license shall not be issued before the expiration of 1 year from the date of such revocation, or from the date of the Secretary's finding that applicant has been responsible, in whole or in part, for any flagrant or repeated violation of section 2; "

SEC. 5. That a new paragraph lettered (c) and reading as follows is hereby added to section 4 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930:

"(c) The Secretary may, after 30 days' notice and an opportunity for a hearing, revoke the license of any commission merchant, dealer, or broker, who after the date given in such notice continues to employ in any responsible position any individual whose license was revoked or who was responsibly connected with any firm, partnership, association, or corporation whose license has been revoked within 1 year prior to the date of such notice. Employment of such individual by a licensee in any responsible position after 1 year following the revocation of any such license shall be conditioned upon the filing by the employing licensee of a bond or other satisfactory assurance that its business will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of this act."

SEC. 6. That a new paragraph lettered (d) and reading as follows is hereby added to section 4 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930:

"(d) The Secretary may withhold the issuance of a license to an applicant, for a period not to exceed 30 days pending investigation, if the Secretary believes that the application contains any material false or misleading statement or involves misrepresentation, concealment, or withholding of facts respecting any violation of the act by any officer, agent, or employee. If, after investigation, the Secretary believes that the applicant should be refused a license, the applicant shall be given an opportunity for a hearing within 60 days from the date of the application to show cause why a license should not be refused. If after hearing the Secretary finds that the application contains a material false or misleading statement made by the applicant or by its representative on its behalf or involves a misrepresentation, concealment, or withholding of facts respecting any violation of the act by any officer, agent, or employee, the Secretary shall refuse to issue a license to the applicant."

SEC. 7. That a new paragraph lettered (e) and reading as follows is hereby added to section 4 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930:

"(e) If, after a license shall have been issued to an applicant, the Secretary believes that the license was obtained through a false or misleading statement in the application therefor or through a misrepresentation, concealment, or withholding of facts respecting any violation of the act by any officer, agent, or employee, he may, after 30 days' notice and an opportunity for a hearing, revoke said license, whereupon no license shall be issued to said applicant or any applicant in which the person responsible for such false or misleading statement or misrepresentation, concealment, or withholding of facts is financially interested, except under the conditions set forth in paragraph (b) of this section."

SEC. 8. That paragraph (c) of section 6 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) If there appear to be, in the opinion of the Secretary, any reasonable grounds for investigating any complaint made under this section, the Secretary shall investigate such complaint and may, if in his opinion the facts warrant such action, have said complaint served by registered mail or otherwise on the person concerned and afford such person an opportunity for a hearing thereon before a duly authorized examiner of the Secretary in any place in which the said person is engaged in business: Provided, That in complaints wherein the amount claimed as damages does not exceed the sum of $500 a hearing need not be held and proof in support of the complaint and in support of respondent's answer may be supplied in the form of depositions or verified statements of fact."

SEC. 9. That paragraph (d) of section 6 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) After opportunity for hearing on complaints where the damages claimed exceed the sum of $500 has been provided or waived and on complaints where damages claimed do not exceed the sum of $500 not requiring hearing as provided herein, the Secretary shall determine whether or not the commission merchant, dealer, or broker has violated any provision of section 2 ";

SEC. 10. That paragraph (e) of section 6 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(e) In case a complaint is made by a nonresident of the United States, the complainant shall be required, before any formal action is taken on his complaint, to furnish a bond in double the amount of the claim conditioned upon the payment of costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee for the respondent if the respondent shall prevail."

SEC. 11. That paragraph (b) of section 7 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) If any commission merchant, dealer, or broker does not comply with an order for the payment of money within the time limit in such order, the complainant, or any person for whose benefit such order was made, may within 1 year of the date of the order file in the district court of the United States for the district in which he resides or in which is located the principal place of business of the commission merchant, dealer, or broker, or in any State court having general jurisdiction of the parties, a petition setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages and the order of the Secretary in the premises. The orders, writs, and processes of the district courts may in these cases run, be served, and be returnable anywhere in the United States. Such suit in the district court shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages except that the findings and orders of the Secretary shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and the petitioner shall not be liable for costs in the district court nor for costs at any subsequent state of the proceedings unless they accrue upon his appeal. If the petitioner finally prevails, he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as a part of the costs of the suit."

SEC. 12. That a new paragraph lettered (c) and reading as follows is hereby added to section 7 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930:

"(c) Either party adversely affected by the entry of a reparation order by the Secretary may, within 30 days from and after the date of such order, appeal therefrom to the district court of the United States for the district in which said hearing was held. Such appeal shall be perfected by the filing of a notice thereof together with a petition in duplicate which shall recite prior proceedings before the Secretary, and shall state the grounds upon which petitioner relies to defeat the right of the adverse party to recover the damages claimed with the clerk of said court with proof of service thereof upon the adverse party. The clerk of court shall immediately forward a copy thereof to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in said court a true copy of the Secretary's decision, findings of fact, conclusions, and order in said case, together with copies of pleadings upon which the case was heard and submitted to the Secretary. Such suit in the district court shall be a trial de novo and shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages, except that the findings of fact and order or orders of the Secretary shall be prima-facie evidence of the facts therein stated. Appellee shall not be liable for costs in said court, and if appellee prevails he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee to be taxed and collected as a part of his costs. Such petition and pleadings certified by the Secretary upon which decision was made by him shall upon filing in the district court constitute the pleadings upon which said trial de novo shall proceed subject to any amendment allowed in that court; "

SEC. 13. That a new paragraph lettered (d) and reading as follows is hereby added to section 7 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930:

"(d) Unless the licensee against whom a reparation order has been issued shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary within 5 days from the expiration of the period allowed for compliance with such order that he has either taken an appeal as herein authorized or has made payment in full as required by such order his license shall be suspended automatically at the expiration of such 5-day period until he shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he has paid the amount therein specified with interest thereon to date of payment; "

SEC. 14. That a new paragraph lettered (b) and reading as follows is hereby added to section 8 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930:

"(b) In addition to being subject to the penalties provided by section 3 (a) of this act, any commission merchant, dealer, or broker who engages in or operates such business without an unsuspended and unrevoked license from the Secretary shall be liable to be proceeded against in any court of competent jurisdiction in a suit by the United States for an injunction to restrain such defendant from further continuing so to engage in or operate such business, and, if the court shall find that the defendant is continuing to engage in such business without an unsuspended and unrevoked license, the court shall issue an injunction to restrain such defendant from continuing to engage in or to operate such business without such license."

SEC. 15. That section 14 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. The Secretary is hereby authorized, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State, or municipal agencies, and/or any person, whether operating in one or more jurisdictions, to employ and/or license inspectors to inspect and certify without regard to the filing of a complaint under this act, to any interested person the class, quality, and/or condition of any lot of any perishable agricultural commodity when offered for interstate or foreign shipment or when received at places where the Secretary shall find it practicable to provide such service, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including the payment of such fees and expenses as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be cover the cost for the service rendered: Provided, That fees for inspections made by a licensed inspector, less the percentage thereof which he is allowed by the terms of his contract of employment with the Secretary as compensation for his services, shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts; and fees for inspections made by an inspector acting under a cooperative agreement with a State, municipality, or other person shall be disposed of in accordance with the terms of such agreement: Provided further, That expenses for travel and subsistence incurred by inspectors shall be paid by the applicant for inspection to the disbursing clerk of the United States Department of Agriculture to be credited to the appropriation for carrying out the purposes of this act: And provided further, That certificates issued by such inspectors shall be received in all courts of the United States and in all proceedings under this act as prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND VIRGINIA

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill introduced by our colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], H.R. 6228, to provide for the appointment of a commission to establish the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia, no. 63 on the Consent Calendar.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to determine the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia, and to provide for settlement of claims to property along or affected by said boundary line, the President of the United States is hereby requested to designate and appoint one commissioner, who is hereby directed, authorized, and empowered to act in conjunction with a like commissioner to be appointed pursuant to an act of the Legislature of Virginia. The said two commissioners so appointed and a third person to be selected by them are hereby constituted a commission for the purpose of surveying and ascertaining the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia, and are hereby directed, authorized, and empowered to survey and fix said boundary line and to mark the said line when so determined by suitable monuments, acting within the limits of their authority and guided by the provisions herein set forth. The said commissioners so selected shall serve until the completion of their report or not later than March 1, 1935.

SEC. 2. In determining the true location of said boundary said commissioners shall take into consideration, amongst other things, the several decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in relation thereto, the findings and reports of the Maryland and Virginia Boundary Commission of 1877, the compact of 1785 between the State of Maryland and the Commonwealth of Virginia, the claims of ownership of the United States and all private persons and corporations along the Virginia shore line, and the equitable and prescriptive rights, if any, of the United States and private claimants growing out of long, continued, and uninterrupted possession, and shall mark such line as they may recommend as the true boundary line and shall report their findings and recommendations to Congress and to the Legislature of Virginia for action to finally ratify and establish said boundary line.

SEC. 3. To provide for the settlement of titles to the property adjoining or affected by the determination of said boundary line, the said commissioners are further authorized and instructed to investigate all questions of title as between the United States and private citizens over such lands, all questions of equitable and prescriptive rights arising from long and continued possession and occupancy either on the part of the United States or private citizens, and all improvements of said lands either by the United States or private citizens made in good faith and upon belief of good title, and said commissioners shall report their findings and recommendations in this respect for the equitable settlement of all such disputed titles, including proposed payments to and from the United States, and such other recommendations as in their opinion may promote a just and reasonable settlement of the title to said property. Nothing contained in said recommendation with respect to title shall be binding upon either the United States or private claimants.

SEC. 4. Said commissioners shall receive compensation for such days as they may work at the rate of $15 per day, plus travel and subsistence expenses, and shall have authority to employ such assistants at such rates of pay as they may deem appropriate without regard for the Classification Act of 1923. The said commissioners may call upon all officers and agencies of the Federal Government and the District of Columbia for information and advice, and said officers are hereby authorized and directed to supply such information on request. Said commission shall make such surveys, hold such hearings, and conduct such other investigations as it may deem necessary and advisable to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and the payment of salaries and compensation herein provided for, the sum of $15,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "true."
Page 2, line 24, strike out the word "true."
Page 3, line 22, after the word "may", insert the word "actually."
Page 4, line 11, strike out the sign and figures "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$10,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO REDUCE FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to bill (H.R. 3521) to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 13 of the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 596), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 8, sec. 402), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That the clerk of each and every court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization cases shall charge, collect, and account for the following fees in each proceeding:

"(1) For receiving and filing a declaration of intention and the issuing of a duplicate thereof, $2.50;

"(2) For making, filing, and docketing a petition for citizenship, and issuing a certificate of citizenship if the issuance of such certificate is authorized by the court, and for the final hearing on the petition, $5."

SEC. 2. Subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 32 of the act of June 29, 1906, and subdivision (a) of section 33 of the act of June 29, 1906, which were added thereto by section 9 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 8, sec. 399(b) (a), (b), and (c), and sec. 399 (c) (a)), is amended as follows: Wherever in said subdivisions the words "a fee of $10" occurs they shall be amended to read "a fee of $5."

SEC. 3. Section 5 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 8, sec. 380(a)), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. For every certificate of arrival issued for naturalization purposes a fee of $2.50 shall be paid to the Commissioner of Naturalization, which fee shall be paid over to and deposited in the Treasury in the same manner as other naturalization fees."

SEC. 4. Subdivision (a) of section 32 of the act of June 29, 1906, which was added thereto by section 9 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 8, sec. 399(b) (a)), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided, That an alien veteran as defined in section 1 of the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 654; (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 8, sec. 241(a)), shall not be required to pay the fee required by this subdivision."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, after line 5, add the following new section:

"SEC. 5. In all naturalization proceedings in which an alien applying for certificate of citizenship is represented by counsel, there is hereby established a limit of $25 for counsel's fees, except where legal action before a court requires extended legal service when the court may approve a reasonable fee in excess of $25."

The committee moves to further amend by striking out, in line 8 of the committee amendment, the figures "$25" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10." Also to strike out, in line 11, the figures "$25" and insert "$10."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to go back to House Joint Resolution 118.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

ELIMINATION FROM THE AGRICULTURE BUDGET OF APPROPRIATION FOR EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS MUST HAVE BEEN AN UNINTENTIONAL OVERSIGHT, FOR ITS ELIMINATION WILL BE A STEP BACKWARD

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to appropriations for experimental stations, and include in that a statement made by me to the Appropriations Committee on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am submitting an address which I made Saturday, February 3, 1934, before the Agriculture Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on the subject of restoring to the Budget sufficient funds to maintain the experimental stations.

Mr. Chairman, the elimination of the item in the Agriculture budget for the carrying on of the experimental stations would indicate that the farmer's various problems are settled; whereas the permanent and ever-present problems of the farmer and rancher are increasing, and with all this they have the new and unsolved problems incident to the depression and the recovery program.

GAMBLE OF FARMERS AND RANCHERS

The farmers and livestock men of the West and Middlewest have always been the gamest of all gamblers. In pioneering the West, and before that the Middlewest, they started out in gambling on soil and climatic conditions. To begin with, they bet Uncle Sam their homestead right and the filing fee against 160 acres of untried soil that they could make a living on it and ultimately put it on the tax list for the support of the Government.

Up to the present time every farmer is betting his seed and his toil, every time he plants, that there will be sufficient rainfall to produce a crop; and if the rainfall does come, he is betting his crop that neither the grasshoppers nor the hail will get it before harvest time.

Every time the livestock man brings on a crop of calves or a crop of lambs he is betting all of them that nature will bring on sufficient grass for summer pasture and that nature will be kind enough that he may produce sufficient hay for winter, to the end that he may mature his livestock into an income from the sale of beef or mutton.

If and when the farmer has won to the harvesting of a crop of grain and the stockman has won to the production of beef and mutton, then they have to "call" the hardest bet of the entire game; they must load the product of their efforts and toil on the train and gamble on the market a thousand to fifteen hundred miles away, so far as the farmers and ranchers whom I represent are concerned.

WESTERN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS MUST BE HIGH CLASS

If the grain and livestock products produced out in Montana and in other States similarly located are not of the best so as to command a decent price, then the railroads, the elevators, the millers, the stockyards, and the packers take the "gross" and there is no "net" left for the producer, indeed with the best products there is little enough left.

Now, in the face of the fact that we must produce good grades of grain and livestock in order to live at all, it is unjust that under a misleading economy we shall eliminate some 18 dry-land and 8 irrigation experimental stations, as well as 15 field stations in 11 western States, situated as Montana is situated. To me, and I believe to all practical farmers and ranchers in these 11 States, this alleged economy can be classified only as pennywise to poundfoolish; and if you will bear with me, I believe I can prove this to those from all other States. Really, the seriousness of this situation leads me to believe that this appropriation was unintentionally omitted from the Budget.

WATER CONSERVATION, EFFICIENT CONTROL, AND USE

The most important problem today, in all the country west of the Mississippi River, is water conservation and its efficient control and use. Our Government is now spending hundreds of millions of dollars for this purpose. Indeed, in addition to the great flood-control program, the reclamation projects and the large storage reservoirs, it has a vast set-up, and is increasing it, for soil surveys, elimination of soil erosion, study on proper use of marginal lands, and the like. Now, would it not be foolhardy to abandon and destroy these experimental stations and their work when they are the very foundation stones for the information the Government must have if it goes on to a successful expenditure of these hundreds of millions of dollars for efficient water conservation, control, and use?

REMEDY, WHERE NOT SUFFICIENT RAINFALL

In these 11 States we do not have sufficient rainfall, and it is necessary to irrigate or to plant and cultivate under dry-land farming rules; therefore, with us the conservation, control, and efficient use of water is all-important in the first instance, and in the other, proper dry-land farming methods are equally important in order that we get the maximum results from the limited rainfall. If ever the dry-land stations were necessary to the farmers and ranchers of these States and to the general plan of the Government, they are more necessary at this instant.

Each station has been so located as to deal with particular subjects incidental to that particular locality, such as altitude, rainfall, growing season, duration of winter, erosion resultant from both water and wind, and soil conditions in general. No one of these stations can be substituted for the other and each locality be equally benefited; hence there can be no successful consolidation of stations, as has been suggested. Each station is an individual unit peculiar to its own locality, and the problems to be determined by each of these stations are becoming greater every season.

MARGINAL LANDS AND THEIR USE

The Agriculture Department is now paying millions to take lands out of cereal-grain production, and proposes spending other vast sums in selecting and segregating marginal lands. Surely these stations will be necessary in the selection of these lands to be segregated; then I ask, in all fairness, can the Department under its present program consistently say we will abandon the stations by failing to put the expense for their maintenance in our budget?

I do not understand that it is the plan to abandon these western borderlands solely to the elements and to the coyotes, but rather to find out how to use all these various areas in the best possible way for the service of a high type of civilization. The people are there, and surely it is not the purpose, as I understand the plan, to drive them out, but rather to help them to a larger success.

Development under this plan must depend upon an ever-broadening knowledge of the resources of that great western country and how these resources may be best used for the present and future welfare of our people. We depend on what nature has provided in the way of soil, in the grass covering it and in the rainfall. Our problems are how these may best be improved, interwoven, and combined to serve more effectively the people of that area. Surely no one can say that this can be done by destroying the present service agencies; rather, I am sure, everyone will agree that they should be extended and broadened.

THE USE LINE DRAWN

A closer "use line" is being drawn every season. What lands are best fitted for pasture and what pasture grasses shall be used to assist the native grass is the problem on one side of the line; on the other side is the problem of tilling, planting, and cultivating the agricultural lands, to the end that they produce the grains and forages best adapted to them; and then comes the combined problem of a net profit by making each side of the line help the other, to the end that the farmer and rancher shall have a living above his cost of production.

For all these purposes it is necessary to have these stations. No one would say that the individual farmer or rancher could work out these matters by himself. Indeed, how helpless he would be in trying to work out all these things individually. No individual farmer or rancher or any ordinary group of them could afford to do it.

IRRIGATION STATIONS WORK WITH DRY-LAND STATIONS

The irrigation stations fit "hand in glove" with the dry-land stations. The livestock raised on dry-land pastures and the hard grains produced from dry-land agricultural land work with the products from the irrigated sections. The livestock are fattened there for market, and large numbers of them are wintered on the hay grown below the ditches. As I am speaking to you today, there are being fattened for market adjacent to one sugar-beet refinery in Montana, and on the products of the irrigated area there, 75,000 lambs; at another some 50,000, and at still another a like number.

These stations under the ditch are studying and experimenting on crop rotation, on the adaptability of certain crops to the area, and their studies and experiments are altogether practical. All classes of livestock, but more particularly sheep and beef cattle, are fed under the station's observation. These stations are also making actual experiments with their own—the Government's—dairy herds, beef herds on a small scale, as well as hogs and sheep. These experiments have to do with the feed most beneficial for dairy production, beef production, pork production, mutton and wool production, and it all extends to summer pasture as well as winter rations.

ALL STATIONS ASSIST LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Both the dry-land and irrigation stations in my State serve as centers for carrying on livestock studies within themselves, namely, the breeding of beef cattle, dairy cattle, dual purpose cattle such as milking shorthorns; also the breeding of sheep and hogs as well as poultry and bees, and the grades and breeds adapted to the locality.

In addition to the big things these stations do, they are a godsend to the small farmer, the dairyman, and the small livestock grower, and they fit into the very picture of the present agricultural program.

DEFENSE OF BOTH STATIONS

In defense of both classes of stations, the dry land and the irrigation, let me hit a high place or two on what they have already accomplished. Marquis and turkeyred wheat, Grimm and Ladak alfalfa, crested wheatgrass, and bisson flax are some newer developments, each having its beneficial place and purpose, and each of these names is synonymous with the words "experimental station."

In Montana, and I assume in all other Western States having agricultural colleges and land-grant colleges, or both, such colleges work in close cooperation with the experimental stations; in fact, there is joint maintenance and operation in many instances. Therefore a failure of this appropriation, in addition to the other injuries I have recited, will greatly impair the State agricultural research and general agricultural educational work.

FAILURE OF APPROPRIATION WILL BE A MOVEMENT BACKWARD

In the great progressive movement now being put forth by the Agriculture Department as a part of the new deal I do not believe that the appropriation to continue these stations was deliberately omitted from the Budget. Surely, we are not going backward. You know, the President said in his message on the state of the Union, "Civilization cannot go back; civilization must not stand still. We have undertaken new methods. It is our duty to perfect, to improve, to alter when necessary, but in all cases to go forward."

Now, I warn you, we are not going forward if we omit or slight the advancement of agriculture, the basic industry of our country. To omit all kinds of pure seed grain, highly developed grasses and forage, fruits and vegetables, pure-bred livestock, improved cultivation, improved growing and feeding methods, and, in fact, every form of agricultural advancement is a serious step backward.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the elimination of this appropriation is a step that will take us backward by 2 or 3 decades.

I am going to believe—and I hope that immediate action will show that I am right—that this appropriation was left out of the Budget by inadvertence or mistake. It was not intentional. That it will be restored when this condition is called to the attention of the proper authorities, I feel confident.

We are going to do as the President suggested and as the people desire. We are not going to go backward; we are not going to stand still. We are a progressive people. We are going to improve and in all cases go forward. As an evidence of this fact, Mr. Chairman and members of this important committee, I urge that you reinstate in this Budget the item for experimental station maintenance.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 682. An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2347. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S.J.Res. 80. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 12 to May 19, 1934, inclusive; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 21 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE OF LABOR

(Wednesday, Feb. 7, 10 a.m.)

Hearings on bills pertaining to 30-hour work week; all old-age-pension legislation; and bill to provide for investigation of unemployment due to mechanism.

NAVAL AFFAIRS SUBCOMMITTEE ON AERONAUTICS

(Wednesday, Feb. 7, 10:30 a.m.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4659. A bill for the relief of Carleton-Mace Engineering Corporation; without amendment (Rept. No. 564). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4793. A bill for the relief of Moses Israel; with amendment (Rept. No. 565). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4832. A bill for the relief of Edgar Sampson; without amendment (Rept. No. 566). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4846. A bill for the relief of Joseph Dumas; with amendment (Rept. No. 567). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4847. A bill for the relief of Galen E. Lichty; without amendment (Rept. No. 568). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4927. A bill for the relief of C. J. Holliday; with amendment (Rept. No. 569). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4928. A bill for the relief of the Palmetto Cotton Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 570). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4929. A bill for the relief of J. B. Trotter; with amendment (Rept. No. 571). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4930. A bill for the relief of G. T. Fleming; with amendment (Rept. No. 572). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4958. A bill for the relief of Helena C. VonGroning and Stephan VonGroning; without amendment (Rept. No. 573). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4990. A bill for the relief of Alfred Harris; with amendment (Rept. No. 574). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5000. A bill for the relief of Sophie Carter; without amendment (Rept. No. 575). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5405. A bill for the relief of Nicola Valerio; without amendment (Rept. No. 576). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5415. A bill for the relief of Giuglio Zarella; without amendment (Rept. No. 577). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5416. A bill for the relief of Joseph Ricco; without amendment (Rept. No. 578). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5579. A bill for the relief of Julia Santiago; with amendment (Rept. No. 579). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5588. A bill for the relief of A. H. Marshall; with amendment (Rept. No. 580). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5674. A bill for the relief of the Northwest Missouri Fair Association, of Bethany, Harrison County, Mo.; with amendment (Rept. No. 581). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5703. A bill to authorize the waiver or remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 582). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5855. A bill for the relief of Charles G. Johnson, State treasurer of the State of California; without amendment (Rept. No. 583). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5935. A bill for the relief of Oscar P. Cox; with amendment (Rept. No. 584). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 6324. A bill for the relief of Mabel Carver; with amendment (Rept. No. 585). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 6366. A bill making appropriation to restore water of high mineral content on land owned and controlled by the Federal Government; without amendment (Rept. No. 586). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 6386. A bill for the relief of Lucien M. Grant; without amendment (Rept. No. 587). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 6890. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr; without amendment (Rept. No. 588). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 6936. A bill for the relief of J. F. Hubbard; without amendment (Rept. No. 589). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 7028. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Joseph Roncoli; without amendment (Rept. No. 590). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 7067. A bill for the relief of St. Anthony's Hospital at Michigan City, Ind.; Dr. Russell A. Gilmore; Emily Molzen, nurse; and the Hummer Mortuary; with amendment (Rept. No. 591). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 7168. A bill for making compensation to the estate of Nellie Lamson; without amendment (Rept. No. 592). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 7289. A bill for the relief of H. A. Soderberg; without amendment (Rept. No. 593). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H.R. 6229) to repeal Federal liquor prohibition laws to the extent they are in force in the Territory of Hawaii; Committee on Ways and Means discharged, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

A bill (H.R. 7643) granting a pension to Annie S. Nealley; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H.R. 7703) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, and to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MILLARD: A bill (H.R. 7704) providing for an examination and survey of the harbor at Irvington, N.Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MALONEY of Louisiana: A bill (H.R. 7705) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CULKIN: A bill (H.R. 7706) to amend section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. Reece: A bill (H.R. 7707) authorizing an appropriation with which to pay part of the cost of paving and curbing an approach to the Veterans' Administration facility, where the approach abuts on the grounds of the facility; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H.R. 7708) to amend section 3 of the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, as amended May 29, 1926 (U.S.C., title 49, sec. 153); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ZIONCHECK (by request): A bill (H.R. 7709) to secure to unemployed American citizens the right to work advantageously for themselves in the production and mutual exchange of food, shelter, clothing, and commodities; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HASTINGS: A bill (H.R. 7710) authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROMJUE: A bill (H.R. 7711) to permit postmasters to act as disbursing officers for the payment of traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Postal Service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H.R. 7712) to reduce interest charges to not more than 2 percent upon loans made upon adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H.R. 7713) to establish a farm borrowers' counsel for each Federal land-bank district; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BURKE of Nebraska: A bill (H.R. 7714) to amend the Federal Farm Act, as amended, to make corporations under certain conditions eligible to become members of national farm-loan associations, and to obtain from Federal land banks loans secured by first mortgages on farm land, to permit loans for additional purposes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H.R. 7715) to amend section 92, title 5, United States Code (Rev. Stat., par. 1778); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TRUAX: Resolution (H.Res. 251) providing for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the method and procedure in the appointments of appraisers and field representatives and other employees of the Federal land banks; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, Resolution (H.Res. 252) directing the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration to furnish certain information concerning the directors, officers, and employees of the Federal land banks; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SIMPSON: Resolution (H.Res. 253) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the special, unwarranted, and unusual privileges and liberties accorded Federal prisoners at Federal penitentiaries; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. TARVER: Resolution (H.Res. 254) for the consideration of H.R. 6974; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. PETTENGILL: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 260) directing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of 1934 General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BAILEY: Concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 33) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to proclaim a time for fasting and prayer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ABERNETHY: A bill (H.R. 7716) for the relief of Carrie Price Roberts; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H.R. 7717) to place David J. Fitzgerald on the retired list of the United States Army as a first lieutenant; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7718) to place Drury L. Helm on the retired list of the Army as a captain; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H.R. 7719) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7720) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7721) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7722) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7723) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7724) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7725) for the relief of George S. Van Schaick as superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and as liquidator of Equitable Casualty & Surety Co., in liquidation; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7726) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7727) for the relief of Winifred Meagher; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7728) for the relief of James Slevin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE of Nebraska: A bill (H.R. 7729) authorizing the Bankers Reserve Life Co., of Omaha, Nebr., and the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co., to bring suit in the Court of Claims of the United States against the United States of America for a refund of taxes paid by said corporations into the Treasury of the United States and authorizing said Court to disregard the statute of limitation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GAMBRILL: A bill (H.R. 7730) for the relief of Marie B. Neale; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOIDALE: A bill (H.R. 7731) for the relief of Charles D. Jeronimus; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H.R. 7732) for the relief of Robert H. Tooker; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7733) for the relief of G. G. Reber; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KELLY of Illinois: A bill (H.R. 7734) for the relief of John Randolph McCann; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H.R. 7735) granting a pension to Hattie E. Clapp; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANZETTA: A bill (H.R. 7736) for the relief of Rocco D'Amato; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H. R. 7737) for the relief of Alta Melvin and Thomas Melvin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McGUGIN: A bill (H.R. 7738) for the relief of S. K. Plum; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McMILLAN: A bill (H.R. 7739) granting a pension to Carl Wilhelm Janssen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H.R. 7740) granting an increase of pension to Edgar C. N. Waldrop; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H.R. 7741) granting a pension to Michael J. Carroll; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia: A bill (H.R. 7742) for the relief of the present leader of the United States Navy Band; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILLFORD: A bill (H.R. 7743) for the relief of the J. H. Neil Creamery Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HILL of Alabama: Joint Resolution (H.J.Res. 261) granting permission to Col. Richard T. Ellis, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, to accept decorations and medals bestowed upon him by the Government of the Republic of France; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2147. By Mr. FORD: Petition protesting against interference with the rights of citizens by the National Broadcasting Co., the Columbia Broadcasting System, the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and others in preventing the broadcasting of the message of Judge Rutherford, signed by approximately 25,000 citizens of the Fourteenth Congressional District of California; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2148. By Mr. GOSS: Petition of residents of the Fifth Connecticut Congressional District to the Congress of the United States, protesting against certain interference through censorship of radio broadcasing; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2149. By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: Petition of residents in the Central Northwest area of the United States, endorsing the Frazier bill and urge the passage of this bill as early as possible; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2150. By Mr. HOWARD: Petition of Eva Washburn and other members of the Foreign Missionary Society of the First Episcopal Church of Norfolk, Nebr., urging the passage of legislation to prevent war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2151. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of First National Bank of Corsicana; Citizens National Bank of Waxahachie; Citizens National Bank of Cameron; Waxahachie Bank & Trust Co., of Waxahachie; First National Bank of Bryan; the Citizens National Bank of Hillsboro; Planters & Merchants State Bank of Hearne; the First National Bank of Cameron; Farmers State Bank of Mexia; and State National Bank of Corsicana; all of the State of Texas, opposing legislation granting checking privileges to depositors in Postal Savings System (H.R. 3666); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2152. By Mr. KINZER: Resolution from the Society of Friends of West Chester, Pa., petitioning for higher moral standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2153. By Mr. LAMBERTSON: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Morrill, Kans., urging the passage of House bill 6097, providing for higher moral standards for films entering interstate and international commerce, and of members of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of Hiawatha, Kans., urging the passage of House bill 6097; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2154. By Mr. LEHR: Petition of Braun Arbor Local Farmers' Union of Ann Arbor, Mich., urging the passage of the Swank-Thomas bill, H.R. 3208, providing for Government regulation of the marketing of farm products, also the passage of the Frazier-Lemke bill, H.R. 2855, providing for the Government refinancing farmers at a rate of 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent payment on principal, also passage of the Wheeler bill, known in the Senate as "S. 70", providing for the remonetization and free coinage of silver; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2155. By Mr. MOYNIHAN of Illinois: Petition of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society and 10,000 residents of the Second Congressional District of Illinois, to make it unlawful for any person or corporation to use threats, boycotts, or other coercive methods to interfere with, interrupt, or prevent any radio station from broadcasting any and all programs that may be deemed for the good of the people; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2156. By Mr. O'MALLEY: Memorial of the State of Wisconsin, urging the President of the United States and the national administration to take immediate action on the dairy situation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2157. By Mr. PARKER: Petition of T. A. Lynn and 55 other citizens, of Tattnall County, Ga., asking enactment of legislation that will limit farmers to planting 25 percent of cultivated land in cotton; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2158. By Mr. PETTENGILL: Petition of W. F. Rohleder, of Mishawaka, Ind., and 10,000 other citizens of the Third Indiana District, for freedom of radio broadcasts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2159. By Mr. SADOWSKI: Petition endorsing the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2160. By Mr. SNELL: Resolution of the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York, to abolish the Federal gasoline sales tax and surrender to the States exclusively the power to tax such sales in the future; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2161. By Mr. STOKES: Petition of about 8,000 residents of the Sixth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, relative to the regulation of broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2162. By Mr. STUDLEY: Resolution of the National Guard Association of the State of New York, Utica, N.Y., on January 20, 1934, recommending that the Appropriation Committee in Congress grant such allowances for the National Guard, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Reserve as will provide pay for 48 drills and 15 days' training per annum as a minimum basis for a training program, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Reed
Austin	Cutting	Keyes	Reynolds
Bachman	Davis	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Dickinson	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Russell
Barbour	Dill	Logan	Schall
Barkley	Duffy	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	Erickson	Long	Shipstead
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Smith
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Steiwer
Brown	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Thompson
Byrd	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Murphy	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Van Nuys
Carey	Hastings	Nye	Wagner
Clark	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Connally	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Copeland	Hebert	Pittman	White

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], caused by illness, and also the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who are detained on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact proposed legislation for the control of the grasshopper menace

Whereas since 1928 the grasshopper menace has developed and spread in the northwestern section of the United States to such an extent that it is more serious than it has been at any time since the invasion of 1873–76; and

Whereas the present grasshopper menace has now reached a point where it is completely beyond the control of the individual counties and States, indicating the necessity for Federal action; and

Whereas in 1933 the sum of $14,000 of State funds was used in the grasshopper-control campaign in Wisconsin, which sum was insufficient, necessitating the expenditure of a total of $24,385.09 of county funds by 13 counties in this State; and

Whereas because of the severity of the grasshopper pest a regional conference was held in November 1933, consisting of representatives from seven States, which conference made certain recommendations for a Federal control program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for Federal control of the grasshopper menace, substantially along the lines recommended by the regional conference on grasshopper control held in North Dakota in 1933; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution relating to unemployment in the State of Wisconsin and requesting extension of the Civil Works Administration and the increase of Wisconsin's C.W.A. quota to at least 160,000

Whereas in Wisconsin a total of about 160,000 persons have been employed under the Civil Works Administration; and

Whereas it is reported that Wisconsin's quota will now be reduced to 75,000 persons, which will necessitate the removal of approximately 85,000 persons from the Civil Works pay roll; and

Whereas the latest available figures show that, as of November 1, 1933, the unemployment-relief census in Wisconsin was 253,226; and in Milwaukee County alone there were, as of January 1, 1934, a total of 14,234 unemployment-relief cases, of which 8,972 are families and 5,262 are single persons; and

Whereas it is reported that, as of January 10, 1934, there were in the State in excess of 35,000 persons not under unemployment relief who had registered in unemployment offices and who had not been placed in jobs; and in Milwaukee County alone it is estimated that in excess of 50,000 persons, other than public-relief cases, are now unemployed; and

Whereas from the foregoing figures it is safe to conclude that there are now in Wisconsin in excess of 100,000 unemployed persons other than those now on C.W.A. pay rolls and those under unemployment relief, and with the proposed reduction of Wisconsin's C.W.A. quota to 75,000 such estimated number of unemployed persons in Wisconsin will be considerably increased: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully urges the Federal Civil Works Administration: (1) To extend the Civil Works program to at least May 1, 1934; (2) to reconsider its reported action in reducing Wisconsin's quota to 75,000 and to set the quota at least to 160,000, and that the quota as so increased be distributed among communities as the need therefor exists; that is in proportion to actual unemployment in the several communities rather than in proportion to population; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be forwarded to President Roosevelt, to Federal Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Lawrence S. Cagno, of Brooklyn, N.Y., praying the passage of legislation to establish a weekly national lottery as a method of increasing Federal revenues and combating so-called "rackets", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Muhlenberg Property Owners' Association, of Greenville, Ky., protesting against ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, and favoring the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law in the interest of small merchants and business men, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1506. An act to amend the United States mining laws applicable to the Mount Hood National Forest within the State of Oregon (Rept. No. 267);

S. 1981. An act to make cattle a basic agricultural commodity for the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (Rept. No. 268); and

S. 1982. An act to add certain lands to the Mount Hood National Forest in the State of Oregon (Rept. No. 269).

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of José Padín to be commissioner of education for Puerto Rico (reappointment), which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LONG:

A bill (S. 2663) to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. DICKINSON:

A bill (S. 2664) for the relief of John F. Korbel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2665) for the relief of Amy McLaurin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 2666) for the relief of Daniel Coakley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 2667) to amend section 25 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 2668) granting a pension to Maude Brindle; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2669) for the relief of Allan W. Hartmann; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRNES:

A bill (S. 2670) to prohibit Senators, Members of Congress, Government officials, and national committeemen from representing persons in obtaining the award of contracts, the payment of claims, or the making of loans by the Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2671) repealing certain sections of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States relating to the Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 2672) for the relief of Mabel Parker; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2673) to correct the military record of Carl Lindow, alias Carl Lindo; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DIETERICH:

A bill (S. 2674) to amend an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 2675) creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 2676) to incorporate the United States Civil Legion; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2677) for the relief of S. L. Wells; to the Committee on Claims.

REGULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a bill, Senate bill 2642, to establish a Federal Stock Exchange and Securities Commission, to regulate transactions in securities on the various stock exchanges, and for other purposes, and asked that it be not referred to a committee until I was able to confer with the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill, which provides for the control of stock exchanges, is rather an important measure. I was a little diffident about having it go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, because measures which I think would have prevented many of the abuses which have existed have been before that committee for years, and I was not sure whether affirmative action would be taken. However, I now ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be so referred.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6951, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 76, after line 4, to insert the following:

"Pursuant to the provisions of section 407 of title IV of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1933, as amended, Executive Order No. 6586, dated February 6, 1934, revoking section 18 of Executive Order No. 6166, dated June 10, 1933, shall take effect on the date of approval of this act."

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6951, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 72, after line 9, to insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Hereafter the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations shall be known as the "National Park Service" and appropriations herein made for the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations shall be available to the National Park Service, and the services of the Director and personnel of the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations shall be continued in the National Park Service under their present appointments."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 93. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co. a tract of land comprising part of the Plattsburgh Barracks Military Reservation, N.Y.;

H.R. 715. An act to award the Distinguished Service Cross to former holders of the certificate of merit, and for other purposes;

H.R. 1497. An act to repeal certain laws providing that certain aliens who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States shall be considered citizens for the purposes of service and protection on American vessels;

H.R. 3521. An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes;

H.R. 4224. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to hire vehicles from postal employees;

H.R. 5745. An act granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H.R. 5862. An act to provide for the removal of American citizens and nationals accused of crime to and from the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction;

H.R. 5863. An act to prevent the loss of the title of the United States to lands in the Territories or territorial possessions through adverse possession or prescription;

H.R. 6173. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the city of Nome, Alaska, of certain land situated therein;

H.R. 6228. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to establish the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia;

H.R. 6370. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.;

H.R. 6492. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y.;

H.R. 6525. An act to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930;

H.R. 6794. An act authorizing the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N.J.;

H.R. 6909. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo.;

H.R. 7205. An act to provide for the care and transportation of seamen from shipwrecked fishing and whaling vessels;

H.R. 7291. An act authorizing the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Hannibal, Marion County, Mo.; and

H.R. 7513. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

CHERAW INDIANS, NORTH CAROLINA—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which, yesterday during my absence, Senate bill 1632 was read the third time and passed. It is a local bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion to reconsider will be entered.

SHARE-OUR-WEALTH SOCIETY

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a circular letter.

There being no objection, the circular letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MY DEAR FRIEND: I am sending you herewith several copies of an appeal to the people of America to organize a share-our-wealth society in every community. I enclose some extra copies so that you may keep one and hand out the balance. After Congress adjourns I will make some speeches in a few of the places where these societies are organized.

The people can bring about relief and provide comfort and happiness to all. We are trying to show them what is necessary to give all of our people something to eat, clothes to wear, and homes in which to live. America is the land of too much to eat and too much to wear and too many houses, yet people are miserable, starving, and some are homeless, unless they get on some kind of Government relief dole, and some are more than half starved to death even on that.

The concentration of wealth into the hands of the very rich has become so bad that, like cannibals, the rich have begun to eat up one another. Here and there a rich man falls the victim, becoming poor himself, while some other rich man becomes richer, not only out of the blood of the poor but from the fall of another rich man.

I say in the enclosed article that I hope those interested in this work will have more of the circulars printed to hand out to their people, and that, if they desire, I can have them printed for them here at cost and mailed to them. Let me say that if anyone wants more of the circulars and does not feel able to pay the cost to print more of them that I will pay for them and send them free, not over 100 to a person.

When you have read the enclosed circular and handed out the extra copies, I will appreciate having you and your neighbors inform me, as well as their own Congressman and Senators in Washington, of their sentiments and action.

Yours sincerely,

HUEY P. LONG,
United States Senator.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a proposition to the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and others interested that the Senate vote on the matter of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty, so-called, on Wednesday, a week from today. I make the suggestion in order that my able friend, the chairman of the committee, may consider it, as it is the desire of many on this side to have the treaty disposed of, and many wish to speak and would like to know at what time they should speak. I suggest to the able chairman that we have an agreement to vote on the treaty on Wednesday, a week from today, if it is possible and convenient.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, when this matter was brought up last week, or week before last, at any rate several days ago by the Senator from Illinois, who, I may say, seems to be representing the opposition to the treaty, I suggested the coming Saturday as probably a reasonable time to give Senators who desired to speak before voting on the treaty. At that time there was some objection on behalf of those who favored the treaty on the ground that they did not know then how many wanted to speak or what other matters might intervene. Later on, however, that particular objection was withdrawn, and again I submitted a proposed unanimous-consent agreement that the Senate vote on the coming Saturday. That was objected to by some of the opponents of the treaty.

As I stated at that time, as Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I am only nominally in charge of the treaty, as is quite well known to those who are most interested in its ratification, as well as to those who are most interested in defeating it. I will be very happy to do all that I can to confer with those who favor it, while the Senator will do likewise with those who oppose it, and see if we cannot reach an agreement on a date for a vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I am able to inform the chairman of the committee that those who have objected to the previous arrangement, for whatever reason they then had, now concede and are pleased to join in the suggestion that if we can we arrange for a vote a week from today, giving a week in the meantime. So there is no objection on the part of those who heretofore made the objection.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am pleased that the Senator has made the suggestion, because it will permit me to take the matter up with those who are interested in the ratification of the treaty to ascertain how many of them desire to speak, what length of time they may take, and also I may find out from those in charge of legislation in this body what measures will absorb the attention of the Senate during the next few days.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H.R. 93. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Plattsburgh National Bank & Trust Co. a tract of land comprising part of the Plattsburgh Barracks Military Reservation, N.Y.; and

H.R. 715. An act to award the Distinguished Service Cross to former holders of the certificate of merit, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H.R. 1497. An act to repeal certain laws providing that certain aliens who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States shall be considered citizens for the purposes of service and protection on American vessels; and

H.R. 3521. An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

H.R. 4224. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to hire vehicles from postal employees; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H.R. 5745. An act granting abandoned public buildings and grounds at Sitka, Alaska, to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 5862. An act to provide for the removal of American citizens and nationals accused of crime to and from the jurisdiction of any officer or representative of the United States vested with judicial authority in any country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H.R. 5863. An act to prevent the loss of the title of the United States to lands in the Territories or territorial possessions through adverse possession or prescription; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 6173. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the city of Nome, Alaska, of certain land situated therein; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H.R. 6228. An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to establish the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H.R. 6525. An act to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H.R. 7513. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

H.R. 6370. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.;

H.R. 6492. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y.;

H.R. 6794. An act authorizing the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N.J.;

H.R. 6909. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo.;

H.R. 7205. An act to provide for the care and transportation of seamen from shipwrecked fishing and whaling vessels; and

H.R. 7291. An act authorizing the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Hannibal, Marion County, Mo.; to the Committee on Commerce.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, on last Wednesday the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] made a speech opposing the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty and said that he thought this administration had been misled into lending its support to the treaty.

Judging by the measures recommended by the administration, I am inclined to agree with the Senator that it is or must be possible to mislead it, but its worthy stand upon this treaty, in its support of this great national undertaking which will usher in a new era to 23 States of this great Nation, if not to all 48, has not been brought about by misconception; and if the treaty shall be ratified, this action of the President will rehabilitate him to a large extent for his other numerous misleadings, in my opinion.

Mr. President, for over 100 years this Nation has sought what has been secured for it in this treaty. No one anywhere, with an understanding of the tremendous task, thought that it was possible for the former administration to secure this treaty. But the impossible was accomplished, and a Republican President has laid before the Senate the possibility of extending the Atlantic Ocean 1,500 miles west throughout the region of the Great Lakes into the very heart of our Nation, thus bringing to the use of 23 States, among which is my own State, the larger benefits to be derived by the services of vessels plying not only the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans but every other ocean and sea in the world.

I feel that if the President shall give his usual industrious support to the ratification of the treaty, its approval will be assured. I do not believe the rumors I hear on all sides that his strenuous support of the treaty is only the voice of Jacob but the hand of Esau, and I, therefore, realize that the approval of the treaty is certain, for if the administration exercises only a fraction of the pressure for the ratification of this treaty that was exerted for the cutting of the compensation of the wounded veterans, the treaty will be approved, for only eight Democratic Senators then had the political hardihood to stand out against the President.

In the recent gold-dollar devaluation bill, in opposition to the majority report of the Banking and Currency Committee, in opposition to the opinion of all leading economists, there was required only a telephone message to the majority leader that the administration wanted that legislation, and immediately two thirds of the Senate humored him without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t", although it was the most tremendous bill in its possibilities that has been before Congress in 70 years, and only one Democratic Senator had the courage to vote against it and one other Democratic Senator had the hardihood to pair against it. Therefore I take it that this Republican measure, having the support of our great Democratic President, cannot fail.

Highways are the arteries of commerce. It was Jim Hill, the great railroad builder, who said, "Give me control of the highways, and I care not who may own the land and the industries."

Speaking in behalf of the ratification of the St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, I shall attempt to be brief and to confine my argument largely to a presentation of the situation in my State, a representative State of the midcontinental interior, neither so rich in natural resources as some nor so handicapped in that direction as some others. And what I say will, I believe, correctly picture what all of these land-locked States of the interior feel and know to be a fact, that the handicaps placed upon the transportation of their goods from the point of production to the point of consumption stifle that production, whether agricultural or industrial.

A measure of permanent transportation relief must be found. Not even the great gift of the 9-foot channel of the Mississippi, which was extended to Minneapolis because of my amendment, will answer in full the demand of the Midwest for relief. Great as the influence of that avenue of commerce may be upon the future destinies of the midcontinent, it still remains the fact that it is a method of transportation to the sea, while the St. Lawrence seaway, by removal of the barriers in the St. Lawrence, brings the ocean itself directly into the heart of the continent and gives to us the most immediate, far-reaching and permanent transportation relief it is possible to obtain.

This bringing of the sea base into the heart of the continent will free the western railroad lines, those lines which base upon the Pacific and the Great Lakes, from the domination of the eastern carriers and from the overexactions made by them throughout railroad history upon the traffic moving from western lines through mideastern territory to the sea. The possession of ocean ports by Minnesota and by the other States bordering on the Great Lakes will give to us of the interior direct mercantile connection with our seaboards—Atlantic and Gulf and Pacific—and will enable us, as an agricultural and industrial area, comparable in extent of resources to none other in the world, to move forward along the lines of logical, sound, enduring development. That is a picture of the St. Lawrence seaway place and purpose in the planning which we are now making for the present and future generations that I would have Senators get clearly into their minds. I want to picture on the other hand, as briefly as I may, some of the handicaps endured by Minnesota and her sister States at the present time and the results that come therefrom.

In 1920, when the International Joint Commission held its hearings for and against the renewed proposal to jointly improve the channels of the St. Lawrence River, the State of Minnesota prepared a brief, showing the then existing position of the Midwest, and particularly of Minnesota, with reference to agriculture. At that time—and let me say that the relative percentages have changed but very little since—of the leading food necessities of the Nation, and including the nonfood staple of flax, there was produced in the seaway territory bounded by Pennsylvania on the east, by the thirty-seventh parallel on the south, and by the crest of the Rockies on the west, 70 percent of the total production of the entire Nation—all of the flax, 86 percent of the rye, 81 percent of the oats, 78 percent of the barley, 77 percent of the wheat, 69 percent of the corn, 51 percent of the potatoes, 53 percent of the hay, 46 percent of the pasturage, 48 percent of the sheep, 52 percent of the cattle, 54 percent of the dairy cows, and 63 percent of the hogs.

Taking acreages, the figures then prepared showed that Iowa devoted 83 percent of her area to such production; Illinois, 79 percent; Ohio, 74 percent; Indiana, 73 percent; Kansas, 57 percent; Missouri, 56 percent; Kentucky, 56 percent; Nebraska, 50 percent; North Dakota, 45 percent; Minnesota, 38 percent; Michigan, 35 percent; Wisconsin, 33 percent; South Dakota, 32 percent; Colorado, 6 percent; Montana, 4 percent; and Wyoming, 2 percent.

This economic survey of the agricultural resources of the seaway territory demonstrated that rather more than 50 percent of the entire area within the limits I have indicated was undeveloped and awaited the stimulus which only better transportation facilities permitting a broader marketing zone can secure. What was then said as to agriculture held, and still holds, substantially true for all industrial enterprise outside the agricultural field.

Since the figures I have recited were prepared our production, and our export as well, of wheat and other farming products of Minnesota has diminished very greatly. One of the outstanding causes for this reduction of exports lies in the fact that when we subtract the high transportation cost from the low market price we find there is nothing left for the producer. In that commodity we are undersold, largely by reason of freight differentials, by South America, Australia, India, and the Black Sea region. At that time, great as was Minnesota's apparent agricultural development, but 1 acre out of 6 of all her lands was under the plow; only 1 acre out of every 4 was in meadows and pasture; 57 percent of our entire area rated as agricultural was nonproductive.

Nearly a decade and a half has passed, and the stagnation then prophesied at these hearings has fallen upon us of Minnesota and of the entire midcontinental region with crushing weight. The Minnesota farmer, like the farmer of the Midwest generally, finds himself faced by difficulties he cannot entirely surmount by his own effort. The measures taken by the Government for his relief will themselves be ineffectual in the long run unless the permanent causes of the paralysis that has crept upon the agriculture and industries of the midcontinent are removed.

When shippers can move goods around from the Pacific through the Panama Canal to the Atlantic coast, or the other way about, more cheaply than they can move the same goods from Minnesota to either coast, it is self-evident that both the agriculture and the industries of my State stand under a cloud. So long as transportation charges exact a needlessly high toll on every ton of commerce moving into or moving out of Minnesota her prosperity will be delayed, and no Nation-wide uplift of agriculture, and no Nation-wide gift to agriculture, in the form of bonuses for reduced crops or in the refinancing of farm mortgages, will restore, or remotely attempt to restore, a parity not possible until we of the Midwest secure it by extending sea rates into the heart of the continent.

If I were to go into the matter of the agricultural handicaps placed upon my State, I should only weary the Senate by a repetition of much Senators have already heard voiced from the floor of the Senate during those hours when the agricultural problems of the Nation have been under discussion. I prefer to speak specifically of what is happening, not to the agriculture of my State but to its business, to those industries which manufacture for and serve the great agricultural areas of Minnesota and the entire Midwest. Without agriculture being prosperous these industries perish; and whether agriculture prospers or not, unless the transportation handicaps placed upon these industries, both in the obtaining and distribution of their goods, are removed so far as it may physically be possible to remove them, the industries cannot exist, certainly not under the handicaps which now obtain throughout the entire midcontinental area, as they have obtained since the opening of the Panama Canal.

I have clearly in my mind the picture of demotion of this entire region, but that picture becomes sharpened to our vision when concrete instances are taken. The demotion of agriculture, which I have already mentioned, together with the fundamental reasons for it, has reacted most disastrously upon those great enterprises which must and do find their cause for being in the agricultural life and needs of the Middle West.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the steady growth of Buffalo as a milling center, with a consequent diminution of milling in Minnesota, is directly attributable to two causes, the first being Buffalo's ability to draw Canadian wheat in bond and mill for export, thus avoiding the duty; second, because of its ability to draw, on low contract rates, supplies of wheat from the Northwest through Duluth and from the Southwest through Chicago and Milwaukee. It must be conceded that Buffalo's strategic location has something to do with this tremendous growth, but Buffalo's strategic location is solely on account of the fact that it may draw all of its supplies in the raw by use of the lowest contract water rates known on the face of the globe. Then, too, Buffalo is in the heart of a large consuming area, in which it may dispose of its surplus byproducts, whereas by-products shipped from Minnesota mills must move at high freight rates into this consuming area in competition with Buffalo.

In order to paint this picture of the true condition of my State I must remind the Senate that Minneapolis, once one of the greatest tractor-manufacturing centers in the Nation, is practically out of business in that line; that the Russell Grader Co., manufacturing road machinery, has been compelled to leave the State, bag and baggage, to engage in business elsewhere under more favorable conditions. Honesty compels me to admit the fact that the great manufacturing plant of the Minnesota Steel Machinery Co. situated in the Twin Cities stands practically idle; that the Twin Cities motor-accessory plants are doing very little; that in Duluth the Minnesota branch of the United States Steel Corporation, manufacturing nails for the midcontinental area, is operating only about 30 percent; that the great F. A. Patrick Mills in Duluth, manufacturers of woolen goods of international reputation, is completely closed down; that the Gogebic Boiler Works, that the National Iron Co., that the Clyde Iron Works, manufacturing plants employing from 300 to 1,000 people each, have all drawn their fires.

If I could take you through the great cities of my State, Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth, I would be compelled to show you great buildings with vacant windows, and upon your inquiry I would have to tell you that these buildings once were occupied by jobbing houses doing a far-flung business from the banks of the Mississippi and Lake Superior out to the Rocky Mountains. Now their doors are either locked or their business has diminished to the vanishing point.

The railroads have thrown the entire weight of their great influence against the ratification of this treaty. I am here to say that by no stretch of the imagination can its completion injure any one of the railroads that serve my State nor any other of the States west of the Mississippi.

The interests of these roads are bound up, not with the fortunes of the trunk lines of the East, which, because of a short visioned and peculiar selfishness, see in the competition of the seaway a menace to their own immediate earnings, but rather the interests of the western roads march side by side with those of the farmer and the manufacturer and the general business of the region west of the Great Lakes. But under the selfish compulsion of the eastern carriers the western roads have been driven into acquiescence in the attack made by the eastern rail and terminal interests upon this treaty.

The western carriers have been, or at least they think they have been compelled to pursue a policy of attempted increase in rates.

It is a well-recognized fact that there is a saturation point beyond which freight rates may not go and still permit the free exchange of merchandise in transportation.

Every student of transportation has noted a complete stifling in the interchange of business when freight rates on the commodities involved have gone beyond the saturation point. This is exactly the status of affairs with rail transportation in the western part of the United States today.

Commencing with the period just prior to June 25, 1918, there has been a constant and steady advance in freight rates, with one exception, which contemplated a 10-percent reduction. This, coupled with an insane mania for increased motive power plus inflated equipment, with its resulting collapse of dispatch, is the primary reason for the pitiful condition of the American railroads today. They have completely lost sight of the fact that there is something in this world worse than low freight rates, and that is a lack of business.

Illustrating how freight rates have advanced, the key rate of all rates applying between eastern territory and central territory north of the Ohio River is the first-class rate applying between Chicago and New York. Every other rate in this section, with few exceptions, is related to this basic rate on a percentage relation. This first-class rate prior to 1918 and for many, many years was 75 cents per hundred pounds. That rate today is $1.52 per 100 pounds, an increase of more than 100 percent. The all-rail rate from New York to the Twin Cities and Duluth prior to 1918 was $1.15, which had been the rate for many, many years. That rate today is $2.12, an increase of approximately 100 percent. Taking local rates, for example, prior to 1918 the distance scale of rates for 150 miles in the State of Minnesota was approximately 40 cents first class. That rate today is 81 cents, an increase of more than 100 percent. These are simply illustrative of the general situation.

There has been a constant and steady successful attempt on the part of the railroads to increase freight rates, with the result that the all-rail rates of this country today are acting as a complete estoppel to the free interchange of traffic. This is particularly true with reference to the lucrative long-haul traffic, upon which admittedly the net earnings are much more favorable to the railroads than upon short-haul merchandise traffic. The net results of the railroads' activity in increasing these freight rates has been to drive long-haul traffic to short-haul traffic, and to drive short-haul traffic to the trucks.

In following this well-defined plan and in perfecting its execution the railroads have overlooked entirely the fact that they no longer have a monopoly in transportation. There was a time when, if a passenger sought to make a visit or if merchandise had to be transported even short distances, practically the only avenue for such transportation was by means of railroad. The railroads sitting in this very enviable position were in a position without impunity to dictate the fare or charge which they should receive for such transportation service. Those conditions of affairs no longer exist.

The railroads of the country do not operate as a monopoly in transportation because the trucks have entered the field and are making serious inroads, particularly in their merchandise traffic for short hauls, distances up to 250 miles. This inroad of a very active competitor was ignored completely by the railroads for the first 6 or 8 years of its advent into United States transportation, and during all this period, even though the handwriting on the wall was manifest, they did not deviate one iota from their well-set and fixed plan of increasing freight rates, maintaining extensive lobbies before State legislatures to legislate the trucks off the highways, and at the same time maintaining agencies throughout the United States for the dissemination of propaganda directed principally against three things: (1) Truck transportation; (2) water transportation; and (3) amending existing Federal legislation against the railroads.

Without taking up in detail any of the contentions of the railroads with reference to truck transportation and with reference to relief from unfavorable Federal legislation, it is manifest that the railroads have maintained and are maintaining today, not only within their own ranks and through their own labor organizations, but through certain organizations of shippers, a very effective and far-reaching propaganda for the sole purpose of preventing the people from securing the benefits of cheap water transportation.

Indeed, it is an unusual state of affairs when these same railroads have approached this administration through one group and have borrowed tremendous sums of money through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the rehabilitation of their financial structure, and at the same time are using—can it be possible?—some of this administration's money to defeat the recognized and admitted plans of the Government for the building and maintenance of all avenues of transportation, which include not only railroads, but water lines and truck lines.

What the railroads of my State must have in order to exist is more tonnage movement, not higher freight rates. Railroads cannot exist on freight rates; they can only exist out of the income of actual commerce going back and forth, and unless the rates—and I refer to the total rate from the point of production to the open-marketing areas of the world—are sufficiently low to permit agriculture and industry to compete actively for the trade of the world, whether upon our own continent or elsewhere, then business cannot exist, and the railroads simply cannot get the traffic.

It was conservatively estimated by the State department of agriculture in the presentation of the Minnesota case, to which I have alluded, that in 1920 Minnesota, with a population of around 2,000,000 people, was producing the foodstuffs necessary to the existence of seven and a half million people. This brings to my mind the fact that there necessarily exists a tremendous outward flow of the products of Minnesota. It makes a most important difference to every farmer, to every manufacturer, to every business man, in my State, whether the distance at which his goods can reach an ocean rate is an average distance of 200 miles, as it would be if the St. Lawrence Channel were completed, or whether it is some 1,500 miles away, as it is at the present time.

The differential in cost between carrying goods by water and the cost of carriage by land is so great that it needs only to be mentioned. The Australian wool grower puts his wool into Boston cheaper than can the Minnesota wool grower. The canner on the Pacific coast lays his goods down at our Atlantic ports for less than the canner of the Minnesota Valley is able to do.

Some years ago there was instituted between Duluth and New York a refrigeration service by lake and rail, carrying principally eggs and butter. The result of the experimental shipments that were made about the year 1923 or 1924 is that today more than 70,000 tons are moved by that combined water and rail route rather than all-rail service, at a saving in freight and service charges of approximately $100 per car.

Need I explain that the benefits of this water-and-rail combined movement have gone back very largely to the farmers who stand behind the Minnesota creameries, and is it necessary that I should say that when these farmers have more money in their pockets, that saving is expended for the cotton that is grown in the South, for the products of the textile mills in the East, for automobiles produced in Michigan, for tires made in Ohio, for fruit grown on the Pacific and Gulf coasts, for all the thousand and one necessities of life?

If I am told that this saving amounts to a very little thing, let me remind the Senate that $700,000 saved on butter alone in 1 year's shipments and devoted to actual necessities, rather than to an unnecessary expenditure, is a very vital thing to the farmers of my State in this hour of national farm distress.

I think I have brought to the Senate a concrete picture that needs no great elaboration. The farming business of my State has been operating for years on its stored-up capital. New houses and barns are needed, paint and fencing, machinery, automobiles, everything within and without the home that goes to make for comfort and for ease of operation, and for continued production and prosperity, will be required in large amounts if we are to go on and continue farming on a level of decent existence. The same situation will be found not only in the country and community towns, but in our larger cities. This means sales and pay rolls for every State in the Union.

The years of the depression have taken terrific toll of the material things that make for comfort in life. The replacements which should come, and must come, will come the sooner, prosperity will be reached in a shorter time, if there is before us the assurance that when this work of rebuilding is done, we shall have the best possible transportation outlets for the things our hands create.

May I express the belief that the considered judgment of the Senate will not fail to vision a future of renewed prosperity when, as in the past, the markets of the world will be seeking the things we create, and we will be needing many things that are found only abroad? May I picture a time coming, and not so far away, when all through the Middle West there will be prosperous factory towns serving a greatly increased number of people, creating profitable labor and labor incomes, and thus in turn creating for the farmer new outlets for his products close at hand?

The greatest single advance made in economic history was the opening of the Atlantic by those daring voyagers who crossed that unknown ocean and discovered the Americas. Now, less than 500 years after, an entire continent has caught the vision of opening within its own borders an extension of that Atlantic which will give to North America an ocean equivalent to the Mediterranean, upon whose shores for long ages the civilizations of the world stood. Who can fail to believe that when we shall have transformed the Great Lakes into a western arm of the Atlantic the streams of commerce will flow both inward and outward, and a new era of prosperity equivalent to the benefits which flowed from the discovery of America by Europe will again dawn upon the world?

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I had not definitely decided to make any remarks upon the bill now before the Senate until I heard the interesting address of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] delivered yesterday. I have had the honor for some 5 years to serve on the Judiciary Committee with the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. During most of that time he has been chairman of that committee. I think it is impossible for anyone to work with him very long without having a very high regard for him and a high regard for his earnestness and his great desire to perform an important work as he sees it.

We have had before that committee during those years, as I recollect, a bill similar to this, with the Senator from Nebraska urging that it be reported favorably to the Senate. At no time, so far as I recall, did he hesitate to give to every person who wanted to be heard a full opportunity to express his views; so that I have no complaint at all about what has happened in the committee with respect to that matter.

But I might say at the same time that while I love the Senator from Nebraska much, I fear him more. If I may be permitted to explain what I mean by that, I would say that his notion about what ought to be done to make the country a better place in which to live is so different from mine that I have always been afraid that if his ideas prevailed it would be disastrous to the country. I am sure he is just as certain that if the ideas I entertain shall prevail the country will be worse off than it is now.

The point I am making is that we have different views. Heretofore my views have pretty generally prevailed, or, putting it another way, my own opinions have pretty generally agreed with what has been done. But during the whole of this time, I repeat, I have been afraid of men like the Senator from Nebraska, and I am more afraid today than I ever was before, because I remember that now there is in the White House an Executive, popular indeed, who, so far as I am able to observe, sees eye to eye with the Senator from Nebraska.

Moreover, that is not the only danger I see, and that is not the only reason why I am more afraid than I have been in the years gone by. It seems to me that Senators on the other side of the aisle see eye to eye with him too, which means that his ideas of government are ultimately to prevail. Oh, I realize that there is occasionally a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who blinks a little as he tries to see the light as the Senator from Nebraska sees it, but after all it is at this time that the things which the Senator from Nebraska has urged upon the country for years and years are to be accomplished. He has built up a following in the country equaled by that of none whom I know, and is about to realize the things he has been preaching. I am not uttering this in any complaining way. I have great admiration for the man who has enough in him to stick to that which he believes until he finally convinces the country that he is right.

So it is that in this particular case I am frightened because we are going to do what? We are going to make an attack upon the provisions of the third article of the Constitution relating to the judicial powers of the Government. Legislative powers have been gradually taken away from us during the last 11 months.

I have great sympathy for the persons involved in the Montana case, about which the Senator from Nebraska spoke. I think all of us have. I have great sympathy for those who lost money by the Insull Corporation that was mentioned so eloquently by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] yesterday. With some sarcasm, it seemed to me, they both talked about the crocodile tears that are being shed over here in this little corner of the Senate because certain persons interested in utility corporations might have their property taken away from them without due process of law if the pending bill shall be passed. It is wholly immaterial, to my mind, whether the woman loses her property because some person has robbed her or whether she loses it because we have taken away from her under the Constitution a right which she believed she had. The difference, if I may be permitted to say, between the two is that in one instance she can hold directly responsible the person who robbed her while in the other instance she can look to the Congress of the United States and say to it, "You have given this opportunity to rob me."

The point I am making, and the only point, is relative to the three great divisions of the power of government contained in the first three articles of the Constitution, the first of which relates to legislative power, the second to the executive, and the third to the judicial. The point I want to make is that we have almost eliminated the power of the first, and this bill is the entering wedge to the elimination of the power of the third.

I desire to invite the attention of the Senate to the time when this legislative power began to slip away from us. I want to invite attention to what the importance of it was. In order to do it I would like to read the message which the President sent to the Congress on March 10, 1933. It is not very long and most of it I think is worth reading in order that Senators' recollections may be refreshed. It is in this language:

> The Nation is deeply gratified by the immediate response given yesterday by the Congress to the necessity for drastic action to restore and improve our banking system. A like necessity exists with respect to the finances of the Government itself which requires equally courageous, frank, and prompt action.
>
> For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.
>
> For the fiscal year 1931 the deficit was $462,000,000.
>
> For the fiscal year 1932 it was $2,472,000,000.
>
> For the fiscal year 1933 it will probably exceed $1,200,000,000.
>
> For the fiscal year 1934, based on the appropriation bills passed by the last Congress and the estimated revenues, the deficit will probably exceed $1,000,000,000 unless immediate action is taken.
>
> Thus we shall have piled up an accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000.
>
> With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed. Our Government's house is not in order, and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.
>
> Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rest the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects these fundamental human values. It therefore becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.
>
> Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.
>
> It is too late for a leisurely approach to this problem. We must not wait to act several months hence. The emergency is accentuated by the necessity of meeting great refunding operations this spring.
>
> We must move with a direct and resolute purpose now. The Members of the Congress and I are pledged to immediate economy.
>
> I am therefore assuming that you and I are in complete agreement as to the urgent necessity, and my constitutional duty is to advise you as to the methods for obtaining drastic retrenchment at this time.
>
> I am not speaking to you in general terms. I am pointing out a definite road.
>
> The last Congress enacted legislation relating to the reorganization and elimination of executive agencies, but the economies thus to be effected are small when viewed in the light of the great deficit for the next fiscal year. They will not meet the pressing needs of our credit situation. Provision for additional saving is essential, and therefore I am asking the Congress today for new legislation laying down broad principles for the granting of pensions and other veteran benefits, and giving to the Executive the authority to prescribe the administrative details.

Further along in the message he said:

> In accord with the same purpose of substantial justice I request also the enactment of legislation relating to the salaries of civil and military employees of the Government. This would repeal the existing furlough plan, substituting therefor a general principle and authorizing the Executive to make application of this principle. The proper legislative function is to fix the amount of expenditure, the means by which it is to be raised, and the general principles under which the expenditures are to be made. The details of expenditure, particularly in view of the great present emergency, can be more wisely and equitably administered through the Executive. The flexibility of the measures which I am proposing is not only practical but proceeds along the road of constitutional government.
>
> Such economies which can be made will, it is true, affect some of our citizens; but the failure to make them will affect all of our citizens. The very stability of our Government itself is concerned, and when that is concerned the benefits of some must be subordinated to the needs of all.
>
> When a great danger threatens our basic security it is my duty to advise the Congress of the way to preserve it. In so doing I must be fair not only to the few but to the many. It is in this spirit that I appeal to you. If the Congress chooses to vest me with this responsibility, it will be exercised in a spirit of justice to all, of sympathy to those who are in need, and of maintaining inviolate the basic welfare of the United States.
>
> I ask that this legislation go into effect at once without even waiting for the beginning of the next fiscal year. I give you assurance that if this is done, there is reasonable prospect that within a year the income of the Government will be sufficient to cover the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. President, under the pressure of that plea, with the assurance from the President of the United States that it was necessary for us to pass some such legislation as was suggested in the message, we gave to him unlimited power with respect to the pensions paid to the veterans, and some limited power with respect to reduction of the compensation of employees of the Federal Government. We did it under the protest of many in the Senate who insisted that it would be unfair to the veterans, it would be unfair to the Federal employees; but, being asured by the President of the United States that it was necessary in order to save the credit of the Nation, we gave away that legislative power to him and asked him to do the best he could with it.

I shall not discuss what the President did under that authority. This message was dated March 10, 1933. In it he stated that the deficit for 1933 would probably be $1,200,000,000. His Budget message sent to this session of Congress shows the actual figures to be $3,051,670,116.

The President states:

> For the fiscal year 1934, based on the appropriation bills passed by the last Congress, and the estimated revenues—

Passed by a Congress before he was in power, a Congress with which he had nothing to do, and it seems to me he intends specifically to call attention to that fact. Because of those appropriation bills, he says that the deficit—

> Will probably exceed $1,000,000,000 unless immediate action is taken.

Indicating, if you please, that if we should pass this legislation he would then be able to live up to the platform of the Democratic Party and cut the appropriations by 25 percent, and save this billion-dollar deficit which he anticipated would occur in 1934 unless some such drastic action was taken.

Well, we gave him the authority. We gave it to him, some of us grudgingly, but we gave it to him because of the importance of it and the necessity of it; and in his Budget message, instead of the deficit being a billion dollars, he reports that it will exceed $7,309,068,211.

Mr. President, what did we do next?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The deficit of $7,300,000,000 has been excused on the ground that it was due to emergency expenditures, and therefore should be classed as capital expenditures and not regular or routine expenditures.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in the message of the 10th of March the President stated that in 3 years we had accumulated a deficit of $4,000,000,000. Evidently the President at that time did not think of emergency legislation or expenditures, as is now being stated in connection with this large deficit, because out of the $4,000,000,000 of deficit accumulated in the 3 preceding years $1,400,000,000 went for loans to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on good security, $350,000,000 went for distribution to farmers on a matter that some of us questioned, and at least $700,000,000 went for public-works construction as emergency matters. In other words, in those 3 years, of an accumulation of $4,000,000,000 in the way of deficit, more than half of it, almost two thirds of it, was due to emergency legislation or emergency appropriations.

If those amounts are to be counted out today as emergency appropriations, and therefore not a deficit, then the criticism of March 4 was unjust, because most of that deficit was due to this particular item.

What I wanted to call the Senator's attention to is that it is being claimed everywhere that the tremendous deficit—which is not $7,300,000,000, but will be nearer $9,000,000,000 before we get through this year—is due to emergency; but if it is not critical now it was not critical during the 3 years of which the President complained when he sent the message.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator for his statement; but I should like to say, in reply, that in the remarks I make to the Senate I am not going to discuss in any detail the deficit, or what caused it. The point I make is that we gave extraordinary powers to the President because he insisted upon it, and because it was necessary in order to save the credit of the Nation. That is the one and only point I make with respect to this deficit. I called attention to how far the President was wrong, of course, to show how little effect it had upon the credit of the Nation to pass that power over to him.

Now I desire to pass on, and I do not want to occupy much time. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is anxious to get a vote upon this bill; but I do desire to call attention to the Public Works Administration.

Senators will remember that we appropriated for that purpose $3,300,000,000. That was upon the same theory, that the President needed the money in order to give life to the industries of the Nation, in order to help the unemployed, and so forth. But in that appropriation is a power which the Congress ought by all means to have kept within its own control. We gave the President power to construct naval vessels. Do the people of this country expect us to give to the Executive in a general bill like this authority to construct naval vessels when he pleases and how he pleases?

We gave the President authority to prepare for aircraft defense. Under it he could purchase all the aircraft he pleased. He could provide equipment for the Army. He could grant to States and municipalities large sums out of this $3,300,000,000 without any particular rule being laid down by Congress as to how the money should be applied. Under this authority he could condemn whatever property might be needed for the purpose of carrying out the act. He could postpone the construction of public buildings, and he did postpone the construction of buildings—buildings that had been approved by previous administrations, some of them, like one in my own State, where the Government had spent $500,000 for a Federal building at a time when the Treasury had the money to build it, where the architects had been selected and were drawing the plans for the building, and in a State where the help was badly needed; but, with all the pressure we could bring to bear upon the administration, it was not possible, and has not yet been possible, to have that public building constructed.

In addition to that, the President had authority to go out and build irrigation projects, to take care of irrigation projects, to make more land available for the farm, and to increase the farm products of the land.

That is not all. Under the same law we have seen the minimum wages of all industries fixed. We have seen the hours of labor fixed without any specific rule being laid down by the Congress of the United States. We gave the President authority to prevent people from doing business at all except under a license. We gave him authority to place embargoes on foreign goods. We gave him authority to suspend the antitrust laws. We gave him authority to prohibit interstate commerce in oil under certain conditions. In other words, we permitted him to say that from Washington alone all the industries of the Nation should be controlled.

Is that or is it not a legislative authority which we ought to have kept? Have we not put ourselves in a position where it is almost impossible for us to do anything with respect to these various powers which we possessed and which we have surrendered to him?

Then there are many others. There is the C.W.A., where 4,000,000 people were placed at work under an Executive order that demanded that the Administrator selected by the President should have it done within 2 weeks. Without any projects being laid out at all, he insisted that the people of this Nation must be given jobs. They must be taken off the municipal pay rolls and the various charitable pay rolls and put somewhere else. They must be given jobs with the Government of the United States; and 4,000,000 of them were directed to be placed upon the Government pay rolls within 2 weeks.

Does not anybody who has viewed the matter carefully see the impossibility of getting rid of that one administration of the Government? How is it possible for the Congress to refuse to go on and contribute more money to keep these people employed on the flimsy kind of jobs they are doing, many of them with no possible advantage to the Nation and with no possible advantage to the communities in which they live?

You and I know it is true. You know that we cannot justify the employment of all the people who have been put upon the Government pay roll if we take into consideration the amount of work they are doing for the Government, or for any municipality, or for any State, or for anybody else.

The answer which is made is that these people are hungry and it is better to give them a job than to give them a dole. I do not believe that is true. I think it is useless to start on a project like that, employing 4,000,000 people, and certainly it must be admitted by all of us that it will be impossible for us to continue it indefinitely; but how are we going to stop it? That is the great problem. If the question had come before Congress, where it could have been debated and carefully considered by the Senate and by the House of Representatives and by the country as a whole, it seems to me we might have worked out some very much better plan than that. The present condition is entirely due to the fact that we surrendered our own authority to the Executive of the Nation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do.

Mr. LONG. I have heard lots of criticisms made of the expenditure of State and municipal funds. Without doubt many of those criticisms were justified; but in all my life

I have never seen money so wantonly spent, with so little result in return, as the money that has been spent by the Federal Government. We shall never again be able to go out and cite the Federal Government as an example of how money ought to be spent, because never in the most rampant days of boss rule, as corrupt and rotten as it has been, has anything been done that would hold a candle to what has been going on lately—so much so that we in Louisiana had to ask them to take 3,000 men off the highways of the State. We have been accused of every kind of graft in the world, but we asked them to take those 3,000 men away from us and not let them be on the roll where we would be chargeable with the kind of things that are going on, the responsibility of which is to be placed at nobody's door.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator for his contribution. I do not at this moment, however, desire to discuss that subject. I do not desire to call attention here to what seem to me the many foolish things that are being done. It seems to me the country must be shocked when they find that 50 manicurists are being put upon the Federal pay roll, and are being sent around to various institutions to manicure the hands of persons who are confined in those institutions. I could cite dozens of such instances. That, however, is not the point I desire to make. I am only showing how dangerous a precedent is being set, and how impossible it will be for us to get away from it.

Let us take another one, the A.A.A. Here is a great emergency measure. Here is a measure which we passed for the purpose of helping the farmers, and we find that from Washington Government officials are controlling the amount of cotton that can be planted in the South. They are determining how far apart the rows shall be planted. Not only are the number of acres to be planted being determined, but how many rows there shall be to the acre. They are doing the same thing with the corn. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I suppose there is the same regulation about the number of grains that can be planted to each hill. The same is true with respect to the wheat.

While all of this has been going on with respect to the farms, while they are undertaking to reduce the farm acreage and the farm production, the P.W.A. is going into some western territory and constructing irrigation plants which will make it possible for more farms to be established for the people out there, where additional farm products may be raised and food be brought to the people who are hungry.

Does anyone believe, Mr. President, that we ought to have given to one man the authority to do all that; the authority—I suppose he has it—to buy 25,000,000 acres of land in this country and take it out of cultivation? All of that the Congress has passed over to the Executive, and I repeat, having done that, the legislative branch of the Government is practically gone. There is nothing left for it to do except to vote appropriations to carry out these various schemes.

Then comes along another piece of legislation. It is said that if we are going to change the gold content of the dollar, if we are going to add any more money to the circulating medium of the country, the Congress itself will not pass upon it; that it is not necessary for the Congress to do it; that we have an Executive in whom we have confidence. We are asked to pass our authority to coin money and fix the value thereof to the President of the United States. If it be necessary to issue a lot of paper money, it is suggested that we give that authority to the President, and let him do it when he pleases to do it. If it be necessary to stabilize the exchange of the world, let us put into the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury $2,000,000,000 in order that that may be done.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we have entered upon a dangerous course. We begun it because of the urgent message of the President which I have read to the Senate, calling attention to the condition of the Nation and the credit of the Nation, and the necessity of doing something like this in order to save that credit. That was followed up by other emergency measures; and we have continued and continued, and we now find that a lot of the things that were called emergencies are to be written into the permanent law of the land, or at least they will be left on the statute books so that it will be the practice and policy of the land in the future.

Having done that, Mr. President, we have now reached another important thing under our Constitution. We have come now to the third article of the Constitution, which relates to the judicial power of the Nation. I desire to read to the Senate what the Senator from Nebraska said yesterday. He referred to a Kentucky case and said that the courts of Kentucky would have decided the case in a certain way, but that it came to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court decided it in an entirely different way. Here is what the Senator from Nebraska said with respect to that—

> I will compare the Kentucky view with the Supreme Court view before any honest-minded man and not be afraid of the result of his decision.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. Before the Senator gets into the discussion of that case, will the Senator yield in connection with a statement the Senator previously made with reference to the expenditure of money?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Treasury statement of January 27, 1934, shows a balance on that date of $462,000,000 plus. The Treasury statement of February 1, 1934, shows a Treasury balance of $4,434,000,000 plus. I should like to know whether or not the Senator from Delaware thinks that the Government can just make money grow safely in the Treasury, as is suggested by these figures.

Mr. HASTINGS. I suppose they have written in there what is called the "profit" in devaluing the gold dollar. That is where they get that additional money. But I assume that no person in the land can be deceived thereby. I do not mean by that that any effort has been made to deceive us, but I assume that all persons who are interested in wondering, as every thinking man must be wondering, how we are ever going to pay this debt, must realize that even though it be $4,000,000,000, that is but a small fraction of the great deficit that is being piled up day by day by the Government of the United States.

Mr. DICKINSON. It just seems to me as though the policy of the Treasury is that if you want more fire, you should just cut the log in two, and it will give you more heat. Of course, if they cannot get more heat by cutting the log in two once, I suppose they can cut it in two again and again, and there can be only one result from that.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be permitted by the Senator to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Delaware, both of these eminent Senators, are now declaring against what they feel is the increasing amount of expenditure by the Federal Government. Will the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Delaware please state how much of this money the State of Iowa has asked for and taken and how much she has appropriated to herself, and how much the State of Delaware has taken to herself, and are the Senators ready to return it to the Treasury?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will answer the question, Mr. President, by saying that the very suggestion of the Senator from Illinois shows how terrible this legislation is. There has been created here the greatest "pork barrel" that has ever been seen in the Government of the United States. Every Senator and every Representative has been put in the position where his people back home say, "We have gotten so much money out of it, and therefore it becomes your duty to sustain it and see that we get that much more out of it." In other words, the State of Illinois and the State of Iowa and the State of Delaware are each doing what they can to grab out of this "pork barrel" all the money they can get; and I say that is a dangerous situation, because sometime all the States and the people of all the States of this Nation will have to see to it that the money is paid back.

I am surprised at the reason suggested by the Senator from Illinois as to why we should approve this policy. It is the very thing that is being done now. It is the very thing that is going to be urged upon us later in the day by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], when he puts before us the $950,000,000 bill. He is going to insist, "Do you not want part of this money? Do you not expect to get your share of this money; and, therefore, what are the people back home going to say to you, if you do not go along and vote with us and put that legislation through?" That is just the sickening part of the whole business.

Mr. LEWIS. I answer, the sickening part of the whole business is the attitude of the eminent Senator from Delaware after Delaware got her share, and after Iowa appropriated hers; and Iowa presented to the world the sickening spectacle of a judge of a court being held up in the street by his own people, forced to his knees in order to surrender the judgment of his sovereign tribunal, and disgrace the whole theory of common justice. Not until Delaware had gone through a very large appropriation on behalf of her people did we hear from either of these eminent Senators their protest. Why not protest before they received their allotment, or why should not their allotment be returned? Why were they so willing to have it, to have their States accept it and now to continue to keep it, and then the eminent Senators complain of it? That, Mr. President, is the sickening spectacle, the utterly disgusting inconsistency of the attitude of eminent Senators on this floor, such as we are witnessing hourly in this present day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HASTINGS. I desire, Mr. President, to answer the Senator from Illinois, and then I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I should like to say that I have the greatest sympathy in the world for the Senator from Illinois——

Mr. LEWIS. He needs none.

Mr. HASTINGS. I appreciate that; but I know that his State does. That is the reason why I expressed my sympathy to the Senator. I know that for years the school teachers of the city of Chicago have not been able to get their pay regularly; I know that the police officers of Chicago have not been able to get their pay regularly; and I have been expecting them to come to the Federal Government and insist that this is one of the things the Federal Government ought to do, under the plea that those people are going hungry and that Illinois and the city of Chicago cannot pay their own debts.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think I ought to yield again to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. We did what the Senator has suggested he expected; we came to this tribunal. We presented the facts. I was one of the spokesmen. The school teachers were walking the streets. They were hungry. They fed their little morsel of food to the children under their tutelage, who were likewise starving. They sought some aid from this Government, and under the pretense of one of those technical objections that the Federal Government could not extend and advance its money to municipalities, relief was denied. But in the meantime, to the very large institutions, which were in legitimate distress, aid to the full extent of $3,000,000,000 was advanced, and these very large financial institutions, upon the theory that they were in peril, were provided for within the law. I therefore say to my able friend from Delaware, it was not the miserable only who sought provision. It was the very large and capacious organizations of large financial responsibility which sought the money, and obtained it for legitimate uses, let us say. Therefore these necessities to which the Senator alludes applied very generally in all the States, and to all forms of business, and these have drained from the Government very large sums to provide themselves with. I am unable to say that up to the present time they have been able to pay that money back, and I am able to agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who wishes for a moment to interrogate, when he made the remark from the floor, when the R.F.C. bill was presented to the Senate, that if something were not hastily done a large number of those very capable institutions would pass into the hands of receivers.

I ask my friend, then, Is there any difference in principle between those who were the poor school teachers and those who were in humble circumstances, and who were in distress, seeking the relief, and the large institutions who obtained their relief to rescue them from receivership?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator spoke of the Civil Works appropriation bill which will probably be acted upon today—I hope it will be acted upon today—a bill which, I will say, was reported by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Appropriations, as I recall it. The members of the committee from the Senator's side of the aisle voted for it, as did those from our side of the aisle. Is the Senator going to vote against the Civil Works appropriation bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. I say this to the Senator from Tennessee, if I had made as many speeches on economy as I have heard from the Senator from Tennessee, I think I would vote against the bill, regardless of the effect it might have.

Mr. McKELLAR. But how is the Senator going to vote? Will the Senator answer the question? I will say that I am going to make another speech on economy within a few days, and I invite the Senator to be present, because I am going to have something to say in which I think the Senator will be interested.

Mr. HASTINGS. I shall be interested in it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from New York wait one minute?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator from New York allow the Senator from Delaware first, to say whether he is going to vote for the Civil Works bill? It seems in some confusion.

Mr. HASTINGS. Who is in some confusion?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Delaware has not answered the question, and I should like to know whether or not he is going to vote for the Civil Works bill, which he inferentially denounced a moment or two ago.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will give the same answer that I give to all persons who urge me beforehand to vote for bills: I always wait until I hear the speech of the Senator who has the bill in charge before deciding how I shall vote. I am sure after that shall have been done in this instance, I will be able to answer the question, but not before.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not wait to hear from the Senator from Tennessee, who has the bill referred to in charge, before criticizing it just a moment ago.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, well, I may vote for it, but I shall not stop criticizing it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Just a moment, please. It is not inconsistent to criticize a bill and to vote for it at the same time. I have repeatedly said I agree that no man in this country must be permitted to go hungry, and if it be true that we must furnish the money from the Federal Treasury, I have no complaint about that, but what I do complain about is that the party in power has inaugurated a system of pretending to put 4,000,000 people on the Federal pay roll when half of them are doing nothing that is at all constructive. That is what I am complaining about; I say that is a bad system, and when those in control undertake to "let go of that bear", whoever has charge of it at the time, whoever has hold of it, will find great difficulty, because the administration is not going to relieve unemployment by putting 4,000,000 people on the C.W.A. pay roll; and the unemployed might just as well so understand. It may be, and I think the chances are that it is true, that the number of Democratic voters in this country will be greatly increased by the C.W.A. program; but it is not the best way to take care of unemployment, and it is not the best way to take care of those who are cold and hungry.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has in his possession a list of the projects which have been undertaken under the C.W.A. program, which he so severely criticizes as being useless and wasteful work?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have in mind, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to have the Senator refer to the record, because generalities do not aid us at all but are apt to mislead. Has the Senator a list of the projects before him for which expenditures are being made and upon which many citizens of our country are employed?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, a list of the ones to which I refer is not in existence. Does the Senator think there is any project in the files of the Government authorizing the employment of 50 beauticians, or whatever they may be called, or 50 manicurists down in Georgia who are going around various institutions there painting the faces, washing the hair, and trimming the nails of women confined in those institutions? Does the Senator think he will find on record the project which involves the employment of musicians in Ohio who have been assigned to teach music to various persons in penal institutions there? Does he think that he will find on record the projects in my State under which men are going around trying to eliminate the tick in the woods in January 1934? [Laughter in the galleries.] Does the Senator think he will find anything like that of record?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that they are here by the courtesy of the Senate, and any demonstration of approval or disapproval is absolutely prohibited by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not say that all the C.W.A. projects are bad.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that if they are not a matter of record, then the projects do not exist.

Mr. HASTINGS. All I know is that individuals engaged in such activities are on the Government pay roll, and that is what I am complaining about.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator want people to starve? Is that his idea?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; but I do not want the administration to be pretending to be doing something constructive in the name of charity when it is not constructive. If it is a dole, say it is a dole, and give the unemployed the money to which they are entitled.

Mr. WAGNER. As a matter of fact, I should like to say to the Senator, it is not a dole; and he will find that the projects, if he will take the time to examine the list of them, are very useful, of great social service to the country, and many of them of great service to the communities where they are being carried on. All this talk about wasteful projects is misleading. What would the Senator do for the 15,000,000 people who were unemployed on the 4th of March, the day President Roosevelt was inaugurated? We have at least reduced their number to 6,000,000. Is the Senator opposed to a program which gradually is absorbing the unemployed and putting them back into industry and upon projects which are of great social service to our country? What would the Senator do, or what did the Senator do, may I ask?

Mr. HASTINGS. What I would do in the first place would be to have the Congress of the United States say how it shall be done. I am complaining because we have given up our authority to the Executive. That is the complaint I am making, and the only point I am making in this argument; and, except for the interruptions, that is all I would have said about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator being a part of Congress, what would his plan be? If the Congress had to say where each dollar of this money should be expended and for what projects, what would the Senator's plan be?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am quite certain that I could devise no plan that would be satisfactory to the administration, and I am quite satisfied that it would be useless for me to propose a plan that was not satisfactory to the administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Therefore the Senator has none?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, I am not running this Government; I am only sitting here as one of a small minority in the Senate trying to help the majority run the Government by criticizing wherever I think I ought to criticize what is being done. The criticism I offer now is that the Congress has given up its authority to the Executive of the Nation, a thing that it ought not to have done and a thing that goes a long way toward destroying the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator voted for that, I believe?

Mr. HASTINGS. Voted for what?

Mr. BARKLEY. For the appropriation which he is now criticizing.

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not; but I did vote for the economy bill; I did it upon the assumption that we were going to have a billion deficit at the end of the year unless I did so vote, and I was trying to save that deficit. What I am troubled about now is, instead of saving a deficit of a billion dollars, I find the deficit running up to $7,309,000,000, which indicates to me that I made a serious mistake when I voted for the economy bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator also made a very vigorous denunciation, as I recall, of the National Recovery Act, and then voted for it. Is it his purpose now to make a denunciation of the bill which is soon to come before the Senate and then vote for it?

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not vote for the bill. I wish Senators on the other side would wait until we reach that bill, and then find out what I am going to do about it. We have a bill now pending before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator brought up this subject before the Civil Works bill is under consideration. He criticizes the program and makes a speech against the bill before it has been taken up.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield further; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will not yield further, because the Senator from California is anxious to secure a vote on the pending bill, and I wish to conclude my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield further.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I will read from the RECORD an extract from the remarks made yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska, with respect to a case in Kentucky, in connection with which he said:

> I will compare the Kentucky view with the Supreme Court view before any honest-minded man and not be afraid of the result of his decision.
>
> Talk about justice! Those who are talking about getting justice for the poor widows and orphans under this bill ought to go somewhere else than the United States Senate to shed their crocodile tears. Justice! How long will the people of the United States submit to the kind of justice they are getting now and which this bill seeks to remedy? How long are we going to proceed before we realize what is going on over the country, that there is dissatisfaction with the delay in Federal courts, that there is unnecessary expense in the Federal courts? How long are we going to live before we realize the iniquity of these injunctions prohibiting a State from enforcing orders that apply to property within the State? How long are we going to hide our heads in the sand and not know what is actually taking place?
>
> This is one of the elements that enter into the cost of living in every home in the land. In my judgment the time is not far distant when in one way or another the people are going to stop this duplication of courts, are going to prevent a process by which a corporation may drag some matter out in long litigation, and wear out its opponent with expense and delay. Honest people will not submit much longer to this injustice. They are crying aloud and if we do not hear the cry it will be the worse for us when it gets so loud that it cannot longer be denied.

Then the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] interrupted the Senator from Nebraska and referred to certain cases and suggested that the remedy for getting rid of long litigation in connection with public utilities was public ownership. The Senator from Nebraska agreed with that. Well, that brings up a different notion as to the best way to treat public utilities—whether it is best for the Government to own the utilities or for the municipalities to own them or whether they ought to be left in private hands. I have no complaint with anybody who entertains the public-ownership view. I have not any doubt, however, that we are fast approaching it in this country; the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Nebraska both agree that it ought to be brought about; but I want to ask those who care nothing about the Constitution and those who paid no attention to my argument with respect to the unconstitutionality of the gold bill whether or not they are satisfied when the Government shall take over the public utilities to say upon what basis pay shall be made for them? I have no doubt there are some in the United States Senate who are willing to say that when they shall be taken over the President of the United States shall fix the price at so much per unit of horsepower or so much for this particular kind of unit or so much for that, and they would at the same time take away from the persons who own the utilities the right to go into the Federal courts and determine whether or not the property has been taken from them unlawfully.

I have no complaint, I repeat; if the Government wants to take their property, it has a right to take it; but, under our form of government and under the Constitution, which still exists up to this time, in that respect, at least, the Government is compelled to pay just compensation for property so taken. Here in this bill we are undertaking to take away from the Federal courts one power which article III of the Constitution gives them:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution.

All of us who have studied any law at all, all thinking people everywhere, have believed that when a question is raised under the Constitution, there is a right to go into the Federal court. If we take that right away because some utility has done somebody wrong, if we take it away because some utility has dragged out litigation in a way that is unjust to someone else, if we take it away from them because we do not like them, then, when next are we going to find some other group that we do not like and take it away from them, too?

So far as I can see—and I am not certain but that the Senator from Nebraska will agree with this suggestion—there is no reason at all why we should not abolish the district and circuit courts of this Nation entirely if we are going to enact legislation such as this, which would deprive the people of the opportunity to have determined a Federal question in the Federal district courts. Why not? Oh, it is argued—and so far as I know it is true—the Congress can abolish every one of the Federal courts except the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Senator from Nebraska says he is tired of duplication of courts; and, so far as I know, he may be right, and it might work all right. If it is desired to get rid of the Constitution, if there is no regard for it, if there is no regard for article III, then wipe it out entirely and leave only the Supreme Court of the United States. When that shall be done, let every State court decide for itself whether it is against or with the Constitution of the United States. Let there be a decision in Delaware of one kind, a decision in Rhode Island of another kind, and a decision in Nebraska of another kind, so that nobody will be compelled to follow anybody else. That is what will happen when, in order to get rid of the district court and the circuit court of the United States, we shall eliminate and do away with a very important part of the Constitution.

I ask the Senator from California to pardon me for delaying his measure sufficiently long to make these remarks; but the point I am making, and the only point I make, is that what we have done during the past 11 months is, for all practical purposes, to do away with the legislative branch of the Government. That is what I am afraid of here. My State in its whole history has had but one rate case. I happened to be on the side of the people in that case and not on the side of the utilities. I have absolutely no interest in the utilities; I would not stand here and defend the utilities; but so long as I am here I do expect to stand and defend, so far as I am able, the Constitution of the United States, which, from my point of view, it is exceedingly important to preserve in order that the poor man as well as the wealthy may be protected in this land of ours. That is what I am begging for, and I am afraid this is the first knock at the door.

This is the first attack so far as this particular article is concerned. Here is where we began to chip at the foundation, and when we get through with this somebody else will knock at another stone and somebody else will knock at another, and after a while we will find the third article of the Constitution falling and the people will have no protection. I do not care whether it be widows or whether it be orphans, I do not care whether it be the rich or whether it be the poor, we all would like to know that that living instrument still is there for our protection, and when we do know it I think we will be able to sleep more soundly and the country will be able better to get back on its feet and to go its proud way, as it has gone for 150 years.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator stressed the point that there ought to be review by the Federal court of a Federal question. As I understand the legislation, after the remedies have been exhausted within the State through to the highest State court, if a Federal question or constitutional question is involved, the litigant still has review in the United States Supreme Court of the decision of the highest State court.

Mr. HASTINGS. Nobody complains that he does not.

Mr. WAGNER. Then I cannot see the point of the complaint.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me explain further to the Senator from New York. I have in mind two kinds of commissioners in this land of ours. It is frequently charged and probably it is true that some of the utility commissioners are controlled by large utilities. We have had it charged upon this floor time and again, and I have no doubt that they at least have some influence in some places. But I ask the Senator to compare that with what the RECORD shows, as read into it yesterday by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], as to what happened in Georgia where the Governor has dismissed the whole commission and appointed an entirely new commission, where the new commission has reduced the rates and where the Governor has openly stated that he calls upon the people of the State to oust from office any judge of a State court who undertakes to enjoin the putting into effect of those reduced rates, regardless of whether they be confiscatory or whether they be not.

That is what I am afraid of, and I ask whether or not that is just about as dangerous, if not a little more so, as it is to take the chance of some great utility controlling the Commission. That is the situation. We immediately get the whole business into politics—the commission, the judges, the Governor, all working the same way for a people who think, as they always think, they are paying too much to the utility.

In further answering, specifically, the Senator from New York, let me say this: Suppose tomorrow a commission should reduce the rate in the particular instance 50 percent of what it is now. When the bill goes into effect, if it takes so long to get a decision as it did in the Montana case which the Senator from Nebraska talked about yesterday, in the meantime the utility has absolutely no remedy. It is compelled to go on. It is compelled to give the service at 50 percent of the original rate it charged, and if that 50 percent be confiscatory, there is no way for it to find out until it reaches the Supreme Court. Under the theory of the bill, as I understand it, it cannot reach the Supreme Court until it has passed through all the State courts.

Does that answer the Senator's question? It has just been suggested to me by one of my colleagues interested in the bill that by that time a great part of the damage would have been done.

Mr. WAGNER. I am still curious to know why the Senator protests so much. We trust our State administration of justice and our State courts upon all other matters, so far as I know, which involve the interpretation or the construction of the State statutes. Why, in this case, because public utilities are involved, there ought to be a distinction made, is what puzzles me.

I might say to the Senator that in New York the people strongly favor the legislation because we have seen there the other side of the matter, where our State commissions were temporarily frustrated in their efforts to reduce rates by reason of the fact that the public utility applied in the Federal court for an injunction. Fortunately, in the case I have in mind, the United States Supreme Court finally decided in favor of the State commission and said that the original injunction should never have been issued. I think most of the abuse, if one abuse is weighed against the other, exists contrary to the point of view the Senator has stressed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I propose the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont proposes an amendment, which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 10, after the word "State", it is proposed to insert the following:

Which remedy includes the right of such public utility to a stay of such order pending final adjudication as to the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States.

CROP PRODUCTION AND HARVESTING LOANS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives which came over on yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1975) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is this the so-called "crop-production loan bill"?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the amendment very serious?

Mr. SMITH. Very serious.

Mr. CONNALLY. Do I understand that there is a difference of $10,000,000?

Mr. SMITH. A difference of $9,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection to the Senator's request, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SMITH, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. NORRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay a vote on the pending measure. In fact, I am anxious to expedite the matter, because I am in entire sympathy with the bill and am supporting it.

In connection with what has been said today, however, I feel it necessary, even though it delay a vote on the pending bill for a few minutes, to submit an observation along the line of how this vast amount of money belonging to the American people is being spent. That a very large portion of it since last March 4 has been expended in creating a tremendous bureaucracy there can be no doubt in the world, and this notwithstanding the fact that the people of the country were given to understand in the platform of the Democratic Party in 1932 that Federal expenditures would be sharply curtailed.

In the face of the pledges made we have nevertheless builded up in the last 10 months in the United States a bureaucracy which makes all other the world has ever known pale into insignificance. At least 37 new bureaus have been established since last March 4. Forty thousand new employees, up until December 1 last, have been added to the Federal pay rolls. All managed to escape competitive civil-service examination. The added cost of running the Government because of this tremendous bureaucracy that has been built up is more than $5,000,000 a month for pay roll alone.

Let me read from the Democratic platform of 1932 the following plank:

We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make as zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

As most Members of Congress believed, in order to carry out that plank in the platform, the President advocated legislation here last year which became known as the economy act, suggesting drastic reductions in expenditures. The Congress, to its everlasting shame, driven by the lash of the Chief Executive, passed that unjust, unfair, and utterly brutal measure.

Just this morning I received a letter from Texas with which was enclosed a newspaper clipping from the Houston Press, under a Texarkana date line of February 1, which tells graphically what has happened under that law. Permit me to read it:

[From the Houston Press, Feb. 1, 1934]

VETERAN STARVES TO DEATH IN TEXARKANA—WAS LOPPED FROM COMPENSATION ROLLS BY ECONOMY ACT

TEXARKANA, February 1.—Deprived of war veterans' compensation under terms of the Economy Act, T. M. Baughman, attorney, starved to death, according to American Legion members who investigated his case and buried him here yesterday.

Voluntary contributions today supplied food for his widow and three small children who were found late yesterday crying over his body at their modest home, in freezing weather, without water, lights, fuel, or food.

Baughman, struck by a shrapnel shell during the war, was rated as 90 percent disabled, but was removed from compensation rolls last September under the Economy Act. He was entitled to Federal hospitalization for tuberculosis, but Legion members said he starved to death before Government red tape permitted action on his application.

Baughman, educated at Vanderbilt University, came here last year from Tulsa, Okla.

Mr. President, that is just one of untold thousands of instances telling the sad story of the so-called "Economy Act."

On June 22, last, in the House of Representatives, the majority floor leader undertook to sum up the accomplishments of the Administration, and the legislation that had been enacted. I quote from his speech of that day in the House the following:

In the short space of 3½ months it—enacted 12 major constructive measures and passed legislation which enabled the President, by bringing about economies in governmental expenditures, to balance the Budget for the first time in several years.

Referring to the Congress—

To balance the Budget. As recently as last June the majority floor leader in the House of Representatives insisted on telling the American people that the Budget was balanced by this administration.

Finally, on the subject of economy, he used this language:

As a result of the passage of the Economy Act and through the reorganization of the various departments and bureaus of the Government, to eliminate waste, duplication of effort, and to abolish unnecessary Federal activities, it is estimated that the cost of the Federal Government will be reduced $1,000,000,000 during the next fiscal year. This is about 25 percent of the total cost of the Federal Government and therefore is in strict fulfillment of the pledge contained in the Democratic platform adopted at Chicago last year to reduce the cost of the National Government by one fourth.

Mr. President, I read these statements merely for what they may be worth in connection with the mad spending program that was going on even then, and has continued right up to the present time.

I am concerned, and I suppose every American citizen is seriously concerned, about the growth of bureaucracy in this country. When a bureau is established at enormous cost it apparently becomes a fixture and is grafted into our system of government so that we become more and more a Nation governed by bureaucrats. They are responsible to nobody, recognize no responsibility to the people, and when the effort is made to dislodge them from office they manage somehow or other to exert influence making that impossible.

In the February number of The Forum appears an article entitled "Our New System of Bureaucracy", written by Lawrence Sullivan. I should like to quote to some extent from this article, and then, at the conclusion of my remarks, have it incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the entire article will be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the Senator's address.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The writer of this article suggests that a revolution has been going on in Washington, but that editors ignored the word "revolution" for a time.

But when, in June, the Treasury announced the "conversion factor" for pretzels and zwieback, the headline writers let go, too. Revolution it was.

But he questions the word "revolution" to some degree, or at any rate he asks the question:

Or have we merely added 37 emergency cubits to the old structure as the Navy adds protective "blisters" to its old battleships? Who are the 40,000 new employees added to the Federal pay roll since last March? And how did all manage to escape competitive civil-service examinations?

Mr. President, the civil-service system in this country has been prostituted under the present administration. I think there can be no question about that, and I will give some reasons for the statement in a moment or two. But this article continues:

In the name of economy some 12,000 men and women have been swept from the civil-service classification rolls. But a few more than 40,000 deserving citizens have been added to those patronage rolls which by congressional enactment or Presidential Executive order are specifically exempted from all civil-service regulations.

In other words, we have faithful, loyal employees of the Government who have passed civil-service examinations in order to gain employment in the public service; and after years of faithful public service, having gained experience making them more valuable for the public work they are called upon to do, 12,000 of them are kicked out of the service completely to make way for an equal number of those who have political influence, who are not required to pass any examination of any kind, and because of their former environment in life are not and cannot be anywhere near so well qualified for that kind of work as those who were displaced.

Then an additional 28,000 are given places in these 37 new bureaus that have been created.

I mentioned awhile ago that the added cost to the American people is $5,000,000 a month in pay roll alone. Is it any wonder that the Budget is facing a deficit of approximately $8,000,000,000 within the next year or so? And, as my good friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS], said awhile ago, it will run as high as $9,000,000,000, beyond any doubt, this year.

Mr. President, is it any wonder that some of us question the good faith of the Executive in sending a message to Congress last March insisting that rigid economy be practiced by the Government to such an extent that the Budget would be balanced, and that there would be a saving of a billion dollars a year in the cost of conducting the Government? Now it develops that there was not only not an additional saving of a billion dollars annually but in less than 12 months this administration has plunged the Government into debt to such an extent, by this wild spending orgy and the creation of this enormous number of new bureaus, by foisting this new system of bureaucracy on the American people, that a deficit is faced of close to $10,000,000,000.

What are some of the new bureaus that have been added?

The H.O.L.C., Home Owners' Loan Corporation, employs 13,748 persons on its pay roll.

The F.C.A., Farm Credit Administration, has a pay roll of 6,769.

The A.A.A., Agricultural Adjustment Administration, 4,076.

The F.D.I.C., Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, 1,614.

The N.R.A., National Recovery Administration, 1,922.

The P.W.A., Public Works Administration, 1,764.

The T.V.A., Tennessee Valley Authority, 934.

Total, 30,827.

Mr. President, these persons have all been employed since last March 4, when the pledge was made to the Congress and to the American people that a billion dollars annually would be saved in the cost of running the Government. These are enormous bureaus that have been established in less than 12 months' time, now constituting, with the bureaus we had before, a bureaucracy the like of which the world has never known.

Nor is this the alphabetical half of it.

The article continues.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration, which has been doling out approximately $50,000,000 a month since last May, has 150 people on its Washington administrative staff; the Federal Coordinator of Transportation employs 94; the Civilian Conservation Corps engages 109 officials and clerks and more than 1,000 Army and Navy officers and carries a monthly average of approximately 314,000 on its forestry pay roll.

That is, for planting trees.

In the Federal Trade Commission, the new unit which administers the Securities Act employs 87 persons. And the new United States Employment Service has 437 in the recovery vineyards. There remain, then, the Central Statistical Board, the F.C.C., N.L.B., C.F.C., P.A.B., F.C.W.A., R.C.A., F.H.C., S.E.S., S.H.D., P.L.P.B., D.L.B., B.A.P.C., N.P.B. Each of these agencies employs from 10 to 50 persons.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, did the Senator get the G.I.N. in there? [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There are quite a few of them that I did not get in. And, Mr. President, as of December—this is not up to date; new bureaus are apparently being created every day; new ones have been created since December 1—but—

As of December, all were less than 7 months old. Eight had been in existence less than 1 month. Four were created in the last half of November.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator permit me to give a concrete example of how the pay roll is increasing?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. FESS. In a typical city of Ohio of 7,000 population, the community-chest movement up to this year always took care of all the people in need by voluntary contributions, and by loaning or renting free headquarters, costing nobody anything; and all the service was voluntary, except that the town employed one clerk at $40 a month to keep the books and to see that everything was regular.

This year the Federal Government comes to this city. The director sent there is on a salary of $150 a month. He has an immediate assistant at $90 a month, and the clerical assistance amounts to $320 a month, paid out of Washington to take care of the people that heretofore the locality took care of, to say nothing about the rent. Now, with the Government taking charge of the work, the Government pays rent for headquarters. Heretofore it was contributed. Here is a population that heretofore has always taken care of itself, now being taken care of at a cost for clerical force of $320 a month, to say nothing about the rental, and the locality not doing anything special because the Government is doing it. That is a typical case of how the employment roll is increasing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is a very illuminating instance, Mr. President, and I thank the Senator for suggesting it.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana whether he has heard of the alphabetical description that John Simpson, a great friend of the farmer, gives to this administration? He entitles it, "D.B.D.—drink, borrow, and destroy."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether the typical city of which he speaks made representations to the Federal Government that they were not in a position to take care of their people at home.

Mr. FESS. I do not have any information concerning that, but I should not be surprised if such a representation has been made.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is criticism to be leveled at anybody on account of that situation, which government entity should bear the greatest portion of the criticism—the local government, which represented that it could not take care of its own unemployed, or the Federal Government, which seeks to do it?

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me to reply to the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I will say that the city of Cleveland answered that question a year ago, when a Senator from this body sent out a questionnaire to the mayors of all the leading cities of the country asking whether they would like to have funds from the Federal Government to take care of their unemployed. The majority of the cities replied: "We do not think that is a wise course; but if the Government is entering upon that sort of work, we want our share." And since the Government entered upon this system of putting people on a dole, every city has been asking the Government to do what the city ought to do. It is no answer, I would say to the Senator from Kentucky, to say that the relief is extended because the people have asked for it. Of course they will ask for it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that, theoretically, that may be true, but does not the Senator from Ohio recognize the fact that on account of the limitation of the State constitutions in many of our States, not only as to the matter of taxation, but the matter of bond issues to borrow money, that legally many cities in this country were not and are not in a position to raise the funds either by increase in taxes or by borrowing the money, and that the process of amending the Constitution to permit that was such an interminable process that it was hopeless to attempt it.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that that statement is true, that the cities are representing themselves as unable to carry on these activities. The difficulty, I would say to my friend, is that if the Government proceeds on the course it is now following, it will very soon reach the place the city itself has reached, so that we will all go down in a mess together.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope we may never reach that point.

Mr. FESS. I hope so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, allow me to quote further:

> Closely coordinated with this unprecedented expansion of the Federal bureaucracy runs the challenging new policy in personnel administration, inaugurated under the direction of Postmaster General James A. Farley—a policy which veers sharply from the merit system established with the United States Civil Service Commission in 1883.
>
> In all the new agencies, employment is specifically exempted from the three basic principles of the civil-service code—competitive examinations, dismissal for cause only, and promotion by efficiency ratings.

In other words, Mr. President, under the system inaugurated by the Postmaster General, who is also the generalissimo of all of the Democratic forces of the country, the Democratic national chairman, the Democratic State chairman of the State of New York, the all-high dispenser of patronage, it is not necessary to have any special merit or to take any examination of any kind under the Civil Service. The question is entirely one, not of fitness, but of loyalty, evidently, to the powers that be.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator left out one title belonging to Mr. Farley. He also is the dismisser of corrupt employees whom he inherited in the Post Office Department.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; and also, Mr. President, dismissers of Senators and Representatives in Congress if they refuse to obey the will of the high command.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. The Senator is mistaken. There have been no Senators or Representatives dismissed, none at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to read to the Senator for his especial benefit along that line from an editorial that appeared in the Washington Herald of February 2 on Political Intimidation. Allow me to quote:

> It is perhaps unkind, as well as unnecessary, to subject the occasional addresses of Postmaster General Farley to a critical examination.
>
> It is not as an orator that he stands before the people, nor as an authority in economics or monetary science. He is not associated in the public mind with any of the measures which constitute the new deal.
>
> But when, as in his address at the opening of the Cleveland Automobile Show, he ventures to warn Members of Congress who may be guilty of any display of independence that they are liable to lose their positions in punishment for such rashness and disrespect to the President, he finds himself very much in the public's attention—inviting and receiving its prompt rebuke.
>
> "Perhaps," says Mr. Farley, "some of the public works that are being executed under the new dispensation are not urgently necessary."

He makes that concession. Then the editorial continues:

> May it not be quite within the right, even the duty, of a Congressman who shares this view to express it?
>
> Mr. Farley describes the voices which speak in criticism of some of the President's recommendations as coming from "crusted old standpatters who still talk and think in archaic and worn-out terms, men who know nothing, but quibble and grumble in dull partisanship and creak their ancient party opposition to whatever is being offered."
>
> This is a highly rhetorical and rather turgid way in which to describe honest dissent which proceeds from men high in the President's party, such as Senator GLASS, of Virginia, whose hold upon the respect and regard of the country Mr. Farley will find it difficult to shake.
>
> Conceding that there are opposing schools of thought concerning the President's course on gold, Mr. Farley says the President adheres to neither school.
>
> In such a situation it would seem that outspoken expression by Members of Congress who are not so neutral, but have reasoned convictions on the subject, would be welcomed, rather than used as a peg on which to hang Mr. Farley's threat that such men are liable to come up missing after the congressional elections next fall.

Is not this the height of arrogance and dangerously undemocratic?

Despotism has certainly arrived when a Congressman is to be penalized for expressing his honest convictions and voting for what, according to his belief, is for the best interests of the public.

The fate which the National Chairman-Postmaster General foresees for the conscientious members of his party, and against which he warns them, may, as a matter of fact, be hanging over his own head.

A party leader who is so deficient in vision and gives himself over to so narrow and vindictive a conception of party duty may find himself numbered among the missing when once the voters have a chance to express themselves.

Americans are not yet ready to abandon the historic principles of free speech and independent action.

They are not ready to abandon the Republic and substitute government by intimidation.

In other words, Mr. Farley undertakes to say to the Senator from Tennessee—and he says it not at a political meeting, but he says it at a nonpartisan affair in Cleveland—that if the Senator from Tennessee does not vote according to his master's command he will be found missing the next time he runs for office. That is what he says. Of course, the Senator knows more about his power in Tennessee than I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will not discuss that, but I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. He is inveighing against the Public Works Administration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator prefer to have the men being assisted by the C.W.A. roaming the streets unemployed, as they were during the 4 years of Mr. Hoover's administration, or would he rather have them put to work under the C.W.A.? Will the Senator answer the question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not know yet whether I should prefer to have the problem handled as at present or in the other way. From all I can learn from all over the United States, it seems that the whole C.W.A. system is becoming involved in graft and in political preference so far as employment is concerned; that the poor and the needy are lost sight of completely.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill to which reference has been made is coming up to be voted upon in a little while. Is the Senator from Indiana going to vote for the C.W.A. appropriation or against it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is the same question that the Senator asked of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I ask the same question of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not certain, Mr. President, whether I shall vote for it or against it. I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee in his own time some questions about what is proposed to be done with the money, and then I shall be prepared to answer his question as to whether I shall vote for it. If the money is to be paid to politicians all over the country, and if pay is to be duplicated, and one man is to draw pay three or four times in the name of an alleged character who does not exist or who has been buried and now is in his grave, if that sort of petty larceny and petty graft is to go on, if this fund is to be spent in that way, I should certainly vote against extending it. That is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, no one is going to expend money that way, and the Senator knows it. Let me say to the Senator that we will see how he votes in a few minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Permit me to read to the Senator, then, an article which must have escaped his own attention. I read from the Washington Star of Friday, February 2, an article by Paul Mallon:

Even Mr. Roosevelt's most ardent admirers cannot quite stand the C.W.A.

Administration inner circles gently grasp their noses now when anyone mentions it. Their descriptions of it run from "bad" to "awful." It has become the common curbstone joke of the Capital. Complaints continue to pour in on Mr. Roosevelt's desk.

I read also from an article appearing in the Crawfordsville Journal and Review, from my own State:

POLITICS THREATENS C.W.A. SUCCESS

There is something rather ominous about all these reports of graft and double dealing in operations of the C.W.A.

They have been wide-spread enough to cause Department of Justice agents to get busy, and the story they tell isn't a pretty one.

I ask the Senator from Tennessee to be good enough to listen to some of the things that are going on in the C.W.A., about which he interrogated me.

Public officials in some localities calmly have put themselves on the C.W.A. pay rolls; in others they have connived at a racket whereby C.W.A. men had to fork over part of their pay; in others they have passed out jobs precisely as a rapacious city machine hands out plums at the city hall.

Part of this is due to local political conditions, and part of it may be due to the Federal administration's failure to proceed sharply enough against the spoils system. There still are too many men who see in Government jobs only a new opportunity to reward deserving party workers.

But, whatever the cause of it, the net effect is to raise grave doubts about the working out of the vast programs now being put into effect at Washington.

We don't know yet how far some of these programs are going to go or how long they are going to last. Many people are convinced that some, at least, of these Government projects are profoundly unwise and ought to be abandoned.

But however opinion may run in those respects, one thing is obvious: Since we are more or less committed to a trial of a vast extension of activity by the central government, that trial ought to be as businesslike and straightforward as is humanly possible.

If it fails, it ought to fail because of its own inherent contradictions and not because of political ineptitude.

What we are getting now is a discomforting hint that our political machinery is not robust enough to carry the load. If ugly graft, favoritism, self-seeking, and plain, everyday inefficiency cannot be kept out of the operation of these projects, they have small chance of succeeding.

No chain is any stronger than its weakest link. It is beginning to look as if the ordinary variety of politics is the weak link in the chain upon which the administration's experiments are pulling. If that link gives way, the experiments are very apt to flop.

Unless we can root political slefishness, stupidity, and chicanery out of such activities as the C.W.A., we will lose our chance to test those activities upon their merits.

Mr. President, just the other day Mr. Hopkins himself, the Administrator of the C.W.A., said it was reeking with graft, filled with graft, and that he was utterly discouraged with it all. Does the Senator ask me whether I would vote to continue any such program as that?

Mr. President, I quote further from this article on the civil service. I mentioned a moment ago that in all these new bureaus, these new agencies of Government, more than 37 of them erected by this administration from March 4 last until the 1st of December, employment was specifically exempted from the three basic principles of the civil-service code; that is, appointees did not have to take competitive examinations; employees could be dismissed for any cause, and there was no necessity for efficiency ratings in making promotions. The article continues:

By various parliamentary maneuvers the same result was achieved in every other bill creating a new administrative agency.

Nor has the sabotage of the merit system been limited to the new agencies. The National Civil Service Reform League reported on November 15 that it had twice requested information from the Post Office Department as to the number of postmasters dismissed since March, before the expiration of their appointed terms. In each instance the Post Office Department replied that the figures were not available.

"We have received numerous complaints of Presidential postmasters being asked to resign before the expiration of their terms of office and being succeeded by acting postmasters, for obviously political reasons", this report ran.

Mr. President, this is not a political charge. The article states:

Such charges from a mere partisan well might be dismissed as political froth. But the National Civil Service Reform League has been a going concern since 1881. Its national campaign mobilized public sentiment behind the Pendleton Act of 1883, which created the Civil Service Commission. Among its directing vice presidents today are James R. Angell, Newton D. Baker, Charles G. Dawes, William Cabell Bruce, A. Lawrence Lowell, Franklin MacVeagh, and Ogden H. Hammond.

"One common and recurring complaint", the league's report continued, "is that efficiency ratings have been juggled, so that when reductions in force become necessary those employees not persona grata may be removed, even though years longer in the service than employees retained."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been informed that a few moments ago the Senator referred to a statement of Mr. Hopkins to the effect that the C.W.A. was reeking with graft. Am I correctly informed that the Senator used that language?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I was using my own language, but trying to say in substance what I understood or read Mr. Hopkins had said.

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe the Senator, having quoted Mr. Hopkins, thinks he is an honorable, truthful man and so esteems him, I am sure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I recognize thoroughly that in attempting to quote a document of any kind from memory it is very easy to make mistakes in connection with it, but substantially that is, as I recollect, what Mr. Hopkins said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. I have before me the testimony of Mr. Hopkins taken before the committee, and here is what Mr. Hopkins has said about it:

There has been a great deal of talk in the newspapers about graft in the C.W.A. With over 4,000,000 men employed in the C.W.A., 14 people have been arrested in the United States, as far as we can determine.

Senator COPELAND. Out of how many employed?

Mr. HOPKINS. Out of over 4,000,000.

These people have been arrested for charges like this:

In the District of Columbia, two men were arrested who were charged with larceny by trick, attempting to persuade workers to pay money to retain their jobs.

In California, two women were arrested charged with accepting brokerage fees in return for work orders to truck owners.

In Indiana—

I believe the Senator comes from Indiana.

In Indiana two men were arrested, one because he kicked-back half his wages to the man who got him the job.

In Kentucky a man was arrested for making false claims on a pay roll.

In Kentucky a man was arrested for making false claims against the Government.

In New Jersey a disbursing officer was arrested because he paid himself a check after he was fired.

In New York two C.W.A. employees were arrested for selling policy slips and low-grade liquor to their fellow workers.

Senator BYRNES. Apparently it was the low grade that made the trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Senator DICKINSON. That was in New York, as I understood?

Mr. HOPKINS. That was in the Senator's State.

In Texas a man was arrested, charged with larceny.

Senator COPELAND. There is no low-grade whisky in Texas.

Mr. HOPKINS. In Salt Lake City three men were charged with conspiracy to defraud the Government. One man received 3 work cards to go to work and sold 2 of them.

That is the extent of the arrests made throughout the United States.

I want to say for Mr. Hopkins, as this testimony shows, that he is an honest, faithful, hard-working, intelligent man, who is doing a splendid job, and when he finds men under him grafting in any form, he is taking the proper steps, such as having them indicted and tried and convicted for their crimes or misdemeanors. That is the kind of a man we ought to have in charge of a work of this kind.

I wish to say further that I agree with the statement that is made by Mr. Hopkins in his testimony, namely, that there is a great deal of talk, but derelictions have been comparatively few; indeed, perhaps in no other branch of the Government and perhaps in no other branch of life where an equal number of men are concerned and in employment has there been so little graft as in this department. The Senator quoted Mr. Hopkins as saying that the C.W.A. was reeking with fraud and graft. Here is the statement of Mr. Hopkins, in which he upholds all the steps being taken against grafters. As the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] suggests to me, not only is this an organization under which 4,000,000 men are employed but it has $700,000,000 at its disposal, which is being paid out by this faithful officer of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I think everyone who knows Mr. Hopkins and is familiar with his work will agree with the eulogy which the Senator from Tennessee has passed on him, if I may use that term. I think Mr. Hopkins is efficient, and he is honest, and he is one man around whose office red tape is not to be found within a mile. However, Mr. Hopkins was quoted in the newspapers some time ago as saying that there was favoritism and misuse of funds and graft widespread in the work. The statement which the Senator from Tennessee has read, of course, is a wholly different statement, but the statement which Mr. Hopkins was quoted as making is in my possession, and having been made by Mr. Hopkins, who I believe to be thoroughly honest and thoroughly efficient, I thought it was a very serious matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to quote a little further from Mr. Hopkins, here is what he says about it. I did not see the statement in the newspapers to which the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Idaho have referred but here is what Mr. Hopkins said about it on last Saturday:

Mr. Hopkins, are you satisfied—

And this was an interrogatory addressed to him by Senator NYE:

Senator NYE. Mr. Hopkins, are you satisfied that you have a full and complete accounting, up to this time, of the arrests that have been made?

Mr. HOPKINS. This was up to last week. These are not all the people that have been charged with doing things. There have been other charges.

The thing I want to say is this: Every time we have heard of any man chiseling on this thing, we have gone after it at once. From the day this thing started we have had our own investigating staff scattered throughout the United States watching this thing. It is my policy, whenever anybody gets caught or whenever the evidence is substantial that he did it, to fire him and prosecute him. I do not believe in anybody's having anything to do with taking any of this money illegitimately under any circumstances; and one of the reasons why this has made such a "hullabaloo", I believe, throughout the country, has been because of our attitude in this regard.

Senator ADAMS. Your policy has been to expose graft; not to conceal it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am perfectly frank to say that when this enterprise was started it did not occur to me that people would do this kind of petty chiseling. I do not like this kind of petty chiseling. We discharged a whole State administration the other day because one of its members sat on a commission and approved a project in which he got a fee from another source—not a Federal source—but in which he took a fee. I do not like that kind of business. I do not like the ethics that go with that.

We are now investigating many charges. We investigate them all. Of the charges we get, I suppose 49 out of 50 are charges of political interference. Those charges come from all groups and all parts of the country.

Personally I am not terribly disturbed about the charges of political interference. There has undoubtedly been some; but political interference does not hold up a project. The charge is made that Democrats or Republicans get all the good jobs or that a Democrat or a Republican cannot get a job. Nine tenths of those are inherent in the fact that when a man does not get a job on civil works he wants to blame somebody for it.

I do not mean to say that there has not been politics in this. I was asked the other day if I would not issue an order that everybody running for office should be refused a place on a Civil Works Administration. I do not believe in that. I do not see why a free American citizen cannot run for office whenever he pleases. They should not abuse their position of running for office to take advantage of our work, however. I have been unwilling to issue an order saying that a public official cannot sit on one of our Civil Works boards.

We have been asked to do it repeatedly—to prohibit probate judges, for instance, and members of boards of supervisors and mayors and other city officials from sitting on our Civil Works boards; but it seems to me, in the type of government we have, that that is an affront to all public service. So I have no intention of issuing an order saying that merely because a man runs for office he cannot take part in our enterprise. I have in the past, and I will again, fire anybody who uses his political office to the disadvantage of the Civil Works enterprise. But when you think of the whole country and the enormity of this enterprise, it is amazing how little of it there has been; and, in the main, throughout the country the people who are known as "politicians" have cooperated in this enterprise, have moved it along, and pushed it and shoved it.

These things disturb me. I must admit that I do not like this business of people's getting into this money of ours; but in comparison with the whole job it is infinitesimal—infinitesimal.

"Infinitesimal"; that is what Mr. Hopkins has to say about it, and, in my judgment, that is the truth about it. Of course, with such an enormous enterprise, spending $700,000,000 and employing 4,000,000 men, there must be here and there derelictions on the part of those who work under the C.W.A., and possibly sometimes on the part of some of those who administer it; but, taking it by and large, it has been a clean job; it has been an honest job; it has been a job that was absolutely necessary to the American people; and I believe it has been infinitely better to have carried out the program of the C.W.A. than to have allowed men to roam the country unemployed as they have been doing for a number of years past.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I voted for the C.W.A. I am not asking a question, and I hope my interruption will not be objected to, because I have to go to a committee meeting. I voted for the C.W.A., and I am going to vote for it again. I am going to vote for the highest appropriation recommended from any responsible source. I think it is much preferable that we should have people working under the C.W.A. than to have the starvation which would be had without it.

However, neither Mr. Hopkins nor any other man under the system set up can get anything like reasonable value for the money that is being expended, nor can we ever expect to keep down rampant graft and favoritism, which everybody knows and which Mr. Hopkins admits exists in the administration of this law. What could have been done handsomely would have been for the Government to have authorized the project to be let to the low bidder and to have set the standard of hours it might have desired, which would have meant that we would have had the low bidder operating at a reasonable profit and would have had ample employment at a reasonable rate of pay.

This expenditure is like taking out money and throwing it to the hogs in the woods, like we, down in our country, throw out corn. Down in my country we always kill the hogs in the wintertime after they have eaten the acorns in the woods. In the summertime we throw them a little corn to keep them through the summer. But if we went out and threw corn to them in the wintertime they would get so they would not even look in a ditch for a crawfish. Indeed, they would hardly go out and look for an acorn in the wintertime if we fed them much corn.

The trouble is that instead of building up our citizenship we have done in the worst possible manner what had to be done. We have dealt out the corn. We have not had any reasonable constructive results from it. We have shelled out the money because we had to do that or have starvation, and anything is preferable to starvation. But what we ought to have done, and what I said should have been done, was to keep politics out of the business—and politics is in it. The man has never been born smart enough to keep politics out of it and get efficient results, nor can we keep graft out of it. We should have put the money out to the low bidders for the contracts, establishing a standard of so many hours a week, a 30-hour week basis, which would have insured spreading the work and obtaining reasonable results for the money the Government spent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I agree with all that has been said about Mr. Hopkins. I am not personally acquainted with him, but from what I know of Mr. Hopkins he is an honorable gentleman and, so far as I know, a good administrator. I was giving Mr. Hopkins credit for his candor and his frankness in admitting the wide-spread graft that exists in this great Bureau he is undertaking to administer. But undoubtedly Mr. Hopkins gave these interviews to the press. He has never denied them. As a matter of fact, the administration indirectly took credit for the clever political strategy involved in being frank and telling the country for his party itself of its own graft before it was investigated by the opposition. Now, it comes to me as a little surprising that the Senator from Tennessee, or any Senator, should undertake to say that Mr. Hopkins had never made any such statement and that there is no graft in the C.W.A.

My attention has been drawn just this moment to a note from sources that are well able to understand the truth of the statement—perfectly reliable sources. I read it:

Mr. Hopkins at a recent press conference last week stated: "There is no doubt in my mind that the C.W.A. is filled with graft, but as to keeping public officials out of C.W.A. offices—well, that is impossible, for who can say under our Constitution what offices or how many offices one man may hold?"

There is no doubt about that. I make the prediction now, Mr. President, on my own responsibility—and it is merely a prediction—that when the history comes to be written about this enormous fund which is now being expended in this manner, it will disclose a national scandal of such proportions that the American people will be appalled.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that comes to pass, we will have to make a tremendous spurt to overtake the graft in the Hoover and previous administrations. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, allow me to proceed. Here is a statement from the representatives of the National Federation of Federal Employees, an association of some 70,000 workers in every branch of the Federal Government:

Sustaining these general conclusions are the reports of the National Federation of Federal Employees, an association of some 70,000 workers in every branch of Government. President Luther C. Steward, of this organization, has tabulated some 12,000 classified employees dismissed from civil-service positions since last March—this while some 40,000 nonclassified workers were being added in the new agencies. "Dangerous and indefensible", was Mr. Steward's characterization of the new policy as he surveyed the Government rolls in November. He charged:

"Serious inroads are being made into the merit system by spoilsmen representing the largest army of political job hunters in the history of the Nation. * * * In many instances, newly appointed politicians with administrative authority have begun forcing out capable, experienced employees with competitive status, in order to replace them with political hangers-on."

Mr. President, here is what Mr. Sullivan calls the "plum pudding." Let us look at some of the types of employees going into these new bureaus in various capacities under the new deal:

PLUM PUDDING

A former Governor of Mississippi is earning $6,000 a year in the A.A.A. His only job is to read newspapers and magazines from all sections of the country and clip items reflecting editorial reaction to the farm program.

A former Governor of Georgia is receiver for two defunct national banks in Washington, by appointment of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The son of the Clerk of the House of Representatives is Solicitor to the Department of Commerce.

A sister of a Senator from Virginia is Registrar of the United States Treasury.

In New York the acting chairman of the Democratic State committee (Mr. Farley is himself the nominal chairman) is the regional consultant of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. He must approve every application for Federal mortgage relief before the papers may be forwarded to Washington.

In Ohio the chairman of the Democratic State central committee also is the regional administrative officer for H.O.L.C.

James J. Hoey, who broke with Tammany Hall last fall to seek the borough presidency of Manhattan on the Farley-McKee recovery ticket, since has been appointed collector of internal revenue for New York.

Two weeks after the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, had dismissed 400 civil-service employees in the name of economy, a brother of a Senator from Alabama was appointed, last July, to be commercial attaché in the United States Legation at Ottawa. The job pays $6,500 a year. The report of the National Civil Service Reform League on this appointment concludes with the observation: "Colonel Bankhead's business experience was limited, and he had no familiarity with the duties of his position."

Patrick J. Maloney, of Columbia City, Ind., is treasurer of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. He had no previous experience in banking or finance. After teaching grade and high schools in Indiana for 5 years, he became interested in a Colorado gold-mining venture. At the time of his appointment, he was a director of the Indiana Telephone Association.

From Pennsylvania, a brother-in-law of the Democratic national committeeman, who had no background in railroading, was confirmed as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A prominent party leader in Chicago, who never had been identified with banking or finance, was confirmed as a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

On July 12, President Roosevelt directed Mr. Farley to draft legislation to bring all postmasters under civil-service regulations, "in order that I may submit it to the next session of Congress."

But in his address before a national postal convention, in Rochester, N.Y., in August, Mr. Farley acknowledged that since March some 640 appointive postmasters had been removed, prior to the expiration of their terms, for violations of postal regulations. During the same month Francis J. Sinnott, a prominent district leader in King's County, was named acting postmaster at Brooklyn. In announcing this appointment, Mr. Farley, then in Brooklyn, said the permanent appointment would be made "as soon as Mr. Sinnott completes his civil-service examination."

Such are some random fruits of the personnel policy enunciated by the Postmaster General in his deathless apothegm: "Patronage is a reward to those who have worked for party victory."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the article state how many Democratic postmasters were removed during the first 6 or 9 or 12 months after the inauguration of Mr. Harding following the Wilson administration?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; it does not. I have read the Senator what the article contains.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will take the pains to look into the record, he will find that during the same period following the inauguration of Mr. Harding in 1921 twice as many Democratic postmasters were removed as have been removed by President Roosevelt.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have not gone into that. What the Senator has said may be true. I am not in a position to challenge the statement. I am only quoting what is said in this month's Forum.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the Senator is quoting what serves his particular purpose at the moment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, no. I have gone into personnel, and I have tried to show the Senate that these are not only my views but they are views which come from a nonpartisan source entirely, and evidently they may be taken as a pretty fair criterion of what the country is thinking about the whole matter. My primary purpose in rising was to inveigh as far as I could and as emphatically as I could against this vast system of bureaucracy which the present administration has foisted upon the American people within the last 12 months—37 new bureaus, with an added pay roll of $5,000,000 a month between March 4 last and December 1 last. New bureaus are being erected every day. It is that against which I am inveighing.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. Referring to the matter of replacement of Democratic postmasters in an earlier administration and the appointment of their successors, does not the Senator see a considerable difference between the replacement of postmasters under civil service as the rule formerly existed, and the appointment of postmasters under the system which presently exists, under which the Postmaster General is not required to appoint from an eligible list of three, naming from the head of the list selected upon the merit system, but is permitted to make appointments from anyone on the list regardless of the position and regardless of qualification or merit?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, there is all the difference in the world; and this later system is the one that is now causing so much complaint from the people of the country, regardless of politics.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand the reference of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. The same requirement exists now in the Post Office Department that has existed ever since President Woodrow Wilson, by an Executive order, went as far as he could to put first-, second-, and third-class postmasterships under the civil service. The Civil Service Commission now hold examinations, as they have heretofore held them. They certify the list of the three highest eligibles to the Post Office Department; and, so far as the Post Office Department knows, there is nobody else on the list who has taken the examination. I have not seen a single instance where the Postmaster General has not limited the appointment to the three highest eligibles on the list. I will say, furthermore, that so far as my State is concerned there has not been a single postmaster removed, regardless of his politics, except upon complaint or charges or the report of an investigator.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. I make no complaint about the removal of postmasters. So far as I know, there has been no considerable abuse with respect to the removal of postmasters; but I am told upon what seems to be unimpeachable authority that the Post Office Department is no longer appointing from an eligible list consisting of the three highest, but may appoint anyone from any place on the list, provided he shall have taken the examination.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator evidently is misinformed about that, because that is not correct.

Mr. STEIWER. That statement was made to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only exception to that is where a vacancy exists, where there is no eligible list, and an acting postmaster is wanted pending the holding of an examination, which has always been the case in the Post Office Department. In every case, so far as I know, after the examination had been held, the list of the three highest were certified by the Civil Service Commission and an appointment was made from that list.

Mr. STEIWER. It will be interesting to observe the orders on that subject, because the statement was made to me by officials of the post-office clerks, who assured me upon two or three different occasions that the merit system has substantially broken down under this administration with respect to the appointment of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Whoever assured the Senator of any such order or change in administration of post-office affairs has assured him without any authority and without knowledge of the subject. We have exactly the same rules now pertaining to the selection of postmasters that obtained through the 12 years of Republican administration. They are just as they were in Mr. Harding's administration, Mr. Coolidge's administration, and Mr. Hoover's administration. There has been no change.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Tennessee is laboring under a misunderstanding. Under President Harding there were no removals. Every postmaster was permitted to stay until his term expired, unless a charge was presented against him of malfeasance or inefficiency in the service; while under this administration the postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, for example, who has been in the service for 35 years, with the finest character, with not the slightest opposition to him, was asked to resign simply because he has 3 more years to serve. The same thing occurred in Cleveland. The same thing occurred in Toledo, and generally in Ohio. There are a few exceptions; but, generally speaking, none of the postmasters are permitted to serve until their terms are out, but they are removed without any charge whatever against them. That did not take place under President Harding.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Ohio is talking about one thing and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is talking about a wholly different thing. One is talking about the employment of postmasters after there is a vacancy; the other is talking about how these vacancies occur. I am informed that precisely the same rules apply as to the dismissal of postmasters. It is done only after charges are made and an examination is held.

Mr. FESS. That is not true in this administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is wholly mistaken about that.

Mr. FESS. No; I am not mistaken. That is not true in this administration. There are persons whose resignations have been called for without charges of any sort.

Mr. CLARK, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will ask the Post Office Department, I think he will find that charges have been made.

Mr. FESS. I make the statement here and now that that is not the practice. It may have been done in some cases, but I am citing a specific case now. Mr. Geren, of Columbus, Ohio, who has been in the service for 30 years and was promoted from the assistant postmastership to the postmastership of that city, was asked to resign without any charge at all being made against him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator asked the Post Office Department whether there were any charges against him?

Mr. FESS. No; I understand that it is the general policy.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will inquire of the Department why it was done, he will find that charges have been made and have been sustained.

Mr. FESS. That simply cannot be true, because what I have stated is pretty general all over Ohio. It has occurred in almost every case.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. LONG, and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the measure before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is that of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I was not here when the Senator from Indiana began the article from which he is reading. Therefore, I do not know who is reported to have written it; but I beg to call to the attention of the Senator the statement which I heard just as I came in—that a member of the Federal Reserve Board was appointed from Chicago who had had no experience in banking and no acquaintance with finance.

That statement is very unjust to this gentleman. This Mr. Szymczak is a Pole. He was a professor of finance and economics in a college. From there, after long teaching, he became director in a bank. From there he was made comptroller of the city of Chicago, having supervision of all its finances under the very difficult circumstances which my able friend from Indiana knows Chicago has been going through; and he was presented upon his qualifications in that respect. He was not presented by me. I accepted him, and ratified him as far as my voice went, because of his qualifications.

It may interest my able friend from Indiana for me to say that the support that came to this gentleman was from the large population of Poles headed by South Bend, Ind. It was through the recommendation of that very splendid constituency that Mr. Szymczak was presented for the office.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one observation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In just a second, when I reply to the Senator from Illinois. For the Senator's information, I will state that I am quoting from the February Forum an article written by Lawrence Sullivan, and in this paragraph I presume he refers to the situation mentioned by the Senator:

> A prominent party leader in Chicago, who never had been identified with banking or finance, was confirmed as a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

No name is mentioned.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the able writer has fallen into error. I have given the name of the gentleman, and something of his history, which should particularly appeal to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I simply wish to make one observation.

I have listened with great interest to the eloquent and ingenious defense by the Senator from Ohio of the notorious conduct of postal affairs under the notorious Harding administration; and yet I have observed that the Senator from Ohio, with all his eloquence and all his courage, has refrained from attempting to enter into any defense of the conduct of postal affairs under the Hoover administration, where there has recently been testimony from the assistants to the Postmaster General that they took the precaution of burning the records of importance before they retired from office.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. When there is any investigation pending, whether by a Senate committee or by a court, I have always followed the course of not injecting anything that could be brought in in the regular order. I am expecting that the committee investigating postal matters will be fair enough and square enough to bring the former Postmaster General down here to testify on a matter that certainly will be cleared up when he is brought before the committee; and I am wondering why he is refused an opportunity to come here, why he is not being invited by the committee.

The former Postmaster General wants to appear before the committee. He has made it known that he wants to appear. There has been no indication yet on the part of the committee of an intention to call him. I am insisting that he be called, in order that he himself may state the truth about the matter, instead of allowing the people to form conclusions altogether on the basis of rumors and innuendoes. That is the reason, I will say to my good friend from Missouri, why I have kept perfectly quiet on this matter.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I admire the Senator's discretion in keeping quiet in defense of a situation of that sort. I am not a member of the committee, and I am not authorized to speak for the committee. The Senator from Ohio is not a lawyer; but I may suggest to him that perhaps the failure of the committee to call upon the former Postmaster General is through a disinclination to grant him immunity in a criminal prosecution for testimony he might give.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. FESS. The Senator says I am not a lawyer. Probably I am not, although I had the honor of being the manager of a law school in a university, and teaching for 15 years.

Mr. CLARK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I knew he had been an eminent president of a college, but I did not know he had been a law professor.

Mr. FESS. While it would be entirely out of order for me to make any statement pertaining to the matter that the Senator has mentioned, the immunity question is not in the way. It cannot be in the way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is gratifying at least to know that that question cannot be in the way, because very nearly everything has been put in the way.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, it is that sort of thing that I resent. Everything is innuendo; everything is rumor. It is unfortunate that this body will permit a committee to operate like a grand jury in investigating a matter of great interest, and decline to call the one person who has the information, who is glad to come, and will come at any time; and I say if it is necessary to trade on the matter by saying that we will free the committee from any burden of immunity because it is not asked, if that becomes necessary to get the former Postmaster General before the committee, I want that done, and he wants it done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. FESS. I want the American people to show fairness in bringing before the committee the one man who has all the facts that the public does not have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has he all the facts?

Mr. FESS. It seems to me it is thoroughly unfair unless he is given an opportunity to testify.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Ohio agree that he may bring up all the records, or have part of them been burned?

Mr. CLARK. It is impossible for him to bring them all, because many of them have been destroyed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I must decline to yield further on this matter. I want to conclude my remarks. Then whoever desires may have the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I was not here when the Senator began his remarks. Since I understand that the committee has been charged with not being fair to the former Postmaster General, may I ask the Senator if he will permit me to make a statement?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not at this time. When I conclude, I shall be glad to have the Senator do so. However, it is very brief, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BLACK. I merely wanted to ask if we are to understand from the Senator from Ohio that he has authority from the former Postmaster General to request that he be heard before the committee. If he has, speaking as one member of the committee, I say now that I shall be delighted to have him heard at any time he desires to come before the committee voluntarily.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FESS. I should not want to say that I have authority to make that request. I do have the knowledge that the former Postmaster General wants to be called before the committee; and I will state further that if the committee refuses to call him, he certainly would like to make a request of the committee to be heard.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator one other question? I understand the Senator says he has knowledge that the former Postmaster General wants the committee to call him. The question I asked was whether or not the Senator has authority to state that the former Postmaster General desires to be heard before the committee.

Mr. FESS. I have no authority further than to give the Senator my information that the former Postmaster General wants to come before the committee; and I will add this much: My own opinion is—and it comes from a conversation with him—that if it is necessary to make any statement about immunity, that can be made. He wants to come before the committee; and if the Senator himself is under the impression that it is unwise to subpena him here as a witness, that that would give him immunity, that can easily be corrected.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator if he will not get in touch with the former Postmaster General and get from hi ma request as to what day he desires to appear? and assure him that, so far as I am concerned, I shall be very glad indeed to vote in favor of permitting him to testify before the committee at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the inference is plainly to be drawn from the statement made a few moments ago by the Senator from Ohio, in answer to the Senator from Indiana, that Mr. Brown feels aggrieved because he has not had an opportunity for a hearing before the special committee. I inquire of both the chairman of the special committee and of the Senator from Ohio whether Mr. Brown has at any time indicated to the committee, or any member thereof, a desire for a hearing?

Mr. BLACK. He has given no indication to me at any time that he be allowed to appear. I have heard nothing from him. If he makes a request, insofar as I am concerned, under the statement made by the Senator from Ohio of Mr. Brown's waiver of immunity, I shall be very glad indeed to vote in favor of his coming before the committee at the earliest possible moment that he can get here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then, Mr. President, I shall ask one further question of the Senator from Ohio. Assuming the statement of the chairman of the special committee, the Senator from Alabama, to be correct, namely, that Mr. Brown has made no application for a hearing, and has not indicated to any member of the committee a desire for a hearing, upon what ground or fact does the Senator from Ohio base his charge of unfairness on the part of the committee in refusing to grant Mr. Brown a hearing?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the whole proceeding has been the investigation of the doings of one man, the Postmaster General. He is the one man who knows the facts. I assume that he would be the one man that should be brought here to give the facts, as the committee must know that he has them. Up to date he has not been invited. Up to date I have on two different occasions communicated with him, at which times he has expressed his desire to appear before the committee, and has stated to me that if I thought it was the proper course to take he would ask to come before the committee. I thought it would be more proper to have the committee subpena him in the regular order. If they are not doing so because they think the ex-Postmaster General is going to seek immunity, I can entirely remove that cause for not subpenaing him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is not clear to my mind from the answer of the Senator from Ohio is why such a man as he has described, of such a disposition as he has stated, has failed to indicate his willingness or his desire or his readiness to appear before the committee, and why he or his friends complain that he has been treated unfairly, when he has not indicated a desire to tell what he knows about the subject matter of the investigation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to conclude now.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Does he not think it grossly unfair to him, his colleague from Ohio, and associates in this body to bring up the name of the former Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, with all these alleged irregularities, graft, and corruption, while the Senator is speaking in so many fine phrases about so many Democrats having been appointed to office? And if the Senator does not think it is unfair, my indignation boils at bringing it up at just this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should not accuse the Senator from Ohio of any unfairness in any event, but certainly in this instance he had nothing to do with it. It was brought up from the other side of the Chamber. But that is perfectly all right, Mr. President.

I suppose one ought never to try to judge what a court may do, or at any rate to discuss the verdict before it is returned. There has been a great deal of innuendo back and forth; intimations in this direction and that. I certainly hold no brief for the ex-Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, but as long as we indulge in hearsay, intimation, and innuendo and things that may come to pass, it seems to me pertinent to observe that apparently all of the Postmasters General have a great affinity for the airways. The present Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, is reported to have indulged himself and friends of his in a wonderful trip, a junket to visit our distinguished Vice President in Texas, at the complete expense of the Eastern Airways, one of the great airway concerns, which furnished the ships and furnished the gasoline. So apparently all of the Postmasters General like airways—yes; and so do other members of the administration, Mr. President. Oh, well, I shall not go into that.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. It has not been charged that the present Postmaster General burned any papers in the dark of the night.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But it is alleged that he burned a lot of gas.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I shall not yield further.

Mr. CLARK. Very well, if the Senator does not wish to yield further.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I shall not yield further at this time. [Laughter.] I am anxious to conclude.

The "plum book" is referred to in the article appearing in the Forum, Mr. President. It says:

This "plum book", as Washington quickly styled it, comprised 420 printed pages, listing approximately 50,000 jobs, including many diplomatic posts. Circulated in thousands of copies, it cost the Government Printing Office more than $6,000. It put patronage on a mail-order basis. Time and again during the summer job seekers were encountered in Washington corridors with copies of the official plunder index in hand, pencil marks encircling the plums selected for their personal wire-pulling excursions. So great was the demand for the salary catalog that a Washington newspaper reprinted 5,000 copies, in tabloid form, for over-the-counter sale at 25 cents each.

It was only a coincidence, of course, that the first copies of this unique Government publication were released on January 16, 1933, the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Pendleton Act—the original civil-service law—by President Arthur.

The Pendleton Act marked the culmination of a reform movement which had gained headway steadily since the 1850's. Confronted by a throng of office seekers in the White House, shortly after his first inauguration, Abraham Lincoln observed, gravely: "There you see something which in the course of time will become a greater danger to the Republic than the rebellion itself." Four years later he remarked to Carl Schurz, on the same subject: "I am afraid this thing is going to ruin republican government."

I have already mentioned, Mr. President, how far this administration has gone, with the creation of 37 great new bureaus—a bureaucracy such as even Russia under the czars might have envied.

Mr. President, I quote now the opening words of the Fifty-first Annual Report of the National Civil Service Report League, presented June 15, 1933:

The administration's program for recovery from the economic morass is seriously threatened by the spoils system, which may prove an insurmountable hurdle to its success.

The new administration has turned its back upon the only method of safeguarding these new agencies from maladministration. Without a single exception the agencies of government thus created have been thrown open to the political spoilsman to do with as he may see fit. The excuse given, when objection has been made to exemption from civil-service tests, has been that these agencies are a part of the emergency program and that they may prove temporary in character. A more specious excuse could not be devised to hoodwink the public.

Mr. President, that is not a partisan charge from Republican sources. That is from a nonpartisan source, from a journalist, who is not politically prejudiced either way.

In the light of 1933 history, it is interesting, too, to recall that the Democratic national platform of 1932 was the first since 1872 which did not specifically pledge party support of the Civil Service system.

But, Mr. President, the public debt marches steadily upward.

New bureaus and new jobs inevitably entail increased expenditures. So great, indeed, was the financial burden of the new deal that one Budget apparently could not carry it. The new two-Budget system spreads the deficit so thin that it has been entirely concealed. The public debt marches steadily upward.

Then the figures are given, which I shall not quote. They have been mentioned in some detail before. I pass over to the following statement:

The points presented in this survey of the revolution to date are only four: First, that despite a terrific Nation-wide hue and cry against bureaucratic expansion, 37 new agencies of Government have been created since last March; second, that in violation of a half century of American tradition, the spoils system has been revived in the Federal administration; third, that in the face of an unqualified pledge to curtail governmental costs, the administration has increased expenditures by more than $125,000,000 a month; and fourth, that the two-budget system operated as a device of concealment until the President delivered his Budget address to Congress on January 4 regarding Federal fiscal policies.

In the new session of Congress two roads are open. Either Federal finances will be honestly balanced or the Government soon will plunge headlong into direct inflation of the currency.

We have had a revolution—in spoils bureaucracy.

Mr. President, I need only remind the Senate that when France was approaching perhaps the greatest of all revolutions the bureaucrats held sway. Bureaucracy had come to its fairest flower in that land; the bureaucrats directed everybody in daily life; and that, together with other abuses, inevitably led to the revolution which came to pass and which bathed Paris and all France in blood.

From France to Russia is not a great distance perhaps in miles, but the system of bureaucracy in Russia under the czars and that existing in France just preceding the French Revolution were the same. The distance in time, from the end of the eighteenth century up to the beginning of the twentieth century, is considerable. The effects have been the same—revolution. The outstanding example of bureaucracy gone wild for many years was St. Petersburg—the bureaucracy of Russia and of the Romanoffs. Finally it resulted in the overthrow of that Government and the new system erected on the ruins of the old. Mr. President, it will inevitably have the same effect in this country unless we find means for curbing it. We have a bureaucracy here that would make that which existed in France preceding the revolution there and that which prevailed in Russia preceding the revolution there blush with shame.

Bureaucracy and dictatorship go hand in hand. We now have both in America. I have quoted to the Senate the insolent words of the Postmaster General, delivered in a speech at a nonpartisan meeting in Cleveland, where he undertook to browbeat Members of Congress and to intimidate them to such an extent, indeed, that he said if they voted against the President's wishes they would be left at home—rank intimidation, leading only to dictatorship. All these additional bureaus mean bureaucracy in its fullest flower. Bureaucracy and dictatorship, I repeat, go hand in hand, and in the past they have inevitably led to revolution.

So, Mr. President, I rise to protest against the prevailing system of bureaucracy that has grown up by leaps and bounds in this country during the past 11 months, and to suggest that for the good of the Republic the Congress should reassert its rights and curb that thing which ultimately will destroy not only the Constitution but the Government of the United States.

EXHIBIT A

OUR NEW SYSTEM OF BUREAUCRACY

By Lawrence Sullivan

First Citizen Doe—John to the tax collector—still is a bit foggy about it all, but he will take the professor's word on it. It was a revolution. In a twinkling, as history goes, government ceased to exist as a mere gatherer of income taxes, regulator of railroads, and nemesis of wicked trusts, and became overnight, as it seems in retrospect, an assessor of processing taxes and production quotas, supervisor of milk sheds and master of surplus pork, superbuilder and gargantuan forester, banker on a scale never before dreamed in modern history, and manager of what now appears to be an unmanageable currency.

It was all very sudden and to many estimable citizens quite unexpected. The legislative pell-mell on Capitol Hill left even the hardiest professional observers mumbling as early as mid-April, and soon there began to appear in the Washington dispatches the incredible word "revolution." Wary of this shocking characterization of national affairs editors ignored the word for a time. But when in June the Treasury announced the "conversion factor" for pretzels and zwieback the headline writers let go, too. Revolution it was. A conversion factor is merely a number which translates pounds of pretzels into bushels of wheat for the computation of the processing tax. But with so few of us in pretzels the term signified to the country at large only one more confusion factor. And there is but one gentle word to cover bewilderment and confusion. "Revolution" became a respectable colloquialism.

Let us then examine this almost bloodless, if not entirely painless, revolution in its influence upon the structure and functions of the Federal establishment, its immediate effect upon the Government personnel, and its bearing upon the national tax bill. Have we, in fact, set up a new system of government? Or have we merely added 37 new emergency cubits to the old structure, as the Navy adds protective "blisters" to its old battleships? Who are the 40,000 new employees added to the Federal pay roll since last March? And how did all manage to escape competitive civil-service examinations?

Yes; we have a balanced Budget; that is, one of our Budgets is nominally balanced. But we have, also, an unbalanced Budget—a second Budget, which could not be balanced for the current fiscal year were all prevailing Federal taxes doubled for the remaining 6 months.

In the name of economy some 12,000 men and women have been swept from the civil-service classification rolls. But a few more than 40,000 deserving citizens have been added to those patronage rolls which, by congressional enactment or Presidential Executive order, are specifically exempted from all civil-service regulations.

GOVERNMENT BY INITIAL

Viewed on this facet, the Roosevelt revolution, in its first phase, was not a revolution at all but merely—as the late Henry Van Dyke said of woman suffrage—"twice as much of the same thing." True, the Federal Government has ventured boldly into new territory. But that is precisely what has occurred in the creation of every new bureau in Washington for half a century. A problem; a bureau; an appropriation. Solved! Such is the formula for that system of government which Alfred E. Smith describes as "the cold, clammy hand of bureaucracy" (at the Century of Progress Exposition; not in the New Outlook).

Costly? To be sure. It is fabulously costly. The new agencies created since last March now have a combined pay roll which runs to approximately $5,000,000 a month. But so long as the Treasury can support this formula—and as long as the taxpayers sustain the Treasury—new bureaus, boards, divisions, agencies, authorities, and corporations mark the politician's path of least resistance. Bureaucracy is the cosmic urge in American government. Checked for a time, it flowers in ever more extravagant splendor. Overwhelming both men and parties, it survives even such unequivocal denunciations as the following from the Democratic national platform for 1932:

"We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportional result."

That plank was perfected in June 1932. The special session of Congress, which assembled during the national banking holiday the following March, continued but 100 days. The table below lists the larger new agencies of Government created during the session, with the number of employees on the rolls as of December 1, 1933:

H.O.L.C. (Home Owners' Loan Corporation)	13,748
F.C.A. (Farm Credit Administration)	6,769
A.A.A. (Agricultural Adjustment Administration)	4,076
F.D.I.C. (Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation)	1,614
N.R.A. (National Recovery Administration)	1,922
P.W.A. (Public Works Administration)	1,764
T.V.A. (Tennessee Valley Authority)	934
Total	30,827

Nor is this the alphabetical half of it. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration, which has been doling out approximately $50,000,000 a month since last May, has 150 people on its Washington administrative staff; the Federal Coordinator of Transportation employs 94; the Civilian Conservation Corps engages 109 officials and clerks and more than 1,000 Army and Navy officers and carries a monthly average of approximately 314,000 on its forestry pay roll. In the Federal Trade Commission, the new unit which administers the Securities Act employs 87 persons. And the new United States Employment Service has 347 in the recovery vineyards. There remain, then, the Central Statistical Board, the Federal Commodities Corporation, National Labor Board, Commodity Finance Corporation, Petroleum Administrative Board, Federal Civil Works Administration, Retail Code Authority, Federal Housing Corporation, Soil Erosion Service, Subsistence Homesteads Division, Petroleum Labor Policy Board, Deposit Liquidation Board, Business Advisory and Planning Council, National Planning Board. Each of these agencies employs from 10 to 50 persons. As of December all were less than 7 months old. Eight had been in existence less than 1 month. Four were created in the last half of November.

To review the pension claims of World War soldiers and sailors, the Veterans' Administration since July has established 58 regional boards of inquiry throughout the country. Each board is composed of five members, at $15 per diem. The Deposit Liquidation Board, created in October to hasten the reopening of banks closed by the March holiday orders, set up in November 64 cooperative regional bankers' committees to receive applications for liquidating loans from the R.F.C. The H.O.L.C. maintains 257 branch offices and at least one appraiser and one title examiner in each of the 3,016 counties in the United States. Under the law, the title examiner must be a registered attorney. Similarly, the A.A.A. maintains quota inspectors in every contract-production county. F.C.A. and R.F.C. maintain 79 branch credit offices.

Balancing and coordinating the activities of all these new coordinating agencies, the Executive Council, composed of the Cabinet and chiefs of the emergency units, meets with the President once a week, to advise on major stratagems. From its $3,300,000,000 construction fund, P.W.A. allotted $10,000 to defray the expenses of the council, $5,000,000 for administrative expenses of the N.R.A., and $300,000,000 for the second 6-month term of the C.C.C.

SABOTAGE OF THE CIVIL SERVICE

Closely coordinated with this unprecedented expansion of the Federal bureaucracy runs the challenging new policy in personnel administration, inaugurated under the direction of Postmaster General James A. Farley—a policy which veers sharply from the merit system established with the United States Civil Service Commission in 1883.

In all the new agencies, employment is specifically exempted from the three basic principles of the civil-service code—competitive examinations, dismissal for cause only, and promotion by efficiency ratings. The concerted opposition to any extension of the Civil Service Commissions' authority was strikingly delineated last spring in the legislative history of the farm bill. As originally presented to the House Committee on Agriculture, this measure provided that all new employees should be selected from the Civil Service classification rolls. The provision was stricken in committee. An effort to restore it failed on the floor, without a roll call. The Senate Committee on Agriculture reincorporated the original language, which was sustained on the floor. But in conference, the House stood firm. The Senate amendment was stricken. By various parliamentary maneuvers, the same result was achieved in every other bill creating a new administrative agency.

Nor has the sabotage of the merit system been limited to the new agencies. The National Civil Service Reform League reported on November 15 that it had twice requested information from the Post Office Department as to the number of postmasters dismissed since March, before the expiration of their appointed terms. In each instance the Post Office Department replied that the figures were not available.

"We have received numerous complaints of Presidential postmasters being asked to resign before the expiration of their terms of office and being succeeded by acting postmasters for obviously political reasons", this report ran.

Such charges from a mere partisan well might be dismissed as political froth. But the National Civil Service Reform League has been a going concern since 1881. Its national campaign mobilized public sentiment behind the Pendleton Act of 1883, which created the Civil Service Commission. Among its directing vice presidents today are James R. Angell, Newton D. Baker, Charles G. Dawes, William Cabell Bruce, A. Lawrence Lowell, Franklin MacVeagh, and Ogden H. Hammond.

"One common and recurring complaint", the league's report continued, "is that efficiency ratings have been juggled so that when reductions in force become necessary those employees not persona grata may be removed, even though years longer in the service than employees retained."

Sustaining these general conclusions are the reports of the National Federation of Federal Employees, an association of some 70,000 workers in every branch of the Government. President Luther C. Steward, of this organization, has tabulated some 12,000 classified employees dismissed from civil-service positions since last March—this while some 40,000 nonclassified workers were being added in the new agencies. "Dangerous and indefensible", was Mr. Steward's characterization of the new policy, as he surveyed the Government rolls in November. He charged:

"Serious inroads are being made into the merit system by spoilsmen representing the largest army of political job hunters in the history of the Nation. * * * In many instances newly appointed politicians with administrative authority have begun forcing out capable experienced employees with competitive status in order to replace them with political hangers-on.

"It is palpably absurd to expect the Federal Government to exert its maximum influence toward national economic recovery when such a large proportion of the agencies engaged in recovery work are overburdened with political appointees."

PLUM PUDDING

A former Governor of Mississippi is earning $6,000 a year in the A.A.A. His only job is to read newspapers and magazines from all sections of the country and clip items reflecting editorial reaction to the farm program.

A former Governor of Georgia is receiver for two defunct national banks in Washington, by appointment of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The son of the Clerk of the House of Representatives is Solicitor to the Department of Commerce.

A sister of a Senator from Virginia is Registrar of the United States Treasury.

In New York, the acting chairman of the Democratic State Committee (Mr. Farley is himself the nominal chairman) is the regional consultant of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. He must approve every application for Federal mortgage relief, before the papers may be forwarded to Washington.

In Ohio, the chairman of the Democratic State central committee also is the regional administrative officer for H.O.L.C.

James J. Hoey, who broke with Tammany Hall last fall to seek the borough presidency of Manhattan on the Farley-McKee recovery ticket, since has been appointed collector of internal revenue for New York.

Two weeks after the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, had dismissed 400 civil-service employees in the name of economy, a brother of a Senator from Alabama was appointed, last July, to be commercial attaché in the United States Legation at Ottawa. The job pays $6,500 a year. The report of the National Civil Service Reform League on this appointment concludes with the observation: "Colonel Bankhead's business experience was limited, and he had no familiarity with the duties of his position."

Patrick J. Maloney, of Columbia City, Ind., is treasurer of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. He had no previous experience in banking or finance. After teaching grade and high schools in Indiana for 5 years, he became interested in a Colorado gold-mining venture. At the time of his appointment he was a director of the Indiana Telephone Association.

From Pennsylvania a brother-in-law of the Democratic national committeeman, who had no background in railroading, was confirmed as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A prominent party leader in Chicago, who never had been identified with banking or finance, was confirmed as a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

On July 12 President Roosevelt directed Mr. Farley to draft legislation to bring all postmasters under civil-service regulations, "in order that I may submit it to the next session of Congress." But in his address before a national postal convention in Rochester, N.Y., in August Mr. Farley acknowledged that since March some 640 appointive postmasters had been removed, prior to the expiration of their terms, for violations of postal regulations. During the same month Francis J. Sinnott, a prominent district leader in Kings County, was named acting postmaster at Brooklyn. In announcing this appointment Mr. Farley, then in Brooklyn, said the permanent appointment would be made "as soon as Mr. Sinnott completes his civil-service examination."

Such are some random fruits of the personnel policy enunciated by the Postmaster General in his deathless apothegm: "Patronage is a reward to those who have worked for party victory."

PLANNED PLUNDER

The drive for jobs was formally launched in Washington some 3 months before the inauguration. Late in December 1932 the Senate approved a resolution submitted by Senator KENNETH D. MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, directing the Civil Service Commission to publish "a list of offices, positions, places, and employments under the Federal Government and the District of Columbia not under civil-service rules and regulations."

This "plum book", as Washington quickly styled it, comprised 420 printed pages, listing approximately 50,000 jobs, including many diplomatic posts. Circulated in thousands of copies, it cost the Government Printing Office more than $6,000. It put patronage on a mail-order basis. Time and again during the summer job seekers were encountered in Washington corridors with copies of the official plunder index in hand, pencil marks encircling the plums selected for their personal wire-pulling excursions. So great was the demand for the salary catalogue that a Washington newspaper reprinted 5,000 copies, in tabloid form, for over-the-counter sale at 25 cents each.

It was only a coincidence, of course, that the first copies of this unique government publication were released on January 16, 1933, the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Pendleton Act, the original civil service law, by President Arthur.

The Pendleton Act marked the culmination of a reform movement which had gained headway steadily since the 1850's. Confronted by a throng of office seekers in the White House, shortly after his first inauguration, Abraham Lincoln observed gravely: "There you see something which in the course of time will become a greater danger to the Republic than the rebellion itself." Four years later, he remarked to Carl Schurz, on the same subject: "I am afraid this thing is going to ruin republican government."

George William Curtis, one of the foremost champions of the 1883 law, thus epitomized the political debauchery at which the civil-service regime was aimed:

"Every 4 years the whole machinery of the Government is pulled to pieces. The country presents a most ridiculous, revolting, and disheartening spectacle. The business of the Nation and the legislation of Congress are subordinated to the distribution of plunder among partisans. President, Secretaries, Senators, Representatives are dogged, hunted, besieged, besought, denounced, and they become mere office brokers. * * * Economy, patriotism, honesty, honor, seem to have become words of no meaning."

Theodore Roosevelt, who served as a member of the Civil Service Commission from 1889 to 1895, was a vigorous defender of the reform. During his occupancy of the White House, the number of Federal positions subject to competitive examinations was more than doubled. His State papers bear frequent testimony of his devotion to the merit system. "It is as democratic and American as the common-school system itself", he said on one occasion.

Hear, then, the arresting opening sentence of the fifty-first annual report of the National Civil Service Reform League, presented June 15, 1933:

"The administration's program for recovery from the economic morass is seriously threatened by the spoils system, which may prove an insurmountable hurdle to its success."

Listing a few of the new agencies which had been created up to early June, the report continued:

"The new administration has turned its back upon the only method of safeguarding these new agencies from maladministration. Without a single exception the agencies of government thus created have been thrown open to the political spoilsman to do with as he may see fit. The excuse given when objection has been made to exemption from civil-service tests has been that these agencies are a part of the emergency program, and that they may prove temporary in character. A more specious excuse could not be devised to hoodwink the public."

In the light of 1933 history it is interesting, too, to recall that the Democratic national platform of 1932 was the first since 1872 which did not specifically pledge party support of the civil-service system.

THE JUGGLING ACT

New bureaus and new jobs inevitably entail increased expenditures. So great, indeed, was the financial burden of the new deal that one budget apparently could not carry it. The new 2-budget system spreads the deficit so thin that it has been entirely concealed. The public debt marches steadily upward.

Lashed to reluctant action by the money panic, the emergency Congress decreed savings of approximately $450,000,000 a year—$125,000,000 by the horizontal 15-percent pay cut and approximately $325,000,000 in veteran pensions. It next imposed new taxes, estimated to yield roughly $1,000,000,000 a year. In round numbers, therefore, the session took $1,500,000,000 from the red side of Uncle Sam's ledger for the fiscal year 1934.

Then came the emergency program, to be financed through the second budget.

What is the net result?

During the fiscal year 1933 ended June 30 last, the national debt, as officially reported by the Secretary of the Treasury, increased at the average rate of $6,013,000 a day. But in the 4 months July to October 1933 (the first third of the 1934 fiscal year) the average daily increase in the debt was $6,079,000. To put it another way, our new fiscal policy has saved $500,000,000 a year, increased taxes $1,000,000,000 a year, and left us with only a slightly larger daily deficit. Even as Alice in Wonderland, we must run twice as fast to hold our ground.

We have it directly from the great practical economist, Wilkins Macawber, that no matter how many budgets one may devise, he may yet honestly mark his progress toward solvency by comparing his net debt from month to month. This, by some curious happenstance, our Treasury still does. The net debt of the United States Government on February 28, 1933, was $20,700,000,000. On October 31 it was $22,100,000,000. The net increase for 8 months was $1,400,000,000—only about $200,000,000 more than the deficit for the entire fiscal year 1933, when we had only one Budget.

But even this shocking picture does not represent the full scope of the Government's enlarged program of spending and lending. Federal revenues for the 8 months were $561,000,000 greater than in the corresponding period of the previous year. For the period March–October, therefore, the excess of Federal outlay was, in round numbers, $1,900,000,000. Reduced to a single sentence, we may summarize the cost of the new deal in this way: For the first 8 months Treasury outlay has been at the average rate of $245,000,000 more per month than in the corresponding period of the previous year.

Roughly, $120,000,000 monthly of this increased outlay was in the form of loans through the various emergency credit agencies. In theory most of these eventually will be repaid.

As of December 1933 average direct expenditures of the principal emergency spending agencies were computed from the daily Treasury statements at approximately the following sums:

	Per month
Relief	$50,000,000
C.C.C	20,000,000
P.W.A	30,000,000
A.A.A	25,000,000
New pay roll	5,000,000
Increased interest	3,000,000
Total	133,000,000

Nor is this all. Months must pass before we feel the full fiscal burden of the many-sided boot-strap program. Organized in July, the P.W.A. had allocated by December 1 more than $2,500,000,000 of its $3,300,000,000 fund. But, because of the time lag between an award and the actual withdrawal of money to pay the contractor, only about $100,000,000 had been checked out of the Treasury. Yet the balance of $2,400,000,000 represents an obligation against Federal resources quite as real as a congressional appropriation. The allocations represent outstanding drafts against the Treasury. Under the new system of Federal bookkeeping, however, these drafts are not carried as a Budget charge until they are actually presented for collection. The same applies to an appropriation of $50,000,000 to the T.V.A., only about $500,000 of which had been expended up to November 1, and to the $400,000,000 assigned by the President to the Federal Civil Works Administration, all of which is to be paid out before April 1, 1934.

The theoretical validity of the single-entry, double-cross system of public accounting does not fall within the scope of this discussion. The points presented in this survey of the revolution to date are only four: First, that despite a terrific Nation-wide hue and cry against bureaucratic expansion, 37 new agencies of government have been created since last March; second, that in violation of a half century of American tradition, the spoils system has been revived in the Federal administration; third, that in the fact of an unqualified pledge to curtail governmental costs the administration has increased expenditures by more than $125,000,000 a month; and, fourth, that the two-budget system operated as a device of concealment until the President delivered his Budget address to Congress on January 4 regarding Federal fiscal policies.

In the new session of Congress two roads are open. Either Federal finances will be honestly balanced or the Government soon will plunge headlong into direct inflation of the currency.

We have had a revolution—in spoils bureaucracy.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 157. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)";

S. 284. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to School District No. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg.;

S. 1774. An act to provide for extension of time for making deferred payments on homestead entries in the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 2152. An act granting certain property to the State of Michigan for institutional purposes.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1975) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION APPROPRIATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7527.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in view of the importance of that particular measure, and because at its conclusion the bill that is now under consideration will again automatically come before the Senate, I am very glad to yield such consent to the request of the Senator from Arkansas as I may.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I understand the request of the Senator from Arkansas, it is that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What is the judgment of the Senator from Arkansas as to the length of time which will be required to dispose of the bill for which he asks consideration?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not sure that the consideration of the bill which I now ask may be taken up under the order I have requested may be completed this afternoon, but there is prospect that that may be done.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the very generous consent of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 7527.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Reed
Austin	Cutting	Keyes	Reynolds
Bachman	Davis	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Dickinson	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Russell
Barbour	Dill	Logan	Schall
Barkley	Duffy	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	Erickson	Long	Shipstead
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Smith
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Steiwer
Brown	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Thompson
Byrd	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Murphy	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Van Nuys
Carey	Hastings	Nye	Wagner
Clark	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Connally	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Copeland	Hebert	Pittman	White

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire to announce also that the following Senators, the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill may be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were, on page 2, line 23, after the word "duty", to strike out ": Provided further, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be allotted for expenditure for any Civil Works project under any other department or establishment of the Federal Government except such sums as may be necessary for maintenance and operation of reemployment agencies, and medical, surgical, and hospital services, and for administration, supervision, inspection, disbursing, and accounting purposes, and printing and binding, in connection with State and/or local Civil Works projects", and on page 3, line 11, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$100" and insert "$300", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide additional funds for carrying out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933 (48 Stat. 55), and for continuing the Civil Works program under the Federal Civil Works Administration as created under authority of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 200), there is hereby appropriated for these activities, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1935, the sum of $950,000,000, which shall be available for expenditure for such projects and/or purposes and under such rules and regulations as the President in his discretion may prescribe: Provided, That nothing contained in the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 shall be construed as precluding the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator from making grants for relief within a State directly to such public agency as he may designate: Provided further, That the provisions of the act entitled "'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916 (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 785), as amended, shall not apply to persons given employment by the Federal Civil Works Administration, and any rights of such persons to compensation or other benefits which may have accrued under such act shall terminate upon the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as precluding the furnishing to such persons at the expense of the United States of such medical, surgical, and hospital treatment as may be necessary to meet the emergency of an injury sustained in the performance of duty: Provided further, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Federal Civil Works Administration when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $300.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill as reported carries an appropriation of $950,000,000. The Administrator proposes to devote $450,000,000 of that sum to the Civil Works Administration. The other $500,000,000 he proposes to use for relief. It is the intention of the relief administration thus to divide the amount. The amount is appropriated for all purposes; it might all be used for relief or it might all be used for the Civil Works Administration; but that is the suggestion as coming from the Administrator Mr. Hopkins. There is no provision in the bill requiring such a division; the $950,000,000 can be used for either purpose, but that is the manner in which Mr. Hopkins expressed himself as desiring to divide the amount. It will be noted that the money is available for expenditure for such projects and/or purposes under such rules and regulations as the President in his discretion may prescribe. It will thus be seen that what we virtually do is to put the $950,000,000 in the President's hands for relief and Civil Works purposes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. FESS. I do not quite get the distinction. What do we mean by $500,000,000 for relief?

Mr. McKELLAR. Civil Works projects have been established all over the country, in connection with which salaries are to be paid. The portion which the administrator expects to use for that purpose is $450,000,000.

Mr. FESS. What is included under the word "relief"?

Mr. McKELLAR. All kinds of relief, such as the Government has been granting directly to States, counties, and municipalities for the benefit of the unemployed.

I wish to call attention to the first proviso, which allows administrators to make grants of relief within a State directly to such public agency as he may designate.

The second proviso precludes employees of the United States under the C.W.A. from the benefit of the Employees' Compensation Act. This provision occasioned some discussion in the committee, but it was determined that in giving work to those in need such persons should not also have the benefits of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act.

Mr. WAGNER. Why not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Because it would take up a very large part of the appropriation.

Mr. WAGNER. How much?

Mr. McKELLAR. It would take up $21,000,000, as estimated by Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator of the opinion as to these projects, many of which are municipal and State projects which under ordinary circumstances would have been initiated by the municipalities or the States except for the depression, that men working upon those projects are not entitled to workmen's compensation the same as men working in factories and other places of employment. It seems to me they are being discriminated against.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think where a person is out of employment and the Government comes along and graciously gives him employment, he ought not to have the right to make claims against the Government, possibly claims for life compensation and all kinds of claims on account of the work thus given him generously by the Government.

I will take that matter up a little later for further discussion. The committee determined that that provision should remain in the bill. The President recommended that that provision should be in the bill, and I think the President is right. I think the committee was right in thus putting it in the bill. The committee thought under the circumstances, and inasmuch as this work is being furnished purely for the benefit of the recipients, that it was not right to saddle upon the Government a large and perhaps perpetual compensation allowance. However, the third proviso permits all these persons to have medical, surgical, and hospital aid in case of injury.

The next proviso in the bill as it passed the House—that no part of the appropriation herein made shall be allotted for expenditure for any Civil Works project under any other department or establishment of the Federal Government, except such sums as may be necessary for operation and maintenance of reemployment agencies, and medical, surgical, and hospital service, and for administration, supervision, inspection, disbursing, and accounting purposes, and printing and binding in connection with State and/or local Civil Works projects—was stricken out for the reason that the committee was of the opinion that there are many Federal projects, such as road projects, public parks projects, Government works projects here and elsewhere, that ought not to be barred from participating in this fund. The purpose of the appropriation is to give work to the unemployed. How better employ them than on regular Public Works projects?

The committee thought that this provision should be stricken out because it would preclude the C.W.A. from building roads that might be Federal projects or improving parks or doing work on other public proposals, and therefore this was stricken out. The committee retained the last proviso in the bill put on by the House with an amendment changing the $100 to $300. In other words, section 370 of the revised statute provides for purchase by advertising and bidding, and the administration was relieved of this provision where this amount involved was less than $300.

Mr. President, Mr. Hopkins, the Federal Civil Works Administrator, appeared before the committee and made a wonderful and illuminating statement as to what his administration has done since its appointment. I want to ask all Senators whether they are for the bill or not, whether they are for the C.W.A. or not, whether they even believe in it or do not believe in it, in fairness and justness to themselves as legislators to read this statement of Mr. Hopkins. It will be found in the hearings. It is a wonderful exposition of the splendid work that has been done by the Civil Works Administration. I believe it will commend itself to every Senator.

I want to invite the attention of Senators to another thing. Some of the startling statements made by Mr. Hopkins were that upon investigation last March he found 4,500,000 families in the United States receiving relief from local, State, and public funds. Criticism is offered of this proposal, but think of it, Senators, 4,500,000 families in America receiving aid from Federal, State, and local authorities. This meant, according to Mr. Hopkins, that 20,000,000 of our people or practically one sixth of the population were in some way receiving aid, State or local or National.

That number increased slightly in October and November to 300,000 or 400,000 more. By the middle of November the number was down to 3,400,000 families. The percentage of colored on relief was twice the percentage that the whole colored population bears to the white population. There was a higher percentage of children on the rolls. There were on the rolls nearly 6,000,000 children under 16 years of age. There were less elderly people than were to be expected.

During the month of November some 27 percent of the population had some kind of relief. Think of that a moment, Mr. President. In the month of November some 27 percent of our people were getting relief of some form, nature, or description.

Some Senators have been criticizing the C.W.A. Think what they did! With some 20,000,000 people receiving relief, they put 4,000,000 men and women to work in 30 days. It is a wonderful job. It was organized in every State, in some 3,000 counties, and that is practically all of them. In the main, it was a nonpartisan organization throughout the country. Some 400,000 projects, some in every county and township in the United States, were approved and prosecuted. The 4,000,000 men put to work were divided between the several States—75 percent on the basis of population and 25 percent on the basis of families receiving relief. Five hundred million dollars in wages and $200,000,000 in materials will be the record of the C.W.A. up to February 10. This represented a combination of all funds, national and local. No work was being done by contract, either. All purchases were being made according to law. The number of people benefited, Mr. Hopkins estimated, is between 12,000,000 and 13,000,000.

Asked about the wage scale, Mr. Hopkins said the reason they were paid $1.10 per hour was because the funds came from the Public Works Act. It will be remembered that $400,000,000 came from the Public Works Act, and under that act those in authority had to pay according to the Public Works Law. That is a provision in that law with which every Senator is familiar. The result was that the scale of wages was higher than that which prevailed in the same area.

Another peculiar feature of the situation is that there were only 200,000 women put into employment. Out of the 4,000,000 people, only 200,000 of them were women.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator referred to a wage differential. Does that continue under the new plan on the same basis?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not.

One of the reasons given by Mr. Hopkins for the rather remarkable and startling fact that there were only 200,000 women on the Civil Works roll was that relief was generally given to the heads of families, and it shows what a good job is being done. They found it difficult, also, to get the type of work which women could do. One of these methods was to use women in teaching rural schools, and I desire to call the attention of every Senator here to what a splendid work this is.

They had about 13,000 teachers teaching in rural schools when the schools otherwise would have been closed. Did they pay them large salaries? Oh, no; only $35 a month as a rule. In some cases they paid $40, but as a rule $35 a month. These teachers in country schools were without employment. The school authorities were without the money with which to pay them. The children would have been prevented from going to school if the schools had been closed, and yet 13,000 rural teachers, and in all 35,000 teachers, were employed all over the country.

Under this bill this system can be continued. I have been asked about that feature of it, whether or not any of this money could be used for such purposes. It is perfectly evident that it can be under this bill.

In Mississippi they had 2,000 teachers engaged in teaching illiterates.

About $14,000,000 have been paid out for compensation to persons who were injured. Mr. Hopkins thought this should be continued, but the committee did not agree with him. The committee thought that the furnishing of employment under the circumstances ought to be sufficient, and that otherwise a large pension roll would be built up. It was thought that $21,000,000 would be required to pay for those injured, and if that sum was set aside it would not be spent for unemployment purposes.

Of the 4,000,000 men put to work, 2,600,000 are working on Federal projects.

Mr. Hopkins was asked about the misuse of money, and he went into this question very frankly. On page 30 of the hearings he says that with over 4,000,000 men employed in the C.W.A., 14 people have been arrested in the United States for all kinds of delinquencies; and I stop here long enough to say that that question was brought up here a while ago. That is one thing that can be said for Mr. Hopkins, he is not trying to cover up anything. If there is any wrongdoing, he wants to be the very first to know it, and he will be the very first to prosecute that wrongdoing. If there are delinquencies, he wants to do away with those who are delinquent in every way.

I say to you, Senators, that in my judgment the expenditure of this enormous sum of money, $700,000,000, in about 3 months, with only 14 persons arrested, under a will to arrest where there are delinquencies, makes a wonderful record. I think we can safely entrust to this branch of the Government the amount that is fixed in this bill for relief, and $450,000,000 for Civil Works, a large portion of which is work on the Federal program.

I differ with some of my friends who have criticized this bill. I think the Civil Works Administration has been a great benefit to the country. They have bought $200,000,000 worth of material, which has benefited almost every business man in the land. This money is spent among the plain people of our country. It is spent among those who have to spend it again. It is a great benefit to all the population; and at this trying time, when but recently we had 13,000,000 persons unemployed or receiving relief, all told, it is a matter that ought to be continued until the weather breaks, under any circumstances.

Senators will want to know what Mr. Hopkins' view was about that subject, and I desire to explain to them just what he said about it. I think that is very necessary. I am going to take only a few moments more, because this is a very simple matter after we get our minds on it.

Here is Mr. Hopkins' statement. I quote from page 32 of the hearing:

> Now about the money, because that is an important item: Our Civil Works funds will be exhaused next week.

That means this week, because this hearing was held last Saturday.

> This bill provides for an appropriation of $950,000,000. Our relief fund, the original $500,000,000, will be exhausted by the end of February or early in March. This $950,000,000 is a request for an appropriation for relief for Civil Works and for relief grants to the States from the 10th of February on.
>
> It is our thought that the money would be divided substantially as follows: $450,000,000 of it would be expended on Civil Works, and $500,000,000 on relief. No administrative decision, however, has been made on this point.
>
> It is our present plan to begin to demobilize Civil Works soon after the 15th of February, completing the demobilization about the 1st day of May. It is our thought to synchronize that demobilization with the planting season, for instance, in rural areas, and to move it gradually down through the great industrial centers.

Mr. Hopkins did not say so here, but at another point in the hearing he said that during this time as many of the people who were out of employment as could be transferred to the Public Works operations would be so transferred, and in that way the necessity for continuing the Civil Works Administration would be relieved.

Here are the reasons which Mr. Hopkins gives; and in view of an amendment to make the sum larger I desire to call the attention of the Senate particularly to this statement:

> Our reasons for not recommending a sum of money which will continue Civil Works I think are substantially these:
>
> First. It was started as an emergency enterprise. When the President announced Civil Works, it was to meet the emergency this winter.
>
> Second. There will be a substantial pick-up in Public Works.
>
> Third. Civil Works was started at the low point of employment—that is, December and January have always been the low months in factory reemployment—so there will be a seasonal pick-up.
>
> Fourth. A great many of the persons on Civil Works are tenant farmers and other farmers who needed benefits this winter because of their economic situation, and who in the spring and the beginning of the planting season, when they can get their cattle out to grass in the Northern States, will be able to get along.
>
> Fifth. With the pick-up in general business through the instrumentality of the Recovery Act, we will get very substantial numbers of these totals on a self-sustaining basis in industry.
>
> Finally, I do not believe that anybody can now project the economic situation over a period of months ahead to an extent that would warrant asking an appropriation from the Congress to do specific and certain things. It seems to me that this $950,000,000 is a fund which will carry us through until the Congress meets again.

Mr. Hopkins estimates that the Civil Works projects will stop by the 1st of May, but he estimates that the $500,000,000 set aside for relief will carry the Government through until next January.

Mr. GORE and Mr. CUTTING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I noticed in the morning paper a suggestion that a plan was under consideration to extend the Civil Works Administration for 1 year from and after May 1. Does the Senator understand, or do I understand him to say, that such a plan is not now in contemplation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I never have heard of it. Mr. Hopkins, as you see—I have been reading from his testimony—says directly to the contrary of that suggestion, and no one has suggested such a plan to me.

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator's information is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope so, too.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I was wondering whether the Senator could inform us if Mr. Hopkins has given the committee any estimate of the number of unemployed persons he would have absorbed under the four different specifications which the Senator has just quoted.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; he did not give the figures in connection therewith; but if the Senator will read the hearings in which Mr. Hopkins' statement is to be found, he will see, I think, that Mr. Hopkins certainly understands his business. It is almost impossible for an outsider to understand what a tremendous grasp another man has of a subject like this. If we were any judges at all, Mr. Hopkins certainly knows his business and is an admirable man for that place.

Mr. CUTTING. I did not mean my question to imply any disrespect for Mr. Hopkins, for whom I have the highest regard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, I know that.

Mr. CUTTING. I just think that in a matter of this sort, where, as I understand from reading the hearings, there are 15,000,000 persons on the relief rolls at the present time, it would be interesting to have some kind of estimate as to how many of those men we are going to be able to take care of if we let the C.W.A. go.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; there are not that many on the rolls because 4,000,000 deducted from the full number that were on the rolls will leave a much smaller number. In the case of those receiving benefits it was estimated that there were four persons per family. Mr. Hopkins has put 4,000,000 on the rolls. That would make the total number to whom he is giving employment or giving relief, directly or indirectly, about 16,000,000. So the number on the relief rolls is not as great as the Senator has stated.

I will say that Mr. Hopkins very frankly said that no man could tell what might be the result by a given time, but, to the best of his judgment—and I think we will all agree that he not only has good judgment but he has knowledge of the situation—$950,000,000 would do the job. The committee thought so and reported this bill unanimously, as I remember. If I have done anybody an injustice on that subject, I hope he will rise and state the fact. I believe one or two Senators suggested that they had no objection to the bill, but that they might want to criticize it when it reached the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have concluded what I desire to say, except to answer any question that any Senator wants to ask. I desire to have printed in the RECORD at this point a message of the President of date January 27, 1934, and the bill attached thereto.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 27, 1934.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to request an additional appropriation of $950,000,000 for the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933, and for continuing the Civil Works program under the Federal Civil Works Administration established by Executive Order No. 6420–B of November 9, 1933, pursuant to the authority of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933.

Section 2 (a) of the Federal Emergency Relief Act made available for the purposes of that act $500,000,000 of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Executive order establishing the Federal Civil Works Administration made available for that Administration $400,000,000 of the appropriation of $3,300,000,000 made by the fourth deficiency act, fiscal year 1933, for National Industrial Recovery.

The funds available for these two activities will be exhausted early in the month of February 1934, and it is essential that additional funds be provided to avoid an abrupt termination of this relief work.

I am confident that the Congress is in sympathy with the proposed continuance of these relief activities.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

A bill making an additional appropriation for certain emergency relief activities, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide additional funds for carrying out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, and for continuing the Civil Works program under the Federal Civil Works Administration created under authority of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, there is hereby appropriated for these activities, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $950,000,000, which shall be available for expenditure for such projects and/or purposes and under such rules and regulations as the President, in his discretion, may prescribe: Provided, That nothing contained in the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 shall be construed as precluding the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator from making grants for relief within a State directly to such public agency as he may designate: Provided further, That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, shall not apply to persons given employment by the Federal Civil Works Administration, and any rights to compensation or other benefits which may have accrued under the said act shall cease and determine upon the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as precluding the furnishing to such persons at the expense of the United States of such medical, surgical, and hospital treatment as may be necessary to meet the immediate emergency of an injury sustained in the performance of duty.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, will he yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am very strong for the continuation of the C.W.A. work, and I think Mr. Hopkins has made a wonderful success of it. The complaint has continually come to me, however, that there was not enough work to take care of all those who wanted work, and I presume the same complaint has come to every Member here. It is commonly reported, through the press and otherwise, that some five or six million people who would like to get work are out of work and cannot be taken care of under the present situation.

Is there any means of taking care of the rest of these unemployed persons? Is this money enough to take care of them?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it is proposed to take care of every unemployed person, but those in charge of this work are going to take care of all the worthy unemployed they can find.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then, Mr. President, a few days ago another item was called to my attention, and there was considerable talk about it. Under date of January 27 the Washington Post carried an article headed "The Army to Operate the C.W.A." The New York Times of the same date carried an article headed, "Army Men Drafted to End C.W.A. Graft."

I am wondering whether the chairman of the committee can tell us how far they intend to go in having the Army connected with the C.W.A. work.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say this, that some trouble arose concerning the administrator in the State from which I come, Tennessee. I do not know what the character of the trouble was, but it seems that an Army officer of skill and ability was asked to come there to help straighten out that trouble. I do not believe it is intended at all to call in the Army, but it is intended that this work shall go on for the next 3 months substantially as it has proceeded in the past 3 months.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to me that in the statement he has just made the Senator from Tennessee has inadvertently exaggerated what Mr. Hopkins expects to do. As a member of the committee, I did not understand that he expected to do what the Senator from Tennessee has said—take care of all the worthy unemployed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. If I said that, I said more than I should have said. He is going to do the very best he can with the money at hand to carry out the plans now in existence.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which I think may be acceptable to the Senator from Tennessee and to the committee. I offer it and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment which the clerk will report.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Arkansas proposes the following amendment: That paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of title III of Public Law No. 302, Seventy-second Congress, approved July 21, 1932—Emergency Relief Construction Act of 1932—be amended by striking out the date "July 1, 1933", where it appears in said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the date "September 1, 1934."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the amendment is necessary on account of this state of facts. In one or more of the States a portion of the funds intended for matching highway funds have been allotted, contracts have been let and are in process of execution. The contracts have not been completed, and the funds have not been expended. It is necessary, in order to complete the contracts already entered upon, to incorporate this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement from the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads and offer a statement from the director of highways of the State of Arkansas relative to the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D.C., January 17, 1934.

Hon. J. T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ROBINSON: Director Rhyne, of the Arkansas Highway Commission, has conferred with me regarding the extension of availability of highway funds apportioned to the State under the provisions of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932.

While it would be possible to prevent any loss of these funds to the State by a permissible adjustment between emergency and regular funds set up on the projects in question, it is extremely doubtful whether such adjustment would relieve the rather complex situation with respect to the legal status of existing contracts. I am inclined to believe, therefore, that, if you feel that legislation extending the availability of these funds through September 1, 1934, can be secured through Congress within a period of 2 or 3 weeks, it probably would be desirable to adopt this procedure, as the State highway department would then be in a better position to deal with the legal aspects concerning default or fulfillment of the contracts.

Very truly yours,

THOS. H. MACDONALD,
Chief of Bureau.

ARKANSAS STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
Little Rock, Ark., January 20, 1934.

Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, Senator,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, Public, 302, Seventy-second Congress, granted to the several States a sum of money to be used by these States in the matching of regular Federal-aid funds in the construction of highways. On December 31, 1933, the State of Arkansas had an unexpended balance in this emergency-relief fund of approximately $230,000. This unexpended balance has all been obligated on contracts which were to have been finished as of December 31, 1933, but which, owing to several reasons, have not been finished.

Plans on these several projects call for a bituminous asphalt surface either upon a clay gravel base or a water-bound macadam base and were submitted to the Bureau of Public Roads during March 1933. Owing to an Executive order by the President of the United States which stopped consideration and approval of work financed under the above-mentioned act, all consideration of this act was suspended. This Executive order was rescinded during the latter part of June 1933, thus causing a delay of approximately 3 months in placing these jobs under construction; however, very little delay was encountered by this department in immediately placing the remaining jobs under construction after the Executive order was lifted as our proposals were received on July 12, which was as early as we could legalize the advertisement after the lifting of the order. This delay, however, carried our construction period into the latter half of the year during which unsuitable weather conditions were encountered, particularly during the months of November and December, which prevented the completion of the work.

It is the opinion of this office that the proper way to handle this matter would be an extension of time for an expenditure of these funds and we respectfully request that you use your efforts along this line.

Very truly yours,

JAS. R. RHYNE,
Director of Highways.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I shall vote for the $950,000,000 appropriation, because I do not see anything else to do under the circumstances and in the emergency. It seems to me that some wiser plan could have been made for the expenditure of this money, whereby we would have retained some lasting benefit.

If any thought had been taken in the construction of a plan to help the needy, why could not contracts have been let for various projects to the lowest bidder, with reservations for a 30-hour week and a minimum wage, where efficiency and honesty would have been the watchword instead of politics, graft, and corruption, as we now have. The rottenness of graft and partisanship reeks to high heaven. Only three States are so far known to be exempt from this charge, and that is because they have not yet been investigated.

Congress voted direct Federal relief and also funds for Public Works to "prime the pump." But inasmuch as the administration deliberately delayed relief and Public Works projects, it conceived the idea of diverting $400,000,000 of the Public Works funds into what is now known as the "Civil Works Administration", or C.W.A., where little or no permanent beneficial results are had. Up to date out of all our funds spent from the Federal Treasury only a very small part has found its way into projects that will stimulate the capital-goods industry, which has been the most seriously affected and which is the heart of the depression. It is the capital-goods industry where the employment is the smallest and the activity is the least. Federal funds should have early been applied to stimulate it.

Coolidge headed off the depression in 1921 by promptly spending over $11,000,000,000 for public works, and besides this amount spent during his administration for public works paid on the public debt accumulated during the Wilson Democratic administration $10,000,000,000. The present administration squanders Federal funds without permanent results. It postpones the evil day. No resuscitation of private industry will mean that the C.W.A. employees will have no place to go to cover when the funds are exhausted. President Hoover spent around seven billion for public works, and if he had been able to spend more we would have kept our equilibrium despite the blow-up of the stock exchange.

If the administration had deliberately set out to cause a revolution, I do not see how it could have better planned. There must be a day of reckoning. It hopes, no doubt, to be the man on horseback of that fatal hour. It is already charged with seeking to militarize the C.C.C., the C.W.A., and the other 35 alphabetical bureaucracies it has formed in the last 11 months. A subservient Congress has given it the power of a dictatorship.

In that dictatorship the administration has been given the power to place an embargo through the tariff upon all imports. If the President had used this power to place an embargo on all goods made and raised in this country, together with a 30-hour week, there would be no unemployment. Ninety-four percent of our commerce is within our own States and a 30-hour week would furnish a job to everyone in the country who wanted it.

But instead of doing this the administration, by means of its "national ruin act", raises the price of everything we need and thereby makes possible more imports, with consequent more unemployment, and hinders and obstructs every effort to stimulate the capital-goods industry through higher prices and the fostering of combinations in restraint of trade, with the inevitable result of the destruction of all the little independent businesses in the country.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the bill, which amendment I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Arizona offers the following amendment:

On page 2, line 14, to strike out all after the comma, down to and through the word "duty", in line 23, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Are hereby extended to employees of the Civil Works Administration so far as they may be applicable, subject, however, to the following conditions: (a) That the total aggregate compensation in any individual case shall not exceed the sum of $5,000, exclusive of medical costs; (b) that the minimum limit on monthly compensation for disability, established by section 6, and the minimum limit on the monthly pay on which death compensation is to be computed, established by clause (K) of section 10, shall not apply; (c) that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall establish a special schedule of compensation for the loss or loss of use of members or functions of the body, which shall be in lieu of all other compensation in such cases and which schedule shall when approved by the President continue in effect without change or modification until the Congress by law shall otherwise provide; (d) that any payments of compensation heretofore made upon approval of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission not in excess of the provisions herein shall be valid; and (e) that the said Commission is hereby authorized in its discretion to provide for the initial payments of compensation and the furnishing of immediate medical attention through the local authorities of the Civil Works Administration: Provided further, That so much of the sum appropriated by this act as the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, with the approval of the Director of the Budget, estimates and certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury will be necessary for administrative expenses and for the payment of such compensation shall be set aside in a special fund to be administered by the Commission for such purposes."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation of the purpose of the amendment. House bill 7527, as it came to the Senate, provides that hereafter no compensation shall be paid for the death or injury of any Civil Works employee, and that any rights to compensation that have accrued prior to this time shall be taken from them.

The Civil Works program began about the middle of last November, and from the beginning, all those employed on Civil Works have enjoyed the full benefits of the Federal Employees Compensation Act of 1916 as amended. The program is about half completed. It has been going on for 2½ months. The pending bill appropriates money to carry on Civil Works until the 1st of May, or another 2½ months. The sponsors of that measure are saying to those who have been injured on Civil Works projects up to this time, "Although the Federal Government has been granting these benefits, they shall be taken away from you, and anyone who loses his life or who is injured from now on shall be paid no compensation of any kind. It was pointed out in the House of Representatives by the chairman in charge of the bill that very large obligations upon the United States Treasury have been imposed through the operation of the existing compensation law.

I have here a list of the first 12 cases that have been adjusted by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission; and spreading over a period of years—it may extend to 40 or 50 years—the total compensation paid in all forms to widows and other dependents will vary from $2,000 to $21,000, with an average above $9,000. In the amendment which I have offered I have fixed a limit of $5,000, adopting that sum because that is the usual amount which Congress allows to those employed by the Government in special claims bills in case of death or permanent and total disability.

The amendment further provides that the minimum limit on monthly compensation for disability as provided in the Compensation Act shall be removed.

Section 6 of the Compensation Act provides:

That the monthly compensation for total disability shall not be more than $116.66 nor less than $58.33, unless the employee's monthly pay is less than $58.33, in which case his monthly compensation shall be the full amount of his monthly pay.

The amendment would remove that minimum limit of $58.33.

The same thing is true as to the minimum limit on the monthly pay on which death compensation is to be computed as provided by clause (K) of section 10 of the Employees' Compensation Act.

That clause reads as follows:

(K) In computing compensation under this section the monthly pay shall be considered not to be more than $175 nor less than $87.50, but the total monthly compensation shall not exceed the monthly pay computed as provided in section 12.

The minimum limit now, as will be observed, is $87.50 per month, while the amendment provides that the Employees' Compensation Commission, with the approval of the President, shall establish a special schedule of compensation for C.W.A. workers for the loss or the loss of the use of members or functions of the body.

There may well be a distinct difference between insurance guaranteed to a civil-service employee who enters the service after a physical examination and expects to make it his life work and that provided for a man who is taken from the body of the population, without physical examination, and employed for a comparatively short period of time.

It is believed that a maximum sum of $5,000 would be fair compensation either for death or for injury occurring in course of such temporary employment, and that as to other minor injuries it would be well to leave the amount to be paid and the length of the term of payment to the Employees' Compensation Commission, with the approval of the President.

That, Mr. President, is the sum and substance of the amendment, except in one respect. In his testimony before our Committee on Appropriations Mr. Hopkins, the Civil Works Administrator, submitted a statement in which he not only protested against the action taken by the House of Representatives in repealing and denying all compensation benefits to C.W.A. employees but also suggested that there be taken from this appropriation of $950,000,000 a sufficient sum of money to be set aside to meet the estimated cost of all such compensation.

It is estimated that out of an expenditure to date of about $500,000,000 it will require $14,000,000 to meet the cost of all the compensation benefits that have accrued during the past 2½ months. Mr. Hopkins further stated that, with the additional money for civil works carried in this bill, there would be a total obligation of perhaps $21,000,000 against the United States for workmen's compensation. Whatever the sum may be, whether $14,000,000 or $21,000,000, the amendment I have offered proposes that an estimate be made by the Employees' Compensation Commission and the Director of the Budget and that the amount thus estimated be set aside as a special fund in the Treasury out of the sum now to be appropriated to meet such compensation payments. In other words, the ultimate effect is going to be that a little less money will be available in providing work for the unemployed, but, as to all who do work, there will be an assurance to them that if they should be killed their dependents would be cared for in a ratable degree, and if they should be injured they would receive a fair compensation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I did not fully understand the reading of the Senator's amendment. Does it provide for a pension in behalf of Civil Works employees after their retirement from the service?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the amendment provides that they shall receive compensation based upon the same general system and paid in the same manner as in the case of other Federal employees, except that the maximum amount that may be paid to anyone on account of injury or death is $5,000.

Mr. GORE. My question was suggested by the fact that on yesterday an old gentleman approached me in the lobby and expressed the hope that I support a measure or an amendment providing for a pension on behalf of the widows and dependents of those who might be killed or injured in this humane service provided by the taxpayers for the relief of the unemployed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me make it perfectly clear to the Senator from Oklahoma that from the inception of this humane service to which he has referred and up to this good hour anyone who has lost his life or has been injured in such service has been entitled to the full benefits of the existing Federal Employees' Compensation Act. The House of Representatives proposes to completely wipe out such compensation not only for the future but to take away all benefits that have heretofore been granted to any of the C.W.A. employees.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the Senator from Arizona how great an amount of compensation as compared to that given to other Federal employees the amendment of the Senator from Arizona proposes?

Mr. HAYDEN. If I correctly caught the Senator's question, the amount payable to C.W.A. workers by reason of the compensation provisions of existing law is $14,000,000 out of a total expenditure of $500,000,000. Mr. Hopkins' estimate was that the total payments for injuries or deaths that have occurred up to the present time, if existing law shall not be changed, would impose an obligation in future years upon the Government of about $14,000,000. The same proportion would prevail if the C.W.A. appropriations are increased.

It was his suggestion—and I quote his words from the hearings:

> Under this plan, out of the funds appropriated, we would give to the Federal Compensation Commission the full cost, as estimated by their actuaries for the whole period of time, out of this appropriation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What reduction in compensation does the Senator from Arizona suggest?

Mr. HAYDEN. I suggest in my amendment that the maximum amount paid for the loss of life or the maximum amount paid for injury to any one person be limited to $5,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the Senator at this moment recall what the limitations of the Compensation Act are?

Mr. HAYDEN. I can only judge by a statement from the Employees' Compensation Commission which I shall put in the RECORD, that in the first 12 cases that have been adjudicated by that Commission, cases involving loss of life in the Civil Works Administration, the first one, a widow, would receive a total of $7,716; she has three children and they would receive, respectively, $872, $658, and $543. With the burial expense of $200 that would make a total of $9,989 spread over a period of years.

In the next adjudicated case the total amount payable to a widow and children would aggregate $21,735. In the next case the aggregate amount to be paid out of the Federal Treasury would be $18,477. The average of the first 12 cases is about $9,000.

I suggest the amount of $5,000 because, as Senators are well aware, the congressional rule is that where a Federal employee loses his life or is permanently and totally injured the maximum amount that we will pay through the medium of a relief bill is $5,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Were the claims in each of the cases mentioned by the Senator from Arizona for death?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; the first 12 cases cited are for death. There has been a total of 142 fatal accidents up to this time, and the total of nonfatal accidents is 14,219. There have been filed with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission up to the date of this report 5,268 claims.

I now ask, Mr. President, that the table to which I have referred may be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Estimated compensation cost of first 12 fatal injury cases reported for C.W.A. employments in which awards were made

Case	Compensation estimated to be paid to—					Total compensation	Estimated burial costs	Total estimated cost
	Widow	Other dependents
2023	$7,716	$872	$658	$543		$9,789	$200	$9,989
1753	20,515	1,020				21,535	200	21,735
1752	14,189	1,810	1,220	1,020	$38	18,277	200	18,477
1878	9,831	999	873			11,703	200	11,903
2386	5,835	2,880	425	306		9,446	200	9,646
1363	1,852					1,852	200	2,052
2584	4,675	711	708	636	82	6,812	200	7,012
1750	5,477					5,477	200	5,677
544	8,168	545	344	70		9,127	115	9,242
3731	5,519				[1] 363	5,882	200	6,082
1841			354		[2] 352	706	200	906
1769	8,757				[1] 439	9,916	200	9,396
Total	92,534					109,802	2,315	112,117

[1] Mother.
[2] Father.
Average cost per case, $9,343.

NOTE.—The estimate of costs of death benefits shown in the tabulation above is based on the allowance provided under the workmen's compensation plan adopted by the Civil Works Administration for its employees, which are the same as allowances authorized by the Compensation Act of Sept. 7, 1916. Under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' compensation law of Mar. 4, 1927, which limits the aggregate benefits which may be paid in a single case, the total cost of compensation in the cases listed on the tabulation would be approximately one third less.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator's amendment affect rights which have already accrued in a case where a person has been killed as a result of employment on a C.W.A. project?

Mr. HAYDEN. My amendment is a compromise and does in part what the House seeks to do wholly. The House of Representatives absolutely wiped out any compensation whatsoever to C.W.A. workers by a provision of the bill as it passed that body, which reads:

> And any rights of such persons to compensation or other benefits which may have accrued under such act shall terminate upon the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. WAGNER. I read that, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. HAYDEN. In my judgment, Congress should put all Civil Works employees on the same basis, and my amendment provides that the Commission shall establish a special schedule of compensation and that—

> Any payments of compensation heretofore made upon approval of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission not in excess of the provisions herein shall be valid.

If existing rates of payment are in excess of the established schedule, they shall be reduced to the amount specified in it.

Mr. WAGNER. If under the law one of the conditions of employment is that compensation is to be paid, it seems to me a right has been acquired which has been completed and of which we cannot deprive the individual by legislation. However, he has an unenforceable right, because he cannot sue the Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. I believe that it is better to give a reasonable compensation, taking into consideration that C.W.A. workers enter Federal employment without physical examination and that the term of service is comparatively short. I prefer to consider this work as Federal employment rather than an extension of relief. They are, in truth, employed by the United States, and that fact is completely proven, because they receive a pay check at the end of every week from a Federal disbursing officer. If a person is not employed by the United States who receives a check which is paid out of funds in the Treasury, then for whom is he working?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, has the Senator from Arizona any objection to making his amendment provide that "hereafter" his amendment shall be operative and not retroactively?

Mr. HAYDEN. I think it would be better to make the rule uniform. While the amendment is frankly a compromise, I think it is better to do it that way than to do as the House proposes and take away all compensation benefits from Civil Works employees, both for the past and for the future.

For the information of the Senate I shall include as a part of my remarks the following statement made before the Committee on Appropriations last Saturday by Harry L. Hopkins, the Federal Civil Works Administrator.

Civil Works employees, according to all statements of the administration, were given employment not as relief workers but with the status of men employed in real work and paid wages, not relief.

Forty-four of the United States now have laws compelling employers to pay compensation to their employees for loss of earnings due to injury in the performance of duty. Employees, whether of individual firms or of municipalities, States, or of the Federal Government, have come to consider compensation for accidents incurred in performance of duty a right. Failure of the administration to stand behind its commitments to the payment of accident compensation on Civil Works Administration work would tend to undermine seriously the important conviction that Civil Works Administration workers have jobs.

The Federal Government in undertaking Civil Works Administration had two clear alternatives: (1) To assume that Civil Works Administration jobs are employment or (2) to assume that Civil Works Administration jobs are relief.

Had the Administration chosen the second alternative it would have been perfectly consistent to allow no accident compensation and to care for injured men on the basis of medical plus other relief. There will be comparatively few cases in which accident compensation will exceed the amount necessary to carry destitute people on a reasonable standard of relief. In a great majority of cases we are not facing the question as to whether people disabled on Civil Works Administration jobs shall be a Federal expense or whether they shall not be, but the question whether they shall be granted payments for the recognized loss of earning power or carried as recipients of public charity.

One of the recognized problems in extending relief is that of sustaining the individual without undermining his morale. If disabled Civil Works Administration workers and their dependents consider themselves legitimate beneficiaries of a just law it will help to free them from the inferiority feeling which comes from public relief.

If no balance remains from the original $400,000,000 appropriation and nothing can be done to broaden the provisions of the new appropriation in respect to accident compensation, it will be necessary to discontinue all payments of any kind as of the date at which the old appropriation is exhausted. (On or about Feb. 10.)

A clear picture of the results which would follow indicates how arbitrary and how widely disastrous in a social sense the termination of commitments to pay accident compensation would be. The example to the States afforded by Federal repudiation of accident compensation obligations voluntarily undertaken must be anticipated as seriously demoralizing the accident-compensation legislation.

If the Federal Government is required by an emergency to furnish employment to citizens, it has the obligation to afford conditions of employment which would prevail among the great proportion of its working population. Compensation for industrial accidents is accepted by general usage and by legislation as one of those conditions.

It is highly probable that if the new appropriation bill should specifically forbid the use of new funds for the payment of accident compensation a test would probably be made as to the eligibility of Civil Works employees to qualify for benefits under the State laws. This would result in an incredible volume of litigation, expensive both to the States and to injured employees and reflecting advantage to no one except to the type of lawyer prone to exploit such claims.

Although it has not been possible to canvass decisions and precedents in the States, it is not at all improbable that many of the States, if pressed, would be compelled to find these men eligible under their own compensation laws. This might result in a strain upon State compensation funds which would seriously challenge their solvency and would place the States in an extremely embarrassing position.

If the States find that they are required, by rulings of their courts, to make accident-compensation payments to Civil Works Administration workers, there will undoubtedly be a concerted attempt to secure Federal funds for reimbursement or to establish a legal status for Civil Works employees as employees of the Federal Government. This may put the Administration in the unprofitable position of promising, withholding, and finally paying under protest.

The proposed denial of funds to meet obligations incurred for accidents in the Civil Works Administration will not close the question, but will open the whole field to controversy of a sort peculiarly undesirable.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I rise to make a statement with regard to the pending bill, and particularly with reference to the statement made by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], as to the use of the portion of the funds carried in the bill for the purpose of extending the public schools through a normal period or term.

At the last session of the Congress I introduced a bill providing for loans through the R.F.C. for the purpose of maintaining public schools where, because of failure to collect taxes, general failure to secure the necessary revenue, the local school units, cities or counties or States, could not longer maintain the schools, but could furnish adequate security to the R.F.C. The Banking and Currency Committee appointed a subcommittee and hearings were had upon that bill. No final report was made to the general Committee on Banking and Currency.

When the Public Works bill was being considered and the Federal Emergency Relief bill was under consideration, some assurance was given that some provision would likely be made, indeed, would be made, to provide in part for the need which I attempted to indicate by the bill, and through the testimony offered in support thereof to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

At this session I introduced a bill which proposed simply to allocate, out of any moneys appropriated to the Civil Works Administration, $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, for the purpose of maintaining those schools of less than college grade, public in character, through a normal school period. This bill was properly referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, under date of February 1, 1934, issued the following release:

F.E.R.A. TO PROVIDE RELIEF FOR MORE UNEMPLOYED TEACHERS

To provide relief for more unemployed teachers in communities up to 5,000 population where existing funds are insufficient, additional grants were authorized today by Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator.

In making this announcement, Mr. Hopkins pointed out that the funds would go to teachers in local districts which had already made maximum but unavailing efforts to keep their schools in operation.

The funds would be used, Mr. Hopkins said, to maintain elementary and secondary schools in such areas and localities, for the normal school term, with approximately the same teaching load as the present school year.

"Funds are available only for salaries of certified teachers, for teaching the regular school work already under way this school year, on and after the date upon which the school had been discontinued for lack of its own funds", Mr. Hopkins stated.

"These funds cannot be used for administration, supervision, clerical, or janitorial services, or for maintenance, equipment, or supplies."

It was pointed out, also, that none of these funds can be used to pay back-salaries due, or to redeem warrants, script, or other evidence of debt.

"Teachers already employed in the schools, whose sole source of income is their salary, may be continued in their positions", Mr. Hopkins explained.

"Under similar conditions, these emergency funds may also be used to employ properly certificated persons in schools which have already closed or have not been open this year. All teachers who receive compensation from these funds shall, after approval by relief officials, be selected by the appropriate school authority and assigned to their tasks by such authority. The pay of the teachers shall not be higher than that stipulated for the same positions during the current year."

The United States Bureau of Education will cooperate with the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in carrying out its emergency program.

Mr. President, I rose to make this statement: Here is a release given out by the Administrator after the introduction of the bill to which I have invited attention, which proposes to carry out exactly the provisions of the bill, with certain restrictions and limitations. The bill, however, would have placed this earmarked portion of the fund—that is to say, not exceeding $50,000,000 of the $950,000,000 appropriated—on a certain basis, and would have given those charged with the duty of maintaining the school systems in the several States the opportunity of knowing positively that they could operate a normal school term. I do not know why the Administrator of Emergency Relief Works is not willing to accept a bill which has been thought out with some care and administer it through established authority existing in every State, and why he wishes to elect to hold the entire administration of the $950,000,000 in his own hands.

But I am making this statement now for the purpose of indicating the provisions in the bill which I introduced as compared to the release which he gave out on February 1, and for the purpose of emphasizing my intention to see that he actually does administer this portion of the fund in accordance with his release. I do not mean to say that he will not do so, but I shall devote quite a deal of my time to seeing that it is carried out.

Obviously the simple, businesslike way of carrying out the purpose, which Mr. Hopkins himself declares that he expects to execute, is to use the established educational agencies in the country charged with the responsibility, limiting his allocation to the precise purposes to which he indicates he wishes to limit it. Obviously the established agencies should be regarded and the fund, while used to provide employment to unemployed teachers, should be expended through these agencies rather than through the administrator of an emergency relief fund.

It is not my purpose to criticize Mr. Hopkins as Relief Administrator, but it is my purpose to say that somebody ought to have said to Mr. Hopkins long ago that there are three branches of this Government and that one, at least, is legislative. The real friends of the administration will do the greatest service to the administration during this emergency period if the leadership will simply let it be known that there are three branches of the Government.

Here is a good-faith statement on the part of the Administrator that he will execute substantially the provisions of the bill which was before the appropriate committee of the Senate when he issued his release, though he will act only to provide work for the teachers. If that is true, I submit there can be no logical reason why a reasonable part of this fund should not be set aside to be administered through the established agencies, which I again submit are as well qualified to administer it as any emergency administration can be. Why put the schools of the country in the precarious and uncertain condition of awaiting the decision of the Administrator of an emergency fund, when all we need to do is to set aside or allocate a part of that fund and provide for its administration through the established, recognized, existing, and functioning agencies of the States and Federal Government?

I will not offer my bill as an amendment. I am content to accept the release given out by the Administrator himself. I have read into the RECORD the provisions of the bill which I introduced; and I submit that under the statement made by the chairman of the committee, if some 35,000 teachers are to be employed out of this fund through the normal school period, the allocation which I asked in my bill for all of the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, was a reasonable allocation out of the gross sum of $950,000,000.

I think Mr. Hopkins has done a magnificent service in part; and in saying that I do not mean to be hypercritical, because I assume that no man could have done a magnificent service as a whole in the administration of a fund of this character which had to be administered quickly if the purposes of the legislation and of the creation of the agency were carried out. I believe that Mr. Hopkins has accomplished substantial results through his administration, and I have no criticism to make. I am rather criticizing that legislative cowardice which is unwilling to say to a friendly administration that here is a legislative body that also may express its will and may make legitimate provision for the expenditure of public money.

This seems to be an illustration of it—deliberately closing eyes to proposed legislation seriously advanced to meet a crying need throughout the country—and here is the administrator of the fund himself admitting the need, proposing to meet the need, proposing to use the same fund, proposing to use it in substantially the same way that the legislation itself suggests, with limitations which seem reasonable but for a different purpose or from a different motive.

Mr. President, I hope what I have said will be sufficient to guarantee the expenditure of the necessary and reasonable proportion of the sum for the purposes for which the administrator, through the public press, has declared it to be his purpose to use it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to reply to the argument and oppose the amendment offered by my good friend the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], with whom I usually agree. I cannot do so in this instance for the reasons I am about to state.

Four million men have been taken into the service of the United States, not because their services are particularly needed at this time but for the purpose of giving them employment. No physical or mental or any other examination is given to these men, except that they are unemployed and they need the work, and it is given to them.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Upon other public projects undertaken by the Government, which are not included in the Civil Works program, men are also employed who are not examined physically prior to their employment upon these public projects; and yet, if any injury occurs to them, or if death occurs, compensation is given to their dependents under the Federal statute. Why should there be a discrimination between a worker working upon, say, a waterway project which is financed by the funds given to the Civil Works Administrator and another worker who receives compensation if he is unfortunate enough to meet with injury? It seems to me we are doing a very great injustice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall be delighted to answer the Senator's question.

In the one case the Government needs the employee, and is paying him because of that need and because of the necessity of the Government having the work done. This other work is given as a gratuity.

Mr. WAGNER rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will permit me to say something about this matter now. He has asked me a question, and I desire to answer it.

In this case, $450,000,000 are being appropriated for the purpose of aiding these men who are without employment. It will be remembered that this work was set up first, not by the Congress specifically, but by Executive order. This money has thus been expended. I doubt if a single Member of the Senate ever contemplated or ever thought that the compensation laws would be applied to work of this character. Four million men and women were taken in under this Public Works proposal, and in that time there have been 142 deaths and 14,000 accidents. Nearly as many men were taken in here as were taken into the military service during the World War, except that in the World War they were taken after examination, and here there was no examination. Three months have gone by, and there have been 14,000 accidents; and if this amendment is adopted every one of the persons who has been injured will make application. It will probably cost the Government in the long run more than the entire $950,000,000, because it is proposed that we shall put on the compensation roll untold thousands of men who are injured, or become sick, or in other ways make claim for compensation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment.

The purpose of the Government is to do something for these people; and here there is attempted to be grafted on the bill, by a technicality, a provision by which those who are hurt, who get sick, or who make claim, will receive countless millions of dollars more.

I think this is emergency work to give employment, not emergency work for the purpose of making pensioners of these people. It is not fair or just to the taxpayers of the country. We ought not to do it, and I cannot conceive that it will be done.

My good friend from Arizona says that the House put in this provision. This provision was recommended by the President of the United States. He recommended that it go in. The House passed it as the President recommended it. The Senate committee recommended it as the President recommended it. In my judgment, it is an exceedingly wise provision, because we are trying to do something for these people who are employed; and surely they ought not to be granted a relief that will cost, in the end, countless millions of dollars.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator said the President recommended this provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. He did.

Mr. WHEELER. Where—in his message?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; here is the message. On January 27 he sent down the Budget estimate, containing the language of the bill. It is all here.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the Budget estimate, however.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is the President recommending it, sending it to us under his signature. If the Senator wants to see it, here it is. I have put it in the RECORD heretofore.

Mr. WHEELER. My understanding of the matter is that that is not correct; that the President, as a matter of fact, has not recommended the provision, and did not recommend it to the House; that the Budget Bureau did, but that the C.W.A., Mr. Hopkins' bureau, wanted it to go out.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the President did not recommend it, I am unable to understand language, because here it is.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator apparently is under the erroneous impression that the Compensation Act cares for people in case they are ill. Illness is not compensated. Compensation is given only for injuries received when the worker is acting within the scope of his employment, so that the question of physical examination is not involved. Apparently the Senator has under consideration another subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I have not. This work has been in progress for 3 months, and here are claims at the present time, after 3 months, of $14,000,000; and if we strike out this provision the amount will be $21,000,000 more.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator know that upon all public projects the workers are under workmen's compensation, either under a State law or under a Federal law?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. The Federal projects upon which money has been expended under the C.W.A. have not been wasteful projects. They have been projects which have added to the wealth of the Nation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very glad the Senator brought up that question. Here is an amount of $260,000,000 that has been spent on Federal projects at a certain rate of pay. Here is another amount of $1,600,000,000 that has been spent on State projects, where manifestly the Federal Government ought not to be required to compensate those who are injured. If we are going to include the Federal employees in this further gratuity, why do we not include the State employees? It ought to be done. If we are going to include 2,600,000 of the workers, we ought to include the other 1,400,000 of the workers. We ought to be fair to them. The Senator ought to arrange his amendment so as to take them all in; and if that is done I do not know how much money it will take.

I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment. I think it ought to be voted down, and I am willing to submit it for a vote.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator that when the Federal Government undertakes a project which perhaps might have been planned by the State, the moment it undertakes the project it becomes a Federal project? It is a Federal undertaking.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. And the workers upon that project are entitled to the same consideration as the workers on any other Federal project that may be undertaken.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the same method of reasoning by which the Federal Compensation Act is now being applied to works of all kinds that are put in this bill.

I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. What would the Senator from Tennessee do with a person injured in the course of his employment—throw him upon charity?

Mr. LONG. Why, certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. Why is not he entitled to compensation just as if he is working upon any other project?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator were to come to me and ask me to lend him $50, and I lent it to him, I suppose he would say, "Now, look here; If I get hurt, you must give me another $150 to go along with this." [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. That is not a parallel case at all.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Tennessee apparently is opposed to the whole theory of workmen's compensation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the Senator from New York cannot put me in any such position. We all know that that is not correct.

Mr. WAGNER. But apparently the Senator is.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New York is mistaken about that. I voted for the Compensation Act, and I think it ought to be applied in proper cases; but I do not think this is a proper case. I again state that I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on this amendment before a vote shall be taken.

So far as I am concerned, I am sorry to see the compromise amendment come before the Senate as the main question at issue, because I can see no justification whatsoever for excluding employees who are working on Civil Works projects from the benefits of the Federal Workmen's Compensation Act. Senators seem to forget the source from which, in the first place, the funds came to make the Civil Works program possible. They came by the transfer of $400,000,000 from the Public Works Administration out of the original $3,300,000,000 appropriated in title 2 of the Industrial Recovery Act for Public Works.

How can the Government justify paying full compensation for injury or death in the performance of duty to an individual who is employed upon a Public Works project, and deny compensation, as the Senator from Tennessee advocates, to an individual who has employment upon a Civil Works project which draws its original appropriation from the same fund?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I desire to state as a fact that the $400,000,000 allotment from the Public Works Administration when transferred to Civil Works was divided, $300,000,000 to State, county, and municipal projects, and $100,000,000 to Federal projects, so that one quarter of the sum was used for Federal projects, and one quarter of the 4,000,000 men have been working on Federal projects.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Precisely. That, Mr. President, only serves to emphasize the justice of the contention that these men are entitled to disability compensation.

Furthermore, every project which has been inaugurated under the Civil Works Administration has been authorized under the specific terms of the Public Works Act itself. Not one single project has been authorized, not one single project has been undertaken, which does not comply with the terms of the Public Works Act. Yet the Senator from Tennessee stands upon the floor of the Senate and advocates denying compensation to those who are killed or injured while engaged upon Civil Works projects, the money for which comes directly from the Public Works Administration, although at the same time he favors extending the right of compensation to those who are employed upon Public Works projects.

I do not see, Mr. President, how the position taken by the Senator can be adopted by the Senate in justice to the men who are receiving employment under the C.W.A. The Senator seems to think that the Civil Works program was undertaken merely as a gratuity. I do not so regard it. I believe that the Civil Works Administration was set up and that funds were transferred to it by Executive order to the amount of $400,000,000 so that men might be employed directly and more quickly than was possible under the procedure of the Public Works Administration. So far as its being a gratuity is concerned, a Civil Works employee is no more in the position of receiving a gratuity than is a man who is employed upon a Public Works Administration project.

I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will prevail.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Wisconsin takes his seat, I should like to say a word. The Government, of course, issues an invitation to unemployed men to come and take work, just as a private employer would, and just as the State would do. The unemployed man is, of course, anxious for the work. He would be just as anxious to take work with a private employer. Is there any difference, so far as the workman is concerned, so far as the laborer is concerned, whether he goes to work on a Civil Works project or goes to work in private employment when he is hurt in and about his duty?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is absolutely no difference, I will say to the able Senator from Georgia. And for the reason that the Federal Government should be a model employer, and for the additional reason that we have already established workmen's compensation as a part of our Federal policy, I cannot understand why it should be seriously advocated at this time that we should reverse that policy and take a step in the direction of breaking down workmen's compensation.

Mr. GEORGE. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Wisconsin. It seems to me that we then would be repudiating an act which we ourselves have passed.

Mr. WAGNER. Not only has the Federal Government adopted workmen's compensation, but almost every State in the Union has made similar provisions for the workingman.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; practically every State.

Mr. WAGNER. Taking the illustration the Senator gives, if the ordinary worker goes into a factory and secures employment, the moment he does so he is under the workmen's compensation provisions of the law.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. And if he is injured, he is compensated for the injury. It is proposed now to discriminate against the C.W.A. workers for a reason that I cannot comprehend.

Mr. HAYDEN. Forty-four States in the Union have the workmen's compensation law, so that in the greater part of our country a workman entering employment takes for granted, and it is implied, that he will have such protection in case of death or injury by accident.

Mr. BONE. May I ask the Senator from Arizona a question? I seek some light on the question. I wondered if the workman who is employed and paid by C.W.A. funds comes, in all of the States, under the Workmen's Compensation Act or some similar piece of legislation? I confess I am not sure of that in my own State. It would seem to me, however, that if the workman were entitled to compensation for injuries received while in private employment, or under the Public Works Administration, that we are not treating him quite fairly if we deprive him of that protection if he is employed with C.W.A. funds. We are just setting him apart. I do not believe we are justified in doing so. Perhaps the Senator can now give me some information about that.

Mr. HAYDEN. The point I made in the beginning was that the bill as passed in the House would deny and take away from the workman any benefits he may have gained in the first half of the work. We are now about half way through with the job. My proposition was to make it certain that the workman would receive compensation in a measure to be determined by the Employees' Compensation Commission and by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Arizona. The hour is somewhat late. The amendment in question is a very important one. A number of Senators have left the Senate. I was going to suggest that the Senate might now adjourn until 12 tomorrow, temporarily laying aside the amendment, with the understanding that it will be considered the first thing in the morning.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, let us have a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I was suggesting that a good deal of controversy has followed the offering of the amendment. There are many Senators away this afternoon at this hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thought the Senate was ready to take a vote on the amendment. If it were, I should not wish to prevent it from taking action now.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection other than I thought it might inconvenience a number of the Senators who are now at their offices attending to their correspondence and other duties to call them. I will have to suggest the absence of a quorum to meet the situation. My suggestion was that the Senate adjourn until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon requests that the vote go over until tomorrow, I am disposed, as far as I am concerned, to accede to his request. It is now about 5 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. I make the suggestion in the best of good faith and for the accommodation of Senators.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not question the Senator's good faith. He is cooperating in every way he can to promote legislation. Does the suggestion by the Senator from Oregon meet with the approval of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I have no objection to the bill going over until tomorrow.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, February 8, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Bow down Thine ear, O Lord, and hear us, for Thou art good, ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy unto all them who call upon Thee. Thou art our Father and we are Thy earthly children by a common bond. Before Thee distinctions and differences, whether of station or of creed, cannot stand; at Thy mercy seat schism cannot haunt nor plague us. We pray that from our daily lives there may go forth the sermon of human brotherhood, with all its universal needs and sympathies. To the holy things of life may we not be indifferent but responsive. O God, save us from allowing our souls to wither or grow barren of the fruitful things of the spirit. Heavenly Father, out of confusion do Thou evoke harmony, out of awkward voices let come sweet music, out of failure let there arise better creations, and out of affliction nobler lives. Lead us on, blessed Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 85. An act for the relief of Paul J. Sisk;

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman;

S. 172. An act for the relief of the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co., of Camden, N.J.;

S. 193. An act to amend section 586c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929;

S. 194. An act to change the name of B Street SW. in the District of Columbia;

S. 252. An act for the relief of the American Bonding Co., of Baltimore;

S. 256. An act for the relief of Milburn Knapp;

S. 258. An act for the relief of Wallance E. Ordway;

S. 356. An act for the relief of the Great American Indemnity Co. of New York;

S. 377. An act for the relief of the Fred G. Clark Co.;

S. 413. An act for the relief of Edith N. Lindquist;

S. 503. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of A. C. Messler Co.;

S. 551. An act for the relief of A. W. Holland;

S. 552. An act for the relief of Manuel Merritt;

S. 606. An act to authorize the waiver of remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes;

S. 749. An act for the relief of the Fairmont Creamery Co., of Omaha, Nebr.;

S. 866. An act to provide for recording of deeds of trust and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia, and for the releasing thereof, and for other purposes;

S. 1075. An act for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman;

S. 1076. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co.;

S. 1077. An act for the relief of Lueco R. Gooch;

S. 1078. An act for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins;

S 1082. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.;

S. 1084. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N.J.;

S. 1086. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Frank Spector.

S. 1088. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of White Bros. & Co.

S. 1118. An act for the relief of George J. Bloxham;

S. 1119. An act for the relief of Fred A. Robinson.

S. 1191. An act for the relief of the Sulzbach Clothing Co.;

S. 1192. An act for the relief of the Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd.;

S. 1258. An act for the relief of Charles F. Littlepage;

S. 1331. An act for the relief of Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorensen, and of Holger E. Sorensen;

S. 1405. An act for the relief of John Z. Lowe;

S. 1460. An act for the relief of Edgar Stivers;

S. 1504. An act for the relief of Walter J. Bryson Paving Co.;

S. 1528. An act to amend section 3702, Revised Statutes;

S. 1531. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Buxton Hospital;

S. 1540. An act for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.;

S. 1600. An act for the relief of S. G. Mortimer;

S. 1680. An act for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased;

S. 1683. An act for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co.;

S. 1692. An act for the relief of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique;

S. 1693. An act for the relief of the International Mercantile Marine Co.;

S. 1753. An act for the relief of Marcella Leahy McNerney;

S. 1804. An act to authorize the transfer of certain real estate by the Secretary of the Treasury to C. F. Colvin in settlement of the Northfield (Minn.) post-office site litigation, and for other purposes;

S. 1853. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine;

S. 1859. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Rio Grande Southern Railroad Co.;

S. 1934. An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the 4-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States and for other purposes;

S. 1935. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the steamship W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 1949. An act for the relief of C. J. Mast;

S. 2006. An act for the relief of Della D. Ledendecker;

S. 2053. An act for the relief of Capt. L. P. Worrall, Finance Department, United States Army;

S. 2057. An act authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia;

S. 2277. An act to establish fish and game sanctuaries in the national forests;

S. 2278. An act for the relief of R. B. Miller;

S. 2308. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.;

S. 2315. An act to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line.

S. 2317. An act for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery;

S. 2337. An act to declare Noxubee River in Noxubee County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream.

S. 2372. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to maintain a bridge already constructed across Youngs Bay, near the city of Astoria, Oreg.;

S. 2461. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict";

S. 2496. An act to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower;

S. 2529. An act to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes;

S. 2552. An act for the relief of Charles C. Bennett;

S. 2601. An act to amend section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 with respect to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System; and

S. 2633. An act to supplement and support the Migratory Bird Conservation Act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1975) entitled "An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SMITH, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. NORRIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 85]

Abernethy	Dobbins	Kurtz	Romjue
Auf der Heide	Doughton	Lambertson	Sabath
Bakewell	Douglass	Lee, Mo.	Sadowski
Beam	Edmiston	Lesinski	Seger
Beedy	Edmonds	Lewis, Md.	Shallenberger
Black	Fitzgibbons	McCarthy	Shannon
Boehne	Fitzpatrick	McClintic	Sirovich
Boland	Flannagan	McDuffie	Sisson
Britten	Frear	McFarlane	Snyder
Browning	Frey	McGugin	Somers, N.Y.
Buck	Fuller	Marland	Spence
Burch	Gasque	Mead	Stokes
Cannon, Wis.	Goldsborough	Meeks	Taylor, Tenn.
Carley, N.Y.	Hamilton	Mitchell	Traeger
Cary	Hess	Montague	Vinson, Ky.
Cavicchia	Hill, Samuel B.	Perkins	Waldron
Chavez	Hoeppel	Plumley	Wigglesworth
Cochran, Pa.	Jenckes, Ind.	Prall	Wood, Ga.
Connery	Johnson, W.Va.	Ramsay	Wood, Mo.
Crowther	Kee	Reece	Woodruff
Dear	Kelly, Ill.	Reed, N.Y.
Dickinson	Kennedy, N.Y.	Reid, Ill.
Dingell	Knutson	Rich

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

ELECTION TO A COMMITTEE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 255

Resolved, That WILLIAM D. THOMAS, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BOARD OF VISITORS, UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read.

JANUARY 26, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker House of Representatives,
The Capitol, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the authority contained in the act of Congress of May 17, 1928, I hereby appoint on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives the following members of that committee to constitute a portion of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy at West Point. The other members of the Board of Visitors are appointed by the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The gentlemen named by me are as follows: Lister Hill, of Alabama; James M. Fitzpatrick, of New York; Jed Johnson, of Oklahoma; R. Ewing Thomason, of Texas; W. Frank James, of Michigan; Edward W. Goss, of Connecticut; and Theodore Christianson, of Minnesota.

With great respect, I am, yours very sincerely,

J. J. MCSWAIN.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The SPEAKER. Under a special order for today, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is my desire at this time to discuss briefly the activities and progress of the Tennessee Valley Authority, giving special attention to the production and distribution of hydroelectric power at Muscle Shoals, in which that great organization is laying the foundation for the building of a future civilization.

This day, February 7, 1934, will stand out as one of the milestones in the history of American progress, probably a turning point in the history of American civilization. At 1 minute after 12 o'clock this morning, the contract between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the city of Tupelo, Miss.—the first contract made by the Tennessee Valley Authority for the sale and distribution of hydroelectric power at Muscle Shoals—went into effect. That contract contains what President Roosevelt has called the "yardstick" for the measurement of the rates the ultimate consumer should pay for electric lights and power. Let me pause to say here that if President Roosevelt never did anything else to deserve the commendation of the American people, as well as the generations that are to come, his action in putting into effect this policy, which will ultimately bring justice to all the American people who use electric light and power, would be sufficient to carry his name down the centuries. [Applause.]

The power question is undoubtedly one of the greatest issues with which the American people will have to deal during the next 25 or 50 years. It is one that reaches into every business, into every home.

Approximately 200 years ago Benjamin Franklin, with his key and kite, unlocked the ancient mysteries of the storm cloud. He brought down from the lightning's flash an electric spark and revealed to the world a new source of energy that was destined to change the civilization of mankind.

A little more than 50 years ago Thomas A. Edison twisted two ends of a wire together, inserted it into a vacuum tube, generated into it a spark of electricity and created the first electric light. When he did that, he did more to revolutionize the industrial, the commercial, the domestic, and social life of mankind than any other human being who has ever lived in all the ages of recorded time. He not only gave us the electric light, but he gave us the electric spark that ignites the gas that drives the motor machine, the automobile, the airplane, the submarine. He made radio possible. He illuminated this old earth and made it mock the starry splendors of the skies. He made motor transportation possible. He eliminated time and space, made it possible to navigate the air, and enabled us to roam with safety on the bottom of the sea. Not only that, but he gave us the power with which to lift from the shoulders of burdened humanity the great drudgery they have undergone through all time.

There is enough hydroelectric power now going to waste in our navigable streams that throughout uncounted centuries has run wanton to the seas, if properly harnessed, to turn all the wheels of industry, light all the halls and all the homes, and cook all the meals in America.

It is the greatest source of wealth we have except the soil from which we live; and if properly used, it will greatly increase, and probably double, the value of our lands by conserving and enriching the soil and building thereon comfortable, permanent homes for our people.

You are all more or less familiar with Muscle Shoals. It is one of the greatest hydroelectric power plants on earth. The amount of hydroelectric power that can be produced at Muscle Shoals now exceeds the combined physical strength of all the slaves freed by the Civil War. All the slaves freed by the Civil War, pulling at one time, could not exert physical strength comparable to the energy that can be generated at Muscle Shoals today. I will make it broader. Every human being in the three States adjacent to Muscle Shoals, working 8 hours a day, would not exert the energy that Muscle Shoals produces in 24 hours. I mention that in order that you may begin to understand the magnitude of this project.

It has been asserted that with a 5-hour day Muscle Shoals will exert as much energy in 24 hours as approximately 50,000,000 men would exert in the 5 hours. This power works 24 hours every day, including Sundays and holidays.

You remember the fight we had over the passage of the law creating this Authority. You remember the battle I waged for the adoption of section 12 of the Norris bill, which was introduced by me in the House, giving the Authority the right to build these power lines. That was the real gist of the whole measure; for without it the Authority would have been helpless. We won that fight; and as soon as the bill was passed, the President appointed three of the most outstanding men in America—Arthur E. Morgan, chairman, who has charge of construction of dams; Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan, in charge of the agricultural development; and Hon. David E. Lilienthal, general counsel, who is also in charge of the sale and distribution of power. They have developed one of the most valuable and efficient organizations connected with this Government, and it is today rendering the most valuable service of any organization with which this administration has to deal.

The purposes of this organization were laid down by President Roosevelt, in his message, when he said that the objects of the Tennessee Valley Authority are flood control, control of soil erosion, reforestation, elimination from agricultural use of marginal lands, distribution and diversion of industry, along with the production of power and the promotion of navigation.

The members of the Authority were appointed and took charge early in the summer. I am today going to give you some of the concrete results of their efforts. I referred to the controversy that raged in the House over the question of whether or not the Tennessee Valley Authority should have the power or the right to build power lines, which was provided in section 12 of the bill, and which I insert in the RECORD at this point.

SEC. 12. In order to place the Board upon a fair basis for making such contracts and for receiving bids for the sale of such power, it is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of such power, or from funds secured by the sale of bonds hereafter provided for, to construct, lease, purchase, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance from the place where generated and to interconnect with other systems. The board is also authorized to lease to any person, persons, or corporation the use of any transmission line owned by the Government and operated by the Board, but no such lease shall be made that in any way interferes with the use of such transmission line by the Board; Provided, That if any State, county, municipality, or other public or cooperative organization of citizens or farmers, not organized or doing business for profit, but primarily for the purpose of supplying electricity to its own citizens or members, or any two or more of such municipalities or organizations, shall construct or agree to construct and maintain a properly designed and built transmission line to the Government reservation upon which is located a Government generating plant, or to a main transmission line owned by the Government or leased by the Board and under the control of the Board, the Board is hereby authorized and directed to contract with such State, county, municipality, or other organization, or two or more of them, for the sale of electricity for a term not exceeding 30 years; and in any such case the Board shall give to such State, county, municipality, or other organization ample time to fully comply with any local law now in existence or hereafter enacted providing for the necessary legal authority for such State, county, municipality, or other organization to contract with the Board for such power: Provided further, That all contracts entered into between the Corporation and any municipality or other political subdivision or cooperative organization shall provide that the electric power shall be sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer without discrimination as between consumers of the same class, and such contract shall be voidable at the election of the Board if a discriminatory rate, rebate, or other special concession is made or given to any consumer or user by the municipality or other political subdivision or cooperative organization: And provided further, That as to any surplus power not so sold as above provided to States, counties, municipalities, or other said organizations, before the Board shall sell the same to any person or corporation engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity for profit, it shall require said person or corporation to agree that any resale of such electric power by said person or corporation shall be made to the ultimate consumer of such electric power at prices that shall not exceed a schedule fixed by the Board from time to time as reasonable, just, and fair; and in case of any such sale, if an amount is charged the ultimate consumer which is in excess of the price so deemed to be just, reasonable, and fair by the Board, the contract for such sale between the Board and such distributor of electricity shall be voidable at the election of the Board: And provided further, That the Board is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with other power systems for the mutual exchange of unused excess power upon suitable terms, for the conservation of stored water, and as an emergency or break-down relief.

That was the section for which I contended in the House and for which Senator NORRIS contended in the other body.

There are two schools of thought with reference to the hydroelectric power in our navigable streams. One of them believes that this power is private property and should be used by private interests for private gain. In other words, that it should be monopolized by those interests that were controlling up to a few months ago the production and distribution of electric lights and power in this country. The other school of thought believes that this hydroelectric power in our navigable streams is public property, national wealth, a national resource, and should be used for the benefit of all the American people. I belong to that school. Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, belongs to that school. President Roosevelt belongs to that school. A vast majority of the American people belong to that school. That is the theory on which is based the law creating the Tennessee Valley Authority, whose policies we are putting into effect today.

As soon as this Board was appointed they announced the following policy with reference to power:

THE POWER POLICY OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

1. The business of generating and distributing electric power is a public business.

2. Private and public interests in the business of power are of a different kind and quality and should not be confused.

3. The interest of the public in the widest possible use of power is superior to any private interest. Where the private interest and this public interest conflict, the public interest must prevail.

4. Where there is a conflict between public interest and private interest in power which can be reconciled without injury to the public interest, such reconciliation should be made.

5. The right of a committee to own and operate its own electric plant is undeniable. This is one of the measures which the people may properly take to protect themselves against unreasonable rates. Such a course of action may take the form of acquiring the existing plant, or setting up a competing plant, as circumstances may dictate.

6. The fact that action by the Authority may have an adverse economic effect upon a privately owned utility should be a matter for the serious consideration of the Board in framing and executing its power program. But it is not the determining factor. The most important considerations are the furthering of the public interest in making power available at the lowest rate consistent with sound financial policy and the accomplishment of the social objectives which low-cost power makes possible. The Authority cannot decline to take action solely upon the ground that to do so would injure a privately owned utility.

7. To provide a workable and economic basis of operations, the Authority plans initially to serve certain definite regions and to develop its program in those areas before going outside.

8. The initial areas selected by the Authority may be roughly described as—

(a) The region immediately proximate to the route of the transmission line soon to be constructed by the Authority between Muscle Shoals and the site of Norris Dam.

(b) The region in proximity to Muscle Shoals, including northern Alabama and northeastern Mississippi.

(c) The region in the proximity of Norris Dam (the new source of power to be constructed by the Authority on the Clinch River in northeast Tennessee).

I am going to discuss the Muscle Shoals development, because there we have a concrete example of what can be done. Last spring when I went home, I made some investigation. I found that the power companies were buying power at Muscle Shoals at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour per month—and had been doing so for years—and selling it right across the river to the people of Alabama for 10 cents a kilowatt-hour per month, or a profit of 4,800 percent.

I found they were transmitting it over into the district which I have the honor to represent—only 25 or 30 miles away—and selling it to those small consumers for 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, or an increase of 4,800 percent. It only loses 5 percent in transmitting it 100 miles, and it is freely predicted that a method will be worked out ultimately by which it can be transmitted 500 miles with a loss of approximately 1 percent. But they talk about line charges—the lines costing so much. We know what those lines cost. The line that they were using probably did not cost over $1,800 a mile.

On November 11 the Tennessee Valley Authority signed a contract with the city of Tupelo, Miss., which is my home town, to furnish power to be retailed to the ultimate consumer at the "yardstick" rates, which I shall quote. That contract is to run for a period of 20 years. Before fixing these rates the Tennessee Valley Authority took into consideration every possible item of expense, including the cost of the dam itself; and, to be perfectly fair with competing power companies, they even added an item for taxes which private companies would have to pay. Yet, under that contract, we reduced the maximum rate to the ultimate consumer from 10 cents per kilowatt-hour per month to 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.

For the information of the House I insert at this point the retail rates the ultimate consumers will pay for electric light and power under that contract between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the city of Tupelo, including the residential, commercial, and industrial rates. Read them and compare them with the rates you are now paying:

CITY OF TUPELO,
Tupelo, Miss.

STANDARD RESIDENTIAL RATE FOR SERVICE EFFECTIVE FEBRUARY 7, 1934

Available to all residential customers at local distribution secondary voltage, either 2-wire or 3-wire service, as municipality may require:

First 50 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 150 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 200 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.
Excess: Over 400 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 0.4 cent per kilowatt-hour.
Minimum monthly bill:
5-ampere meter, 25 kilowatt-hours, 75 cents.
15-ampere meter, 33⅓ kilowatt-hours, $1.
50-ampere meter, 50 kilowatt-hours, $1.50.

BASIC COMMERCIAL RATE FOR SERVICE EFFECTIVE FEBRUARY 7, 1934

Available to commercial customers taking service from the municipality's secondary system:

First 250 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 750 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.
Excess: Over 2,000 kilowatt-hours, per month, at 0.8 cent per month.
Minimum monthly bill:
5-ampere meter, 50 kilowatt-hours, $1.50.
15-ampere meter, 66⅔ kilowatt-hours, $2.
50-ampere meter, 100 kilowatt-hours, $3.
Surcharge: Basic rate subject to a surcharge initially established by municipality and modified from time to time as net revenues improve of 10 percent. Surcharge to take the form of straight percentage added to customers' bills.

BASIC INDUSTRIAL RATE FOR SERVICE, EFFECTIVE FEBRUARY 7, 1934

Available to industrial power users having demands in excess of 10 kilowatts. Service at primary-distribution voltage or secondary-distribution voltage at discretion of municipality.
Demand charge: $1 per kilowatt per month.
Demand: Maximum integrated 30-minute period.
Energy charge:
First 10,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 10 mills per kilowatt-hour.
Next 25,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 6 mills per kilowatt-hour.
Next 65,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 4 mills per kilowatt-hour.
Next 400,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 3 mills per kilowatt-hour.
Excess over 500,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 2.5 mills per kilowatt-hour.
Minimum monthly bill: $1 per kilowatt of maximum demand, but in no case shall the maximum demand for billing purposes be taken as less than 60 percent of the maximum monthly demand billed during the preceding 12 consecutive months' period.
Service taken under the small power rate will be subject to minimum bill prescribed for commercial customers.
Small power rate customers having a load of 10 kilowatts' demand or less to be billed on basic commercial rate.
Surcharge: Basic rate (including small power rate) subject to a surcharge, initially established by municipality and modified from time to time as net revenues improve of 10 percent.
Surcharge to take the form of straight percentage added to customers' bills.
Seasonal loads: The municipality may, at its discretion, discontinue service on seasonal loads and establish a minimum payment for idle months sufficient to cover costs involved.

These same rates will go into effect in Iuka, Corinth, Booneville, Baldwyn, Amory, Nettleton, Fulton, Belmont, and all the other towns, cities, and rural communities in Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee, that are within the territory served by the Tennessee Valley Authority. Any municipality, purchasing power from the Authority for resale to the ultimate consumers, must deliver it to them at these yardstick rates. Not only the people in the towns and cities, but the farmers out in the rural districts get the benefit of these rates without the imposition of a line charge.

Under this contract, the light and power rates to the ultimate consumers in Tupelo were reduced on an average of 68 percent. One small cotton mill will have its power bill reduced $18,000 a year. We found they were charging some cotton gins a line charge of $500. We found one compress which was being charged 12 cents a kilowatt-hour for industrial power that will now cost them about 8 mills, or about one fifteenth of the former charge.

We found in one community they were charging the householder $3.25 a month "line charge", and in addition to the 5 cents a kilowatt-hour for the electricity used, so that 25 kilowatt-hours of electricity was costing one of these farmers $4.50. Next year it will cost him the sum of 75 cents.

The law creating the Tennessee Valley Authority also provides that the T.V.A. may purchase lines from the power companies if they deem it advisable to do so.

In order to show that the T.V.A. is not trying to destroy anybody's property, I call your attention to the fact that they recently bought out the power lines in certain areas in Tennessee, northern Alabama, and northeastern Mississippi. This is a complete answer to the charge that the T.V.A. is trying to destroy the property of the private power companies.

These lines were taken over by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Authority paid the owners what they were worth. But at the same time they did not preclude others on the outside of these areas who are within the distribution radius from purchasing or building lines to connect with T.V.A. lines and securing this cheap power.

That salutary provision was written into section 12 of the law passed last year, which I have just inserted as a part of these remarks.

In speaking of these rates that are applied under the new contract, I think it highly advisable to call attention to the rates that are now being charged throughout the country. I have in my hand a publication called N.E.L.A.—it is one of the first alphabetical publications that appeared on this Hill. It is issued by the National Electric Light Association. It has been referred to as the "prayer book of the Power Trust." I want to read you some of the rates that were laid down in N.E.L.A. in 1931 and were never changed until the Muscle Shoals law was passed.

Since it is impossible to give the rates in every locality, I shall refer to the rates in only one or two towns or cities in each State. That will give an index to what rates are being charged throughout the country.

Let us take, first, the State of Alabama. I find here the thriving little city of Andalusia, which is now attempting to get power from Muscle Shoals. I find their rates just exactly the same as those charged at Meridian, Miss., although Andalusia is served by the Alabama Power Co. and Meridian is served by the Mississippi Power Co. When these rates were published in 1931, and up until after the T.V.A. yardstick was published, the people of Andalusia were paying 10 cents a kilowatt-hour per month for the first 30 kilowatt-hours, whereas under the new T.V.A. yardstick they would pay 3 cents a kilowatt-hour per month. For what a small householder formerly had to pay $3, he would now get for 90 cents; for what he formerly paid $13.60, under this new yardstick he would get for $3.10. The first 850 kilowatt-hours per month under their schedule would cost the people of Andalusia, Ala., or Meridian, Miss., $58.60. Under this new T.V.A. contract it would cost them $8.30. Yet they wonder why a few men rise in this House and in the Senate and protest.

I insert here the rates for both Andalusia and Meridian to show that they were identical and to show the rates the people throughout the States of Alabama and Mississippi have been paying. Then I insert the Tupelo rates under this new contract to show what rates should be charged according to the President's yardstick.

Rates charged according to N.E.L.A.:

Andalusia, Ala.:
10 cents kilowatt-hour first 30 kilowatt-hours	$3.00
8 cents kilowatt-hour next 170 kilowatt hours	13.60
7 cents kilowatt-hour next 300 kilowatt-hours	21.00
6 cents kilowatt-hour next 350 kilowatt-hours	21.00
850 kilowatt-hours	58.60
Meridian, Miss.:
10 cents kilowatt-hour first 30 kilowatt-hours	3.00
8 cents kilowatt-hour next 170 kilowatt-hours	13.60
7 cents kilowatt-hour next 300 kilowatt-hours	21.00
6 cents kilowatt-hour next 350 kilowatt-hours	21.00
850 kilowatt-hours	58.60

Tupelo, Miss., under new contract, T.V.A. yardstick:
3 cents first 50 kilowatt-hours	1.50
2 cents next 150 kilowatt-hours	3.00
1 cent next 200 kilowatt-hours	2.00
4 mills next 450 kilowatt-hours	1.80
850 kilowatt-hours	8.30

Thus, it will be seen that the people of Alabama and Mississippi have been paying $58.60 for 850 kilowatt-hours of power per month that under this new yardstick, will cost only $8.30, or less than one seventh of what they have been paying.

But these are small towns. Take Birmingham. In Birmingham, until they made this last reduction, which was made after the Muscle Shoals bill went into effect, the first 100 kilowatt-hours, for which they were paying 8 cents, would cost $8. Under the T.V.A. yardstick they would cost $2.50. The next 275 kilowatt-hours would cost $8.75 in Birmingham and $2.25 under the T.V.A. yardstick; 2,375 kilowatt-hours in Birmingham would have cost $125.75, whereas under the new yardstick, as applied by the T.V.A. in the Tupelo contract, they would cost $19.30.

In the State of New York where there is a great deal of agitation in the silk-stocking county of Westchester, they are paying a monthly rate of from 12½ cents a kilowatt-hour down to 6 cents a kilowatt-hour. The papers say that some of them are resorting to oil lamps, rather than pay these exorbitant charges. Their minimum rates are twice as high as the maximum rates under the T.V.A. yardstick. They are paying seven times as much for power in Westchester County, N.Y., as they are paying right across the river in Canada, and seven times as much as we will pay in the Muscle Shoals area under the new T.V.A. yardstick.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I take it, then, that the gentleman favors the development of the St. Lawrence waterway?

Mr. RANKIN. I certainly do, for these very reasons, and I favor the Columbia River improvement for the same reason.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Has the gentleman anything bearing upon Pittsburgh, Pa.?

Mr. RANKIN. In Pennsylvania the rates are very high. I have compiled no statistics on Pittsburgh. I see, however, that Erie, Pa., has this rate for general lighting: First 50 kilowatt-hours, per month, 8½ cents; next 2,950 kilowatt-hours, 4 cents; that is, 3,000 kilowatt-hours in Erie would cost $122.25. Under the T.V.A. yardstick 3,000 kilowatt-hours would cost $16.90.

I want to talk about North Carolina for just a minute. First, let me say to the gentleman from New York again that this will explain one reason why I am supporting the President on the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty.

I think it offers to the people of the northeastern section of the United States the greatest possible relief from exorbitant power rates.

With reference to Albany, N.Y., I do not believe there is a lawyer, engineer, or anyone else outside of the men who are running this thing who can tell you what the domestic rates really mean, but I did dig up the commercial rates. Under the commercial scale in Albany the first 5,000 kilowatt-hours per month would cost $210. Under the T.V.A. yardstick they would cost $56.50. In order that there may be no misunderstanding I will insert this table in the RECORD at this point.

Comparison of N.E.L.A. and T.V.A. rates

	Albany, N.Y., commercial (N.E.L.A.)	Tupelo, Miss. (T.V.A.)
First 200, at 8 cents	$16	$6.00
Next 300, at 7 cents	21	6.50
Next 300, at 6 cents	18	6.00
Next 700, at 5 cents	35	9.00
Next 1,500, at 4 cents	60	13.00
Next 2,000, at 3 cents	60	16.00
Total	210	56.50

For instance, a small business man owning a store, and buying power there, would pay $16 for 200 kilowatt-hours. Under the T.V.A. yardstick they would cost him $6. The next 300 would cost him $21 in Albany. Under the T.V.A. yardstick they would cost him $6.50, and so forth.

I am just in receipt of a telegram from the mayor of Columbus, one of the leading cities of Mississippi, in which he quotes the present commercial rates for power furnished by the power company in that city as follows:

One dollar first 200 watts of capacity requirements, plus 40 cents per hundred watts for all over 200 watts of capacity requirements, plus 5 cents per kilowatt-hour for the first 500 kilowatt-hours consumed per month, plus 3 cents per kilowatt-hour for all over 500 kilowatt-hours consumed per month.

These are the new rates for commercial lighting and apply generally to all towns in Mississippi served by the power companies. Formerly, whenever money was needed in Mississippi, they piled new taxes or new charges upon the farmer. Now, since the farmers are unable to stand further burdens, they seem to be piling them upon the backs of merchants of that State who are struggling against all kinds of odds to keep their enterprises going.

I want to make some comparisons here to show what this power will cost the merchants of Mississippi under these power company rates. Not counting the $1 for the first 200 watts of capacity requirements, plus 40 cents per hundred watts for all over 200 watts of capacity requirements, we will just take the energy charge, and since we have used 5,000 kilowatt-hours in the Albany, N.Y., table, we will use that same amount here.

Present power company rate in Mississippi:
500 kilowatt-hours, at 5 cents per kilowatt-hour	$25.00
4,500 kilowatt-hours, at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour	135.00
5,000 kilowatt-hours	160.00
T.V.A. rate:
250 kilowatt-hours, at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour	7.50
750 kilowatt-hours, at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour	15.00
1,000 kilowatt-hours, at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour	10.00
3,000 kilowatt-hours, at 8 mills per kilowatt-hour	24.00
5,000 kilowatt-hours	56.50

Thus it will be seen that in addition to the extra charges above referred to the power companies are charging merchants in Mississippi approximately three times as much for electric energy as is charged by the T.V.A.

I now turn to the State of Kentucky. I find in N.E.L.A. at least one place in Kentucky where I can get the domestic rates, and that is Ashland, a town of 30,000 people. I find in Ashland, Ky., the rates for lighting in 1931 were: For the first 400 kilowatt-hours, 6 cents, or $24. Under the T.V.A. yardstick they would cost $6.50. The next 400 would cost 5 cents a kilowatt-hour in Ashland, or $20, and under the T.V.A. yardstick would cost $1.60. The next 50 kilowatt-hours would cost 4 cents—it is 4 cents from there on—or $2, and under the T.V.A. yardstick would cost 20 cents. I did not carry this any further than the 850 kilowatt-hours. In Ashland, Ky., they would cost you $46, and under the T.V.A. rates they would cost $8.30.

Mr. STUDLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STUDLEY. Did the gentleman compile any statistics for the city of New York?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, sir. On August 1, 1930, in the Bronx, I see from N.E.L.A. the rate for general lighting and power was 10 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 10 kilowatt-hours, and 7 cents for all over 10 kilowatt-hours. That is about the rates that prevailed throughout the city for that class of service at that time.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. What does the gentleman's prayer book have to say as to rates in the State of Oregon?

Mr. RANKIN. You mean the power trust's prayer book? The rates I found are somewhat lower in Oregon. In Portland, Oreg., I find these rates for residential service, August 15, 1930: First 30 kilowatt-hours, 5½ cents per kilowatt-hour; next 40 kilowatt-hours, 3 cents per kilowatt-hour; remainder, 1.8 cents per kilowatt-hour. I find much lower rates in some parts of the State of Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is that because of the public-ownership plants in Seattle and Tacoma?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I think so. Out in that country the people have had the wisdom to build public power plants.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And is that the reason the power companies have been calling all those who are advocates of public ownership Bolsheviks, Communists, and so forth?

Mr. RANKIN. Probably so.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. SCHULTE. Has the gentleman anything on Indiana?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I find the rates in Indianapolis for general lighting 6½ cents first 50 kilowatt-hours, 6 cents next 50 kilowatt-hours, 5 cents next 100 kilowatt-hours, and remainder 4 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Let us now take North Carolina. In that State I took the city of Greensboro, a city larger than the city I happen to live in. Here are the 1931 rates, according to N.E.L.A., for lighting purposes and for domestic use. The first 25 kilowatt-hours at 8 cents, or $2. Under the T.V.A. yardstick under the Tupelo contract they would cost 3 cents per kilowatt-hour, or a total of 75 cents. The next 275 kilowatt-hours in Greensboro would cost $19.25. Under the T.V.A. yardstick they would cost $4.75. Four thousand kilowatt-hours at Greensboro, N.C., when this book was published by the power interests in 1931, would have cost $153.45, whereas under the Tupelo contract or the T.V.A. yardstick they will cost $20.90.

I do not want the North Carolinians to feel that they have been discriminated against, because in Meridian, Miss., or Andelusia, Ala., in 1931 this 4,000 kilowatt-hours would have cost $216.10. Those are the rates our people have been paying. What I am saying about Meridian applies to Columbus, Starkville, Corinth, Jackson, and every other town in that territory where the distribution systems and the lines were owned by the power interests. That is the reason the power interests have opposed in every possible way the development of Muscle Shoals.

In Columbia, S.C., the State capital, where the people are almost in revolt because of the exorbitant power rates that are being charged, I find the first 100 kilowatt-hours, according to N.E.L.A., would cost $8. The power interests have made a little reduction, which I will refer to before I get through. That is, as a rule they have. You will remember that when we passed the Muscle Shoals bill we brought the power rates down all over the country. The first 100 kilowatt-hours cost $8 at Columbia, S.C. Under the T.V.A. contract they will cost $2.50. The next 100 kilowatt-hours would cost $7 at Columbia. In the territory adjacent to Muscle Shoals, under the T.V.A. yardstick, instead of costing $7, it will cost $2. By the time they get up to 4,000 kilowatt-hours, if they use that much, and there are many householders who can use that amount, they will pay $168 at Columbia, S.C., and $20.90 in the Muscle Shoals area under the T.V.A. yardstick.

The average annual consumption of electric power for domestic use in the Dominion of Canada, where power is supplied by publicly owned plants, is 4,321 kilowatt-hours, compared to 603 kilowatt-hours in the United States.

In order to make the comparison here I am going to take 4,000 kilowatt-hours as a basis, especially in view of the fact that I have just used 4,000 kilowatt-hours in my calculations involving both North Carolina and South Carolina.

Four thousand kilowatt-hours per month of electric energy for domestic use in Winnipeg or Ontario, Canada, would cost approximately $30. The Canadians have enjoyed these cheap rates over a long period of years and are making money out of their plants instead of losing money on them.

These 4,000 killowatt-hours of electric energy per month in Seattle, Wash, where they have both a municipally owned plant and a private company to divide the business with them, and thereby cut down the amount of energy supplied by the municipal plant, would amount to $43.80 under the rates in force there today, and they expect to again reduce these rates in Seattle at an early date.

In Tacoma, Wash., where they have an exclusive municipally owned monopoly, the domestic rates for electric energy are: First 30 kilowatt-hours per month, 4½ cents per kilowatt-hour; next 800 kilowatt-hours, 1 cent per kilowatt-hour; remainder, one-half cent per kilowatt-hour. These are the rates prevailing today. These 4,000 kilowatt-hours of domestic energy per month in Tacoma, Wash., would, therefore, cost $25.20.

In the Muscle Shoals area, under the T.V.A. yardstick, as laid down in the Tupelo contract, this 4,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy per month would cost $20.90.

In Meridian, Miss., a town that is now served by the Mississippi Power Co., according to N.E.L.A., which, as I said, was published in 1931, this 4,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy per month, for lighting purposes, would cost $216.10.

There has been some slight reduction in these rates since the T.V.A. has begun to apply the yardstick.

This 4,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy per month for lighting purposes in Bisbee, Ariz., according to N.E.L.A., would cost $164.40; in Fort Smith, Ark., they would cost $200.90; in Denver, Colo., $200.60; in Danbury, Conn., $162.25; in Wilmington, Del., $249.63; in Miami, Fla., $281.90; in Boise, Idaho, $162.30; in Quincy, Ill., $240.85; Indianapolis, Ind., $163.25; Des Moines, Iowa, $122.15; Bangor, Maine, $360; Hagerstown, Md., $103; Boston, Mass., $260; Winona, Minn., $124.20; Jefferson City, Mo., $144.50; Reno, Nev., $97.50; Scottbluff, Nebr., $244.38; Berlin, N.H., $207.75.

It will probably be charged that these statistics are unfair because they show the cost of 4,000 kilowatt-hours a month instead of spreading them out over the entire year. Many householders would use 4,000 kilowatt-hours per month if the rates were not so high that they cannot afford to do so. As it is, they forego the use of electric irons, percolators, frigidaires, washing machines, and other conveniences in order to hold their bills down to where they can afford to pay them; and, as I said a moment ago, vast numbers of them deny themselves the use of sufficient lights to properly light their homes.

Since the average Canadian customer uses 4,321 kilowatt-hours a year, where the average American customer uses only 603 kilowatt-hours a year and pays as much for the 603 kilowatt-hours as the Canadian pays for the 4,321, I am going to show what would be the cost to these small users of electricity in the United States on a monthly basis. In order to make it easy to divide, I am going to use 4,200 kilowatt-hours annually instead of 4,321.

Four thousand two hundred kilowatt-hours annually, divided equally among the 12 months of the year, would be 350 kilowatt-hours per month.

In Winnipeg, Canada, 350 kilowatt-hours per month would cost $3.08.

In London, Ontario, Canada, they get their power from Niagara Falls, 125 miles away, and for 350 kilowatt-hours per month they pay $3.99.

In Windsor, Canada, where they get their power from Niagara Falls, 250 miles away, 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost exactly $4.26.

Windsor is right across the river from Detroit, Mich. In Detroit, 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost $11.80.

The figures from Winnipeg, London, and Windsor, Canada, are up to date, and show what light and power cost in those places at this time.

In Tacoma, Wash., where they have an exclusive municipal monopoly, these 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost $4.55.

In Seattle, Wash., where they have a municipal plant with private competition to divide the load, these 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost $6.30.

In Tupelo, Miss., and in all the other territory served by the T.V.A., where the yardstick rates are applied, the 350 kilowatt-hours per month will cost exactly $6.

Now, let us see what they cost elsewhere. According to this book, N.E.L.A., which, as I said, was issued by the National Electric Light Association in 1931, 350 kilowatt-hours per month for residential lighting in Bisbee, Ariz., would cost $18.40; in Fort Smith, Ark., $24.40; Andalusia, Ala., $27.10; Birmingham, Ala., $24.75; Denver, Colo., $18.10; Danbury, Conn., $16.28; Wilmington, Del., $16.50; Miami, Fla., $29.90; Valdosta, Ga., $12.66; Boise, Idaho, $15.90; Quincy, Ill., $21.75; Indianapolis, Ind., $17.25; Des Moines, Iowa, $12.65; Salina, Kans., $13; Ashland, Ky., $21; Baton Rouge, La., $33; Bangor, Maine, $31.50; Hagerstown, Md., $13.20; Boston, Mass., $26.25; Winona, Minn., $14.70; Bay City, Mich., $13.50; Meridian, Miss., $27.10; Jefferson City, Mo., $10.15; Reno, Nev., $21.50; Scottsbluff, Nebr., $25.38; Butte, Mont., $9; Berlin, N.H., $25.20; Asbury Park, N.J., $19.75; Ithaca, N.Y., $32.30; Raleigh, N.C., $20.75; Columbus, Ohio, $14.50; Tulsa, Okla., $26; Portland, Oreg., $7.89; Pittsburgh, Pa., $12.10; Columbia, S.C., $24; Chattanooga, Tenn., $16.60; San Antonio, Tex., $25.50; Richmond, Va., $22.

Thus it will be seen that with a few shining exceptions, such as Seattle and Tacoma, Wash; Portland, Oreg.; and Butte, Mont., the cost of these 350 kilowatt-hours per month to the small users of electricity runs from 2 to 5½ times what they will cost under the T.V.A. yardstick.

Mr. STUDLEY and Mr. BROOKS rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield first to the gentleman from New York for a question.

Mr. STUDLEY. Would it be possible for the gentleman to compile some statistics about the city of New York and put them in the RECORD?

Mr. RANKIN. I have just done that.

Mr. STUDLEY. They would be very interesting, I am sure.

Mr. BROOKS. I heartily approve of the Tennessee project; but the reductions the gentleman is stating are so amazing that I wonder if the gentleman has information to show that the Government, with these reductions, can operate the project in this manner and still show a profit.

Mr. RANKIN. Every item of cost was considered, even to the cost of the dam itself, and such taxes as a private company would have to pay. The Government will not lose anything and the chances are that these rates will be reduced. Ontario, Canada, has been in this business for 25 years. She has the lowest rates in America and has accumulated a surplus.

Now, I turn to the State of Ohio and I find that at East Liverpool, according to N.E.L.A., which, as I have said, was published in 1931, the small man would pay 8 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 30 kilowatts, or $2.40, whereas under the T.V.A. the consumer would pay 90 cents. He would pay 7 cents for the next 30 kilowatts in East Liverpool, or $2.10, whereas he would pay 80 cents under the T.V.A. contract. Eight hundred and fifty kilowatt-hours in East Liverpool, Ohio, would cost $46.40, whereas under the T.V.A. contract it would cost $8.30.

I find one more comparison here, and I will refer to this and then pass on, because I want to answer the argument about the elements of cost.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Has the gentleman any information in regard to the situation in Georgia?

Mr. RANKIN. I have just given them for Valdosta. I understand some reductions have been made in Georgia recently.

Mr. CASTELLOW. That is just the information I desired.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not sure it is authentic.

I find these rates published for Chattanooga, Tenn., in N.E.L.A., 8.55 cents for the first 50 kilowatt-hours, or $4.27. Under the T.V.A. contract it would be $1.50. Eight hundred and fifty kilowatt-hours in Chattanooga, according to N.E.L.A., would cost $35.49, and under the T.V.A. contract $8.30.

Now, let me answer the gentleman again with reference to the elements of cost. The American people are not losing anything by virtue of this contract. The Tennessee Valley Authority very carefully added in every single item of cost, even to the amortization of the dam itself, the construction of the lines, all the other items of cost, and one item they did not have to add, and that was an item to take the place of taxes which a private power company would have to pay. The Government will not lose anything, but on the other hand the rates will probably be reduced as the years go by.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman, but I am afraid I shall have to have some more time.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The gentleman has referred to Ashland, Ky., along with these other towns. Does the gentleman know that in the State of Kentucky we are prohibited by law from buying our municipal plants and taking advantage of these rates, and by our constitution we are forced to float a bond issue requiring a two-thirds vote; and in the last legislature—not the one now in session—a bill empowering the towns of Kentucky to float bonds and pledge their revenue for these bonds to pay for their plants was vetoed by the Governor of the State, who happens to have some connection with a power interest in that State?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I did not know that. The people of Kentucky ought to rise up and demand a change in that law. It was probably fostered by the power interests when the people were not aware of the result.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Can the gentleman make a brief statement about fertilizer in connection with the dam?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. The objects for which the T.V.A. was created were not only power production and distribution, flood control, and reforestation, but navigation and the production of fertilizer. They have gone forward with this program as rapidly as possible, and the indications are now that they will soon have a plan worked out whereby fertilizer may be supplied to the farmers of this country at rates which they can afford to pay. Not only are they saving the people money from the power standpoint, but they are saving our lands for us and future generations. They are preparing to manufacture fertilizer to rehabilitate our worn-out lands and to make the lands that are now under cultivation produce more abundantly. This is going forward as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

Mr. KVALE. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of rates, will he suffer an interruption?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman speaks of the yardstick and gives a comparison of rates as between those charged by publicly owned and privately owned plants and units. Is the gentleman aware of the fact and has he not protested against the fact that there is now pending a code for the combined publicly owned and privately owned utilities, whether they are operated for profit or for public service, which will affect this yardstick?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and we are protesting against the application of that code to these publicly owned plants.

Mr. KVALE. Does not the gentleman think that if the only way a utility can be brought under a code is to permit the voluntary inclusion of publicly owned agencies, and if such a code goes into effect, the public agencies should be advised definitely not to go in under such a voluntary agreement?

Mr. RANKIN. I think so.

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the power is available for southwest Mississippi, if he has that information?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; the bill provides that this power shall be distributed equitably among the States, counties, and municipalities in the distribution radius. The debates in the House and Senate were to the effect that the distribution radius was 350 miles. That, I think, will include the entire States of Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, and a large portion of other States.

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. Is this power available at the present time?

Mr. RANKIN. If not, it soon will be—as soon as the Norris Dam is finished, to say the least of it. It is highly probable that the next dams to be constructed by the T.V.A. will be the Aurora Dam in Kentucky and the Iuka or Pickwick Dam, just above the town of Iuka, Miss., at either Pickwicks Landing or Cooks Landing. This dam will probably be sufficient to supply all the power the people of Mississippi and that section of Tennessee will consume.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is it the gentleman's judgment that this saving will in time be passed on to the wage earners, or will it be absorbed by the manufacturer?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; it will be passed on to the wage earners. Take, for instance, the time when cotton was 5 cents a pound, the ginners were forced to charge enormous prices for ginning cotton, because they had to pay so much to the power company. These charges may now be reduced. Besides these residential rates go right into the homes of the working people—industrial workers as well as farmers.

Now, it is said that the Tennessee Valley Authority does not take into account all the elements of cost the private concerns have to meet. That is true—they do not have to take them all into consideration. They do not have to take into consideration the payment of dividends on watered stock. They do not have to take into consideration money paid as tributes to holding companies, bonuses, and rake-offs to high-priced promoters, such as Samuel Insull and others. They do not have to take into consideration the money expended to hire lawyers that they do not need—invariably the sons, relatives, or law partners of men in responsible offices, and in "rare instances" the officials themselves. Their services are very valuable and often very expensive.

Then there is a swarm of power lobbyists in and around Washington, as well as around every State legislature. The T.V.A. does not have to pay for them. It does not have to pay for the propaganda in big newspapers and magazines. Not only that, but we found college professors on the pay rolls of certain power interests. They were writing school books in the State of Ohio, and probably other States. All that money spent for propaganda from the kindergarten to the higher colleges the T.V.A. does not have to take into consideration.

Now, all these expenses are eliminated from its schedule, and therefore the T.V.A. can sell power at something like what it is worth. That is one reason for the spread between the rates that I have mentioned. Then the T.V.A. does not have to take into consideration contributions to campaign funds for "friends" of the company who are candidates for public office. Nor does the T.V.A. have to take into consideration the money spent by the Power Trust trying to defeat Roosevelt for the nomination at Chicago after it became apparent that his nomination would mean his election.

One fellow down at home who owned some of this watered stock kept asking, "If you put this law into effect, what will become of my stock?" Finally one old fellow got so tired of hearing him talk about it that he said, "Go home and drink the danged stuff; it is all water, anyway." [Laughter.]

But the greatest phase of this program is yet to come—that of rural electrification. The program of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the rural electrification of this country will do more for the farmers of America than any other one thing that has ever taken place. It is saving the American home, the bedrock of our civilization, the cornerstone of our institutions, the nursery of all virtue, the kindergarten for the teaching of all the fine amenities that go to make life on this earth worth living. You cannot drive farmers back to the farm; you cannot browbeat young people into staying on the farm, where they have none of the conveniencies and comforts of life, and where they cannot make a decent living. This program that is being put into effect at Muscle Shoals for carrying these power lines to the country people and giving them power at something like what it is worth will do more to take people back to the farms, to keep people on the farms who are there now, and make them prosperous and contented than any other one movement that has ever taken place in your day and mine.

We organized electric-power associations in the various counties in the district I represent. They accuse me of starting that movement. They are right; I plead guilty. It was one of the best day's work I have ever done. We organized my county first; and when they were offered C.W.A. money for public work in those counties, I went to them and asked them to use it to employ labor to build these rural power lines. Today with the enthusiasm almost of a crusade they are building those power lines into every farm community in a large number of counties in that section of the State. I want to read you just one paragraph of a letter from a man who never thought that his letter would be read publicly. He is one of the men high in authority in this work. He says:

> In most sections of the country where public projects such as highway construction, sanitation, etc., are under way, there is always a great deal of comment upon the effect which the project will have on the increased value of land. I don't recall a single instance where this idea has been suggested anywhere in your State, in Alabama, or Tennessee. On the other hand, the thought has been repeatedly expressed that rural electrification will make life on these farms more worth while. One of your Mississippi friends expressed the opinion that if the farms of his county could be electrified, not one of them could be bought at any price.

And he adds further:

> I rather think Thomas Jefferson, if he could hear it, would give three rousing cheers for that sentiment.

That is what we are trying to do—to carry this power development to the people in the rural sections. This program is being carried out in the counties of Lee, Alcorn, Prentiss, Tishomingo, Itawamba, Pontotoc, and Monroe, and we are striving to get it started in the counties of Clay, Lowndes, Oktibbeha, and Noxubee as early as possible.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Would it not also tend to decentralize industry and manufacturing in the great cities and take the people back to the smaller towns?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and that is one of the objects of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The people living out in the country can go in and do their work and go back home—small industries may be located in the rural districts. We have some splendid garment factories in Tupelo, and I am informed that 85 percent of the women who work in them live out in the country, on the farm, and go home at night. This movement will help to solve the question of decentralizing our congested population.

I know that most of you men came from country districts, and you know something of the drudgery of country life. No one in this country has gone through more drudgery than the country women. This rural electrification will be the greatest blessing they have ever known. It will not only give them lights and enable them to have a radio but it will give them power for the iron and the churn, the washing machine, the water pump, the cream separator, the vacuum cleaner, and many other conveniences they have never known.

I want to show you some of the rates that these people will be charged. For 75 cents a man may have his light up to 25 kilowatt-hours. That is more light than a majority of the American people who use lights have in their homes. We do not light our homes now. People use little bulbs about the size of a lightning bug, just big enough to create shadows to scare their children.

For $1.50 he may have light, radio, and also pump his water, give him waterworks in the country. I saw where one woman said that if she could just get running water in the house, she would forego the lights. For $1.50 that can be done, and at the same time he can get enough extra power to run his lights and his radio. I know that some high-collared fellows will say that farmers have not any business with radios. The farmers and their families are as much entitled to these new conveniences as are the people in the congested centers. Besides, the time is coming, if it is not here now, when a radio will be considered a necessity. The following schedule will show what the use of these various equipments will add to the farmers' light and power bill:

Estimated monthly cost to farmers of following items of electrical service (T.V.A.)

Item no.	Monthly bill	Service and appliance used
1	$0.75	Lights
2	1.00	Lights and radio.
3	1.50	Lights, radio, and water pump.
4	2.00	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, and percolator.
5	2.50	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, and washing machine.
6	3.00	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, toaster and waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, food mixer, and fans.
7	3.50	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, toaster, waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, food mixer, fans, and refrigerator.
8	5.00	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, toaster, waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, food mixer, fans, refrigerator, and electric range.
9	6.50	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, toaster, waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, food mixer, fans, refrigerator, electric range, and electric water heater.
10	8.00	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, toaster, waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, food mixer, fans, refrigerator, electric range, electric water heater and operation of small farm motor for sawing wood, running feed mill, ensilage cutter, and miscellaneous small power requirements.
11	10.00	Lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, toaster, waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, food mixer, fans, refrigerator, electric range, electric water heater, operation of smal, farm motor for sawing wood, running feed mill, ensilage cutterl and miscellaneous small power requirements, and light and power for 30-cow dairy.

The radio today is one of the greatest vehicles for disseminating knowledge. The time is coming when every farmer in this country will enjoy the same general use of the radio that the people in the cities and towns do.

For $2.50 he may have power for his lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, and washing machine.

For $3.50 he may have the same things, with fans and a refrigerator added.

For $5 he may have all those things and enough power to cook his meals. For a few dollars more he may have enough power to run his hay press, his feed grinder, and his milking machine for the dairy, and all the equipment necessary to saw his wood—lights, radio, water pump, electric iron, percolator, washing machine, electric toaster, waffle iron, vacuum cleaner, feed mixer, fans, refrigerator, and electric stove—all for $5.

Mr. McFARLANE. Where is he going to get the money to buy all those things?

Mr. RANKIN. I will answer that question in a minute.

Mr. ARENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. ARENS. Will the gentleman help us in Minnesota to get this rate? I am paying about 6 cents per kilowatt in Jordan, Minn., which is 25 miles away from the Hastings Dam. The Hastings Dam was built some years ago at a cost of $6,000,000. One million six hundred thousand horsepower is running over this dam, and the Northern States Power Co. and the Great Northern Railroad are fighting to see who will get the power. Can the gentleman help us so that the Government can get this power and sell it to us at a decent rate?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota that this is the beginning of a national policy by which we expect to reach every community in America. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I would suggest that the gentleman put in the statistics on the Ontario project the number of stoves, the number of washing machines that the housewives have obtained since they have received the cheap rates.

Mr. RANKIN. I shall be glad to do so. I am sure they will be very enlightening, as well as reassuring.

Ontario began her power program back in 1909. Private power rates prior to that time averaged about 9.2 cents per kilowatt-hour. These rates immediately dropped to 5 cents per kilowatt-hour. Within a few years they were down to a top rate of 2 cents per kilowatt-hour, except in small villages where long-distance transmission was required. The record shows that in 1931 the average net cost to domestic users in 26 cities of 10,000 population or over was 1.5 cents per kilowatt-hour. In the 58 towns of from 2,000 to 10,000 population the people were paying an average of 1.79 cents per kilowatt-hour, while in the 205 villages of under 2,000 they were paying 2.52 cents per kilowatt-hour. The general average for the whole Province was 1.59 cents per kilowatt-hour.

The 1932 official report shows that on October 31, 1932, there were total reserves—60 percent liquid—of $122,770,-103.91, as against the total net investment of honest dollars of $382,558,763.75, or around 33 percent. This with all sinking fund, interest, and other charges met, and the business in a flourishing condition. The wholesale rate which is being charged municipalities in Ontario averages around 7 mills per kilowatt-hour.

The rapid increase in the use of domestic appliances under these low rates is indicated by the following figures:

Number of major appliances in use in London homes

	1924	1926	1928	1933
Ranges	3,400	4,200	5,000	6,600
Refrigerators	11	60	150	1,100
Water heaters	None	214	812	2,643

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think every Member would be interested in knowing the personnel of the code set-up, and just what action they are going to take on this electrification code, because if they put that thing over it will kill the development about which the gentleman is speaking.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think they are going to put it over.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the gentleman any information or has there been any cost established that will give us an idea as to whether these rates which I approve of can be established on a profitable basis?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the gentleman got that information?

Mr. RANKIN. I just told the House that the Tennessee Valley Authority had counted every item of cost.

Mr. BROOKS. But what is the cost, then, per kilowatt-hour? The gentleman has given us the selling price but not the cost.

Mr. RANKIN. They have been selling it to the power companies at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour. I do not suppose they were losing any money.

Mr. BROOKS. Is the gentleman satisfied they are running that proposition on a profitable basis?

Mr. RANKIN. I certainly am; and I am satisfied that those rates will be reduced within the next 2 or 3 years. We certainly can produce power in this country as cheaply as they can in Canada.

Mr. ALLGOOD. The gentleman got that information from Canada, did he not, and inserted it in the early part of his speech?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I have inserted it already.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] asked a very reasonable question, as to how these equipments are to be purchased. They have recently organized the Electric Farm and Home Authority, with a capital stock of $1,000,000 and a borrowing capacity up to $10,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I have 10 additional minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. The Electric Farm and Home Authority has the same officials as the Tennessee Valley Authority. They propose to advance the farmers and home owners the money with which to buy these equipments, and they have made arrangements with the large manufacturers to furnish them through the local dealers, and then after the purchase is made they advance the money to pay for them on long terms at low rates of interest, and, as I understand, it is added into the power bill and gradually paid off. In that way every farmer and every home owner can buy this equipment. You would be surprised at the reduction in prices these arrangements will bring.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman disclosed in his remarks made thus far as to the probability of the enterprise maintaining the rates now charged?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; they are not only going to maintain these rates but they will reduce them. These low rates have been prevailing in Canada for years, and they will prevail in every section of this country before this fight is over.

There is a paradoxical situation that has more or less paralyzed the prior use of electricity and electrical equipment. The people who manufacture and sell electrical equipment had their prices so high that they prevented people from using them. That curtailed the use of electricity to the detriment of the producers of power. The power companies have had their rates so high as to curtail or prevent the use of these equipments.

Therefore, they have been strangling each other to death. The producers of power and the producers of equipment have been literally destroying each other and at the same time preventing the American people from using a proper amount of electricity, as the comparison between consumption in the United States and Canada shows.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In the matter of the St. Lawrence waterway development, would not the power end alone justify the building of the canal?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. And under improved methods of transmission the people of Detroit could sometime hope to share in this power, being within the 500-mile area.

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Our rates in Detroit are over twice as high as they are in Windsor, Canada, right across the river.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question, but I do not want to get into an argument.

Mr. MEAD. Neither do I. The State of New York set up the power-development authority for the development of power on the St. Lawrence independent of the navigation end of it. Governor Smith and Governor Roosevelt came out for it. We are for the development of power without the development of navigation.

Mr. RANKIN. What I am interested in, I may say to the gentleman from New York, is the power development.

Mr. MEAD. So am I.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the power developed at Muscle Shoals will be distributed within a radius of about 350 miles.

Mr. RANKIN. Three hundred and fifty to four hundred miles. That is said to be the ultimate radius.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does this organization which supplies to farmers the means of buying electrical equipment reach out for that radius?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; my understanding is that it goes beyond that radius; that it is a national proposition.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does that mean that a farmer in Iowa can buy electrical equipment through these loans?

Mr. RANKIN. That is my understanding; not only the farmer but the other home owners as well.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. One element of cost which should be borne in mind in the operation of these plants is interest. This is a tremendous item. The Federal Government can borrow money at almost one half what a private individual can.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I believe the gentleman stated that these rates extended only about 300 miles. What will the farmer living 700 miles from this development have to pay?

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that this is a national policy which I hope will be carried to every community in the entire country.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement. Some opposition has grown up in my district against the T.V.A. by reason of the fact that some bankers and other owners of bonds want to know what the T.V.A. is doing with respect to driving these other local companies out of business.

Mr. RANKIN. Not a thing; it is giving them only honest competition. Where the trouble is watered stock, there is no cure. Of course, if they issued a good deal of watered stock, they cannot stand honest competition.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. It may be interesting to the gentleman to know that certain utility companies are getting after me on account of my activities down here.

Mr. RANKIN. With the American people understanding this policy of the Government, the gentleman will have no trouble about his vote on the side of the American people on this great question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the gentleman tell us what wages are being paid under T.V.A. operation and how they compare with wages paid under private ownership?

Mr RANKIN. They pay the usual schedule of wages.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. President Roosevelt in his campaign said that our industrial plant was built; that the question is whether it is not overbuilt. Does the gentleman believe that when the President made that statement in the campaign he was referring particularly to the power interests of this country exploiting for private gain our natural resources?

Mr. RANKIN. What he probably meant was that they had been overstocked, that there had been too much stock issued for the amount of money invested.

Now, I may say to the gentleman who has interrupted me that this, from my viewpoint, is a national policy. Nothing could do more good than to take these cheap lights and this cheap power into every home in America. Nothing could do more for the home or so add to its pleasures, its profits, and its value; and I, for one, am in favor of carrying on until this power reaches every community and every home, and makes our country the acknowledged leader among the enlightened nations of the earth.

Someone has said that Robert Burns, the Bard of Scotland, strolling beside his native streams, " saw within each sheltered nook the bright reflection of his country's glorious past ", and sang of glorious splendors passed away or " wept for golden ages on the wane."

When Thomas A. Edison, the sage, the scientist, the seer, looked into the rolling waters of the majestic Tennessee he saw a vision of the progress yet to come. He saw the turning wheels, the lifted burdens, the lighted homes of a new civilization. " With a prophet's keen and penetrating glance " he saw upon the distant peaks of far-off years the golden dawning of this new day into which we are now moving, and in which we are to witness an electrified America? [Prolonged applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, sugar is the lifeblood of the Philippines. Sixty-three percent of our total exports is sugar. Every time there is a reduction of 100,000 tons it means $7,000,000.

There is a proposal which may cost my countrymen $63,000,000 in a 3-year period and would lose for the Philippine Government in revenue $12,750,000 during that time.

The Honorable Rafael R. Alunan has prepared for submission to the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture a statement on this subject.

Mr. Alunan was at one time the distinguished floor leader of the Philippine House of Representatives. He served as secretary of agriculture and natural resources, and also served as secretary of finance.

He speaks for 99 percent of the sugar producers in our islands. Complete confidence may be had in his statement. It is a very serious matter for our country, and I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject by including the statement of Mr. Alunan as part of my remarks.

The statement is as follows:

THE SUGAR STABILIZATION PLAN

On the 27th of June 1933, at the request of the Federal Government, there assembled in Washington representatives of (1) continental beet growers, (2) continental cane growers, (3) Philippine, (4) Hawaiian, (5) Puerto Rican, and (6) Cuban sugar growers and processors for the purpose of drawing a marketing agreement, which in the words of Mr. Charles J. Brand, coadministrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, "will be equitable for everyone who has a legitimate place in the picture."

Hearings and discussions continued from June 27 and until a signed agreement was secured on September 25, 1933, a period of 3 months, which developed statistics, facts, and divers arguments on every phase of the sugar problem.

UNITED STATES CONSUMPTION

From the testimony and briefs filed, it is now possible to separate and set out certain indisputable facts.

Dr. John Lee Coulter, sugar expert, member of the Tariff Commission, the conferees and other national experts agreed that the domestic consumption for 1933–34, including certain classes of sugar for manufacturing purposes, was approximately 6,500,000 short tons.

ESTIMATED PRODUCTION 1933–34

To supply this domestic sugar market, continental and insular areas claimed at that time a tonnage production aggregating 5,195,000 short tons, as follows:

	Short tons
Continental areas:
United States beet	1,525,000
Louisiana	250,000
Florida	60,000
Total continental	1,835,000
Insular areas:
Hawaii	1,025,000
Puerto Rico	925,000
Virgin Islands	6,000
Philippines	1,404,000
Total insular areas	3,360,000
Total continental and insular	5,195,000

There would, therefore, be left for Cuba and foreign areas a balance of 1,305,000 short tons.

The Philippine estimate was a presentation of figures prepared jointly by the Bureau of Insular Affairs; Governor General Frank Murphy; representatives of the Department of Commerce; representatives of the Department of Agriculture; the Philippine Sugar Growers Association; the national sugar statisticians, Willett and Gray; and Dr. John Lee Coulter.

BASIC QUOTAS

The marketing agreement, in the form in which it was finally signed by all the domestic producers, except Louisiana, assigned the following quotas for a 3-year period in short tons, raw basis:

Beet sugar, United States continental	1,750,000
Louisiana, United States continental	250,000
Florida, United States continental	60,000
Hawaii, United States insular	975,000
Puerto Rico, United States insular	875,000
Virgin Islands, United States insular	15,000
Philippine Islands, United States insular	1,100,000
Cuba, foreign	1,700,000
Total	6,725,000

The signature of the Philippine representative to this agreement was affixed with a reservation as to the quota of 1,100,000 tons.

The signature was given only because of an earnest desire to cooperate in what was at that time stated to be the wish of the President.

Under the estimated American consumption of 6,500,000 tons, Cuba could send to this country approximately 1,300,000 tons. The marketing agreement assigned Cuba a basic quota of 1,700,000 short tons with additional deliveries of 300,000 tons for the first year, 200,000 tons for the second year, and 100,000 tons for the third year.

PHILIPPINE DELIVERIES EXCEED QUOTA

The following are the figures of United States consumption for the calendar year of 1933, compared with the quotas under the marketing agreement:

	United States consumption [1]	Percent total	Quotas under marketing agreement	Increase (+) or decrease (−) consumption over quotas
Continental areas:	Short tons
United States beet	1,365,978	21.63	1,750,000	−384,000
Louisiana and Florida cane	314,736	4.98	310,000	+4,736
Total continental	1,680,714	26.61	2,060,000
Insular areas:
Hawaii	989,580	15.67	975,000	+14,580
Puerto Rico	790,992	12.52	875,000	−84,008
Virgin Islands	4,548	.08	15,000	−10,452
Philippine Islands	[2] 1,241,228	19.65	1,100,000	+141,228
Total insular	3,025,348	47.92	2,965,000
Foreign areas:
Cuba	1,600,711	25.34	1,700,000	−99,289
Others	8,231	.13
Total foreign	1,608,942	25.47	1,700,000
Grand total	6,316,004	100.00	6,725,000

[1] Compiled from Willett & Gray.
[2] Philippine deliveries for 1933 were estimated at 1,225,000 tons.

The foregoing statistics demonstate the pertinent fact that the Philippine Islands is the only major sugar area which not only reached its estimate but exceeded substantially its basic quota. This excess was 141,000 short tons.

It is also to be noted that continental beet and cane sugar supplies 27 percent of the American sugar consumption, Hawaii and Puerto Rico 28 percent, the Philippines 20 percent, or a total of 75 percent.

Even with its potential production under existing mill capacities, the Philippines will contribute only 25 percent of the amount of sugar consumed in the United States.

Philippine sugar is not, therefore, a competitor of United States continental or of other insular sugars. It merely supplements the domestic supply.

EFFECT OF AN INCREASED CUBAN QUOTA

It is suggested that the Cuban quota be increased from 1,700,000 tons to 2,000,000 tons.

Tons of sugar are not so significant, but when they are reduced to dollars and cents they take on a new value.

Every reduction of 100,000 tons means approximately $7,000,000 lost each year to the territory capable of producing them.

If, as suggested, the Cuban quota is increased from 1,700,000 to 2,000,000 tons, it will mean a loss to American areas of $21,000,000 annually.

REDUCED QUOTA THREATENS PHILIPPINE ECONOMIC STABILITY

The Filipinos, using their present acreage, have a minimum production capacity, as indicated by their 1933–34 crop, of 1,400,000 tons, and a potential capacity, with present machinery and equipment, of 1,800,000 tons.

The quota agreement of September 25 of 1,100,000 tons shows, therefore, an immediate loss of 900,000 tons, or $63,000,000 for the 3-year period.

Of this sum, the government of the Philippine Islands, which is supported by a sales tax, will lose approximately $12,750,000 in the 3-year period.

Thus under the marketing agreement the Philippine Islands were already called upon to make a great sacrifice. It would be unfair and unjust to increase that burden in order to benefit a foreign country.

Every curtailment means (1) a loss of income; (2) reduced government revenue; (3) decreased buying power; (4) loss of employment; (5) reduced ability to pay national debts and jeopardizing of the present standard of living set by our American free-trade policy.

A loss in national revenue in the Philippines naturally means less education, less sanitation, less police protection.

His Excellency Hon. Frank Murphy, Governor General of the Philippine Islands, stressing the effect of substantial curtailment of Philippine sugar production in his cable to the War Department on September 8, 1933, called attention to the following statistical points:

"(1) Sugar accounted for 63 percent of all income derived from export trade in 1932. Remove it from the list and a favorable visible balance of trade of $15,500,000 would have been converted into a negative balance of $44,500,000.

"(2) The total annual income from all sources is estimated at $200,000,000, sugar comprising nearly 30 percent of the total.

"(3) There are 10 banks in the Philippines and in addition 3 private companies engaged in agricultural financing. The total loans, overdrafts, and advances of these 13 establishments amount to $72,500,000. Of this amount $34,000,000, or 47 percent, is advanced on sugar.

"(4) Considering the government-owned Philippine National Bank alone, its loans, overdrafts, and advances amount to $22,500,000, of which $17,500,000, or 77 percent, is advanced on sugar.

"(5) The government-owned Manila Railroad collected $2,300,000 as freight revenue in 1932. Of this amount nearly $1,000,000, or over 40 percent, was derived from handling sugar.

"(6) The Philippine Railways in Cebu, Iloilo, and Panay, in large part guaranteed by the Government, also derives the bulk of its freight revenue from sugar.

"(7) Five of our leading Provinces, Occidental Negros, Oriental Negros, Pampanga, Laguna, and Tarlac, are largely supported by taxation from sugar. Extreme withdrawal of this support in these provinces would seriously affect the public finances and be reflected in cessation of public works and closing of schools, * * *"

CONGRESS ENCOURAGED INCREASED PRODUCTION

On August 5, 1909, Congress established free trade with the Philippine Islands for the avowed purpose of increasing its sugar output for the benefit of domestic consumers in the United States.

The establishment of this free-trade policy was vigorously opposed by all Philippine leaders.

On March 27, 1909, the Philippine Assembly adopted a joint resolution petitioning Congress not to establish free trade on the ground that, in the words of the petition, "free trade between the United States and the islands would in the future become highly prejudicial to the economic interests of the Philippine people and would bring about a situation which might hinder the attainment of the independence of the said people."

This was a prophetic declaration, as evidenced by the situation today.

Oscar Underwood, then Democratic leader of the House, on October 5, 1913, said:

"We could not honestly face those dependent people who give us free trade in their markets if we close our doors here. * * * Because we do not want to stand and face that world in such a position as that and say [to the Filipinos] that under our law we command you to open the door, so that American goods can flow into your country, because we have the power to do it, and then turn around and say to them that on the only thing they can import, practically, into our country and make a market for we will close our doors and prevent them developing their trade. I say that no true-born American citizen who faces this question fairly and squarely and understands the situation will consent to that."

The statement of Oscar Underwood has since been the guiding policy followed by each Congress in dealing with Philippine products coming into the United States.

It is quite apparent that free trade and sugar expansion were forced upon the Filipino people by our Congress over their protest.

The establishment of free trade had the immediate effect of attracting American capital into the islands for the development of the sugar industry, resulting in the replacement of thousands of primitive, inefficient, wooden, carabao mills by modern centrals and factories, and in the improvement in methods of cultivation and planting of higher yielding cane varieties.

As a consequence, sugar production in the Philippines in the past 2 decades has naturally doubled and trebled, as has happened in Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Java, Formosa, and other sugarcane-producing countries, when those countries changed their methods of manufacture from the antiquated mills to modern factories.

NO EXPANSION IN AREAS

However, there has been very little increase in the acreage for sugarcane in the Philippines since the Spanish regime. In 1895, when the Philippines produced a crop of 431,000 short tons, the record under the Spanish regime, there was planted to sugarcane that year at least 500,000 acres of land, as compared with 596,000 acres planted in 1921, and 633,000 in 1931.

The increase in sugar production in the Philippines has, therefore, been brought about not by increasing acreage but by improvements in the technique of production and milling and by increased yields per acre through the substitution for the native cane varieties of superior varieties.

The Philippine people not only opposed free trade with the United States, but in addition they placed a limitation upon land ownership; the limitation was 1,024 hectares, or 2,500 acres. Therefore with the exception of one central in existence before this limitation the sugar acreage is practically all in small holdings, entirely unlike the situation in other producing areas.

A limitation or curtailment, therefore, will fall upon a much greater number of people who are directly interested. There is no limitation in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or continental United States.

Practically all the lands devoted to the cultivation of sugarcane in the Philippines are tilled by Filipinos numbering 2,000,000, including their families. Unlike other sugar-producing countries, which must rely on foreign labor to grow sugar, the Philippines depends solely upon native labor for its production of sugar.

The sugar industry more than any other industry in the islands has been responsible for raising the standard of living of the Filipino people to 300 percent above that of their neighboring countries.

SUGAR PAYS FOR PURCHASES IN UNITED STATES

The Philippine sugar industry has thus been developed within highly protective tariff walls both at the market in the United States and at the place of production in the Philippines. Without the United States tariff protection the industry cannot survive world competition.

As sugar constitutes 63 percent of the total value of all exports from the Philippines, the purchases of these islands from the United States are mainly paid for by the sugar exported to the American market.

It is to be noted that as a consequence of their ability to market their sugar in the United States the Filipinos are today one of the best customers of American agriculture and industry.

Since taking over the islands 35 years ago America's trade with the Philippines has increased fortyfold, from a little over $5,000,000 in 1899 to over $200,000,000 in 1929.

According to the compilation recently made by the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Philippines today ranks eighth among the customers of the United States, as may be seen from the following figures:

Twenty best customers of the United States in order of importance, January–September 1933

Country and rank	Percent	Value of United States exports
1. United Kingdom	17.6	$194,854,000
2. Canada	13.4	147,797,000
3. Germany	8.3	91,965,000
4. Japan	8.3	91,292,000
5. France	7.1	78,347,000
6. Italy	3.6	40,025,000
7. China	2.9	32,525,000
8. Philippine Islands	2.9	32,232,000
9. Netherlands	2.8	30,478,000
10. Belgium	2.6	29,184,000
11. Mexico	2.4	26,879,000
12. Argentina	2.3	24,905,000
13. Brazil	1.8	20,046,000
14. Spain	1.8	19,905,000
15. Cuba	1.7	19,296,000
16. Australia	1.6	17,893,000
17. British South Africa	1.3	14,347,000
18. British India	1.1	12,660,000
19. Panama	1.1	11,783,000
20. Sweden	1.0	11,065,000

AMERICAN INTEREST IN PHILIPPINE SUGAR

The aggregate investment in the Philippine sugar industry amounts to $251,512,535, of which $84,012,535 represents investment in centrals. The investments in these mills is predominantly American and Filipino, as shown in the following table:

Nationality	Number of centrals	Total investments	Percentage of total investments
American	12	$33,815,650	40
Filipino	22	31,127,894	37
Spanish	9	18,276,574	22
Others	2	792,417	1
Total	45	84,012,535	100

The investment classified as Spanish includes investments made by two of the oldest established companies in the Islands—one established 75 years ago, and the other more than 50 years ago—so that it is generally considered in the Philippine Islands that these are Philippine investments. Moreover, many of the holders of the stock of the centrals classified as Spanish are in fact Filipino citizens.

No Chinese are financially interested in the mills.

UNITED STATES RESPONSIBILITY TO PHILIPPINES AND CUBA

There has been a propaganda designed to magnify United States responsibility to Cuba and minimize the same responsibility to the Philippine Islands.

This is unfortunate and embarrassing, but, as there is an attempt to make the Philippines pay substantially the entire bill for benefits which are to accrue to Cuba, it compels a reluctant statement.

In the year 1898, as the result of the War with Spain, there came into the possession of the United States Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Hawaii was placed under American sovereignty in the same year because of its strategic naval importance. The Virgin Islands followed by purchase in 1917.

Americans went to Cuba as liberators and benefactors in a war which lasted only 90 days. Because of this war the United States was compelled to continue a new war in the Philippines for 3½ years.

The United States governs the Philippine Islands, although the Philippines pay their own bills and the entire cost of their government.

A great naval station and a division of America's Army are maintained there.

The American flag flies and will continue to fly for many years.

All of these Territories or insular possessions over which the American flag flies are entitled to equal and impartial treatment in the matter of quotas and reservations.

They should not be discriminated against in their economic welfare for the benefit of a foreign nation.

If the United States is under an obligation to assist Cuba in its time of distress, it is a national obligation to be borne equally by all of the people of the United States and not by one particular area or one special group.

Continental and insular sugar growers are not responsible for disorder in Cuba, for its financial difficulties, or for the reckless expenditure of American millions in the overproduction of sugar.

While American citizens and colonials are undoubtedly sympathetic with the difficulties now confronting Cuba, we respectfully submit that if their responsibility is a United States responsibility, it does not belong exclusively to the sugar-producing areas of the Nation, much less especially to the Philippine Islands.

Cuba is a foreign nation, with its own flag and its own government.

The limitation on American relationship is the Platt amendment, which was enacted more for the benefit of Cuba than for the United States. With this exception, America has no more responsibility to Cuba than to any other foreign nation.

It is asserted that Cuban sugar production is essential to preserve its economic life.

This is equally true of the Philippines. Sixty percent of its total business is related to sugar; 63 percent of its total exports is sugar, which finds its only market in the United States.

The Philippines have an ocean haul of 11,000 miles, requiring from 45 to 60 days to reach their market. Cuba has relatively a short distance to the American market, taking but few hours of sailing to reach American shores.

There are four times as many people living in the Philippine Islands as there are in Cuba.

Cuba has an area of 41,000 square miles with a population of only 3,700,000. The Philippines have an area of 114,000 square miles with a population of 14,000,000, an increase of 7,000,000 since American occupation. It will only be a short time before they will have a population of 25,000,000, with a potential population of 60,000,000.

Cuba, according to Willett & Gray, produced in 1932–33 a total of 2,235,000 short tons, or a per capita sugar production of 1,200 pounds, while for the same period the Philippines produced 1,283,000 short tons, or a per capita production of only 180 pounds.

Cuba is therefore producing seven times as much sugar per capita as the Philippines.

While there are ample provisions for storing reserve sugar in Cuba, warehouse storage capacity in the Philippines is extremely limited.

A large reserve in the Philippines will be a constant threat to the world market. It will tend to keep down the price.

As is the case in most tropical countries, Cuba's ownership of sugar-producing lands is confined to a few large proprietors having immense land holdings. They usually control the factory as well as the lands on which the sugar is grown. It is, therefore, quite apparent that social disadvantages often arise from this system of sugar production.

In the Philippines land holdings are restricted by law. Sugar is produced by thousands of small farmers with small land holdings ranging from 1 or 2 to 50 acres.

There are no serious social disadvantages so far as labor is concerned, and there is no contract labor in the Philippines.

To tax the Filipino people—and curtailment is a tax—for the sole benefit of Cuba is not an equitable thing.

Because there is trouble in Cuba does not preclude the probability of trouble in the Philippines, since America forced them into the sugar business by act of Congress, and it is now proposed to reduce their sugar business to assist a foreign nation.

The Philippines are America's eighth best world customer; Cuba ranks fifteenth.

Nothing herein is intended to discourage or oppose assistance for Cuba, but is merely a plea for fair and equal treatment for another great sugar-producing area under the sovereignty of the United States and over which flies the American flag.

PHILIPPINES READY AND ANXIOUS TO COOPERATE

The Philippine representatives in the prolonged marketing agreement conferences, in all verbal statements, and in three different briefs have clearly defined their position as desiring to cooperate and make equitable sacrifices where necessary.

Philippine sugar producers are anxious to cooperate with the Federal Government and with colonial and insular producers in any plan which is equitable and fair, which is not discriminatory or destructive. They are prepared to make common sacrifices, but must insist that burdens and benefits should be proportional and equitable.

As an evidence of good faith, the Philippine Sugar Association, representing 99 percent of the total sugar production of the islands, has adopted a resolution favoring a limitation in Philippine sugar production to 1,150,000 long tons, or 1,288,000 short tons, of which 88,000 short tons are for local consumption and 1,200,000 short tons available for export.

This is in harmony with the Philippine quota under the marketing agreement, allowing an annual export to the United States of 1,100,000 short tons and a reserve of 100,000 short tons.

HISTORY AND FUNCTIONS OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in order to include an address delivered by the Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, before the American Political Science Association in Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by the Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General of the United States and chairman of the Democratic National Committee, before the distinguished membership of the American Political Science Association, at its annual meeting at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, Pa., December 29, 1933:

It is with pleasure, gentlemen, that I come here to speak to you on the functions of the national committee as an instrument of popular government. When Dr. Pollock first wrote me about appearing before this organization, I hesitated. I thought to myself: "What is there of interest in the presentation of a routine subject like the operations of a national committee to a group like this?" But a little reflection convinced me that the matter is not only important but one of interest as well. Here we have a political party drawing its strength from the broad stream of the Nation's life, built on a foundation of public service and public interest—an organization which has existed for more than 140 years through the span of several generations—alive always to the hopes and aspirations of the common man, so why not say something about the manner in which its practical activities have been governed?

It is a pleasure to be a part of this sweeping pageant of politics—and service. For these words, my friends, are to me synonymous. Under our system of government a party aspires to power. Receiving a popular mandate, it must succeed or fail in direct proportion to the measure of its service. And when we look back over the interesting pages of the Democratic Party history we begin to find some of the reasons for its virility.

It has lived because it has served. I am sure it will not be inappropriate for me, as its chairman now, to express the hope—may it long continue to do so!

Woodrow Wilson, in commenting on the long life of the Democratic Party, once said that it has lived because it has always "had a heart under its jacket." The accuracy of this point of view is nowhere better illustrated than in the manner in which control over the party has in ever-increasing degree tended to center in the party membership. Formerly a national committeeman was always chosen by agreement among national political leaders. Now he is chosen in the several States, sometimes by the delegates to the national convention, sometimes by State conventions, and sometimes by direct vote of the people in the primaries. With its authority coming thus directly from the people the party machinery has become to a high degree responsive to the will of the people. So long as it continues to be thus responsive, a political party will continue to thrive. When it ceases to respond it loses vitality and its leaders lose power.

That, in brief, is the history of party government everywhere. Of the growth of political parties in the United States, it may be said that it was through the development of party machinery that the American people took over the selection of their President.

The adoption of the Constitution in 1789 was a great forward step in popular rule among the nations of the world, but it was not a democracy as we know democracies now. The people had little actual voice in the selection of George Washington as President, although he was unquestionably the popular choice.

We must go back to the Jackson period to witness the first real development of a centralized management for political campaigns or for party management. Prior to 1824, when Jackson was first a candidate for the Presidency, property and other restrictions greatly limited the size of the electorate. Presidential electors in many States were chosen by the State legislatures, and where they were balloted for by popular vote, that vote usually represented an expression of less than half of the qualified voters. In the selection of candidates, the common man had virtually no voice until the first National Party convention nominated Jackson at Baltimore in 1832. Prior to that time it had been the custom of the Federalist Party, and also of the Democratic-Republican Party of Thomas Jefferson, which in 1832 became the Democratic Party of Jackson, to permit Members of Congress to select the party nominees by the caucus method.

The caucus led, even at that early day, to charges of "bossism" and undue influence by the Members of Congress in party affairs. Although the caucus of 1804, sitting in Washington, while nominating Thomas Jefferson for his second term had authorized the selection of a committee consisting of one man from each of the 17 States to conduct the campaign in his State, yet it was far from being the counterpart of our national committee of this day. Eight years later, in 1812, with Madison the candidate, another group of committeemen was again selected.

With so few people voting in these early elections, or really concerned with the business of voting, the campaign machinery was simple. It consisted in the main of a small body of the candidate's personal friends, who developed committees on correspondence in the several States. Whether there was anything more than the vaguest sort of control, the record doesn't show. The idea of correspondence was used first in Massachusetts and in Virginia to rouse the Colonies against the injustices of England which led to the American Revolution.

There is much to be said in favor of the effectiveness of letter writing as a means of furthering party policy. We use it freely today. I believe in it tremendously, and in the personal touch that it carries with it. During the last Presidential campaign our Democratic headquarters in New York and Washington sent out several million pieces of mail and spent a small fortune for postage stamps.

Just as the campaign of 1824 spelled the doom of the congressional caucus system, substituting in its stead a system of nominating through State legislatures and State and local meetings, just so was it the milestone which pointed the way to a more general participation by the mass of people in the business of choosing a President. The people were beginning to think in national terms and they wanted control of the parties and also of the Presidency.

The financial panic of 1819, caused, as was the collapse that took place 110 years later, by the bursting of a post-war boom, brought about an awakening of the common man that expressed itself politically in the election of 1824. The War of 1812 and the Hartford convention had completed the wreck of the Federalist Party, and the Democratic-Republican Party was the only one in the field. But there was no central party authority, and the party was divided among the claims of five candidates, Secretary of State John Quincy Adams, Gen. Andrew Jackson, Secretary of Treasury William H. Crawford, Secretary of War John C. Calhoun, and Henry Clay, the Speaker of the House.

Crawford was nominated by the old method of a congressional caucus, but so bitter had been the attacks upon this method of nomination that more than half of the members stayed away. Jackson and Clay were nominated by a number of State legislatures, thus bringing the authorizations of their candidacies a step closer to the electorate. Due to the sharpness of the rivalry, the friends of the different candidates put forth extraordinary efforts. For the first time a Presidential candidate himself participated openly in the efforts to bring about his own election. Crawford took the first step and was followed by Calhoun and Clay. Only Adams and Jackson remained aloof, following the precedent set by Washington, even declining publicly to admit that they were candidates for the office. The campaign machinery of each candidate was on the old committee-of-correspondence type but more highly developed than before, and in the case of three of them—Crawford, Calhoun, and Clay—directed by the candidates themselves.

The popular vote in this election was double what it had ever been before. Jackson received the most electoral votes, and his adherents claimed that their man received a plurality of the popular vote. This was disputed with some justice by the friends of Adams. Actually the point is impossible of determination, owing to the fact that in several States the Presidential electors were not voted on by the people. As everyone knows, there was no majority in the electoral college, and the House of Representatives seated John Quincy Adams.

The Jackson followers raised the cry that the people's choice had been excluded from office, which is the first time the question of the President being the people's choice had seriously agitated the country as a whole.

The Jackson workers began their preparations for 1828 early and were overwhelmingly victorious.

In 1831 the Anti-Masonic Party, a small minority group with no hope of national success, held the first national nominating convention and presented the name of William Wirt, of Baltimore, for the Presidency. The interesting fact about this is that this curious party was the result of a spontaneous, popular movement and that it fixed upon a convention as the best means of expressing itself. The Jackson democracy was not slow to recognize a good thing, and in 1832 it held a national convention in Baltimore, which put forward the ticket of Jackson and Van Buren. The opposing candidate was Clay, whose friends at first belittled the convention idea, but later assembled delegates in Washington who, calling themselves a convention, ratified the nomination of Mr. Clay.

Not the least service which Jackson gave to the country as a whole was the part he played in thus bringing Government into more intimate contact with the people themselves and in setting up the beginnings of national party management.

The convention, the platforms, the keynote speech—all these we inherit from the Jackson era, as my friend Claude Bowers so interestingly tells in his book, Party Battles of the Jackson Period.

And as an aftermath we find party machinery becoming more responsive to the will of the people.

The proceedings of the 1848 Democratic National Convention give the first actual record of the definite organization of a national committee. It was a central committee, with one chosen from each State. The chairman was Benjamin F. Hallett, of Massachusetts. However, I believe the real foundation for this step was laid in the previous election when Polk and Dallas were the candidates. I have in my own possession an original letter written in 1844 from Washington. It is written by Robert J. Walker, a native Pennsylvanian and graduate of your own University of Pennsylvania, at that time 43 years old and representing the State of Mississippi in the United States Senate. Senator Walker had just received an invitation to attend a barbecue down in Mississippi, and he was sending his declination. I quote from his letter:

"* * * The National Democratic Convention of Baltimore appointed a central committee, whose operations were to be conducted at this city with a view to promote the election of Polk and Dallas. Of this committee I was chosen chairman, and consented to remain here and discharge the duties of that office."

Here, I believe, is definite evidence of the creation by the party convention of the machinery for the central control or direction of the national campaign. Senator Walker says he had information from every State of the Union—and there were 26 of them at that time—as to the trend of the political campaign—and he wrote his Mississippi constituents that "our success seems certain." * * * "In the three great States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia", he wrote, "our triumph appears absolutely certain." Walker then went on to predict, correctly, too, the loss of Massachusetts, Vermont, Rhode Island, and Kentucky to Clay.

Speaking to you, gentlemen, I want to remind you that I, too, have indulged in political prediction. But I want to say here that I would not relish being as close a guesser as was this first chairman of the Democratic National Committee. He said, in 1844, that he was "absolutely certain" of New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. James K. Polk, his candidate, carried all three States, it is true, but I find he carried New York State by a little over 5,000 votes, Pennsylvania by 6,300, and Virginia by less than 6,000. The total vote in the electoral college then was 275, with 138 necessary to election. Here we have a popular plurality of only about 17,000 votes accounting for 79 electoral votes, more than half of the number necessary for election. The loss of New York State alone would have meant the loss of the election. To lapse into a colloquialism, that is too close for comfort, taking it from one who knows.

And while we are on the subject of predictions, a word here wouldn't be amiss about our performance in 1932. In the campaign, both for the nomination and the subsequent election, I frequently indicated my faith in the result through a public prediction. Many thought that we were simply guessing, broadcasting a prediction that had no basis or foundation of fact. We maintained at headquarters a division that was notably new in the history of political organizations—a division of analysis. We kept close track of trends, particularly those disclosed by straw ballots and test polls of all kinds. And on the basis of these trends, we tried to formulate estimates that were reasonable and likely of accomplishment.

For example, in my published statements on three different occasions I predicted that we would carry the eight Mountain States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico with a total plurality of 300,000. The actual plurality was 295,489, or an average error for each of the eight States of but 564 votes. For the States of North and South Dakota my prediction was 185,000 majority, and the combined majority was 190,931. For Minnesota my prediction was 250,000; the actual plurality was 236,847. For the State of Washington my prediction was 150,000, although on September 16 our analyst gave an estimate of 142,858 indicated plurality. The actual plurality was 144,615. For Oregon I used the round figure of 100,000 plurality, although on September 17 our analyst had submitted a statement of 77,330 indicated margin. The actual vote was 77,852. My Kansas prediction was over 50,000; our analyst on October 8 had reported 74,200 as the indicated plurality, and when the votes were counted it was a Roosevelt victory by 74,706. Michigan and Indiana together would produce a majority for our ticket of 300,000 votes I thought; the actual combined plurality was a little over 316,000. Maine and Vermont I always figured we would lose, but my hopes were set on Connecticut and New Hampshire, both of which we would have won if less than 5,000 people had voted Democratic instead of Republican. Likewise I was hopeful of victory in Delaware, although our analyst predicted defeat by less than 1,000 votes. We lost by 2,755.

In the 10 Southern States, not anticipating such a tremendous outpouring of voters, we figured on a combined plurality of 2,000,000. It reached 2,317,937. In the six border States we figured 1,000,000 total plurality; it reached 1,212,388.

Of course, we missed in Pennsylvania—virtually the only upset in our whole calculations—and in some of the States the last-minute drive of the opposition pared down tremendously the vote that we had expected to receive. This was notably true in Ohio, Illinois, New Jersey, and New York.

You will pardon me for thus digressing—it is a far cry from the 1844 campaign of Polk and Dallas to our last Roosevelt-Garner victory—but through the nearly 90 years that have elapsed since that hectic campaign of 1844 the Democratic Party machinery has functioned in much the same fashion, continually widening its basic foundation with the mass of people and enlarging its sphere of influence.

The country has broadened—we had only 26 States then, and, as a direct result of that very campaign, we added to our domain the great empire of Texas, the Oregon country, and California—a Democratic triumph about which we may well get a perpetual thrill of pride. The campaign tools have changed—the national committee chairman used the telegraph wires for the first time in that 1844 campaign, while today our incessant use of telegraph and telephone gives us of the national committee who have bills to pay many a headache, indeed. The characters have changed—instead of Jackson, Polk, Benton, and their fellow stalwarts, we have new faces and new personalities serving now, however, with identical loyalty and identical patriotism under the leadership of our own great President, Franklin Roosevelt.

The national committee thus brought into existence shortly after the parties were themselves first formed has a very definite function to perform. It is the essence of the party organization without which the party would be unable to conduct a campaign. Political principles do not carry themselves into effect. They are translated into action only by organized effort. This effort in a national party is possible only through the committee which, independently of Members of Congress or other officeholders, affords a channel of communication between party leaders and the people in the States.

Not only during the period of a national campaign but in the interval there must be a body to speak the will of the party as a party, a functioning political organism, and to supply the people with information of what is going on at the seat of government. There can be no doubt that the information service maintained at Washington from 1928 to 1932 by the Democratic National Committee under the able leadership of my predecessor, John J. Raskob, had much to do with laying the basis for the Democratic victory of last November.

And may I not here give you a current example of what may be accomplished through a national committee, in translating a party mandate into law? I refer to the late repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution through the adoption of the twenty-first amendment.

In the spring of 1932, before the conventions of either party were held, this was the situation: The repeal of the prohibition amendment was a national issue. Its great unpopularity had led to a break-down of respect for law and order. Both major parties considered it. Each wrote a plank covering its stand on this important problem. The Democratic Party was returned overwhelmingly victorious at the polls in November 1932, and through its constituted leaders in the House and Senate immediately began to press for consideration of the repeal question even before the change in power. So on February 20, 1933, Congress passed the twenty-first amendment for ratification to the States.

One of the first steps taken through the National Committee of the Democratic Party was the enlistment of all loyal party workers for work in the repeal fight. I addressed letters to all party workers in each of the States where the repeal amendment was to come up for ratification. In many of the States I made a personal appeal to voters in my capacity of chairman of the Democratic National Committee. I appealed directly for support and always pointed to the fact that the party mandate in the matter was clean-cut. The party had been placed in power; it was now necessary to fulfill the promises made.

And under the leadership of President Roosevelt this amendment was ratified by 36 States and proclaimed effective on December 5, 1933. This established a modern record for speed in the ratification of a constitutional amendment. The sixteenth amendment took over 3½ years for ratification; the seventeenth, a little over a year; the eighteenth, 1 year 1 month and 10 days; the nineteenth, a little over 1 year 2 months; the twentieth, 11 months 3 days; and the twenty-first, 9 months 13 days.

The fight for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment I believe to be a good example of a solemn party pledge being translated into legislation through the assistance and under the sponsorship of the party leadership.

I believe in party government. I believe in its value to the Nation. I believe that political parties should accept responsibility, and, having made a contract with the people, I believe they should live up to the pledges they have given.

The Democratic Party has a rich past, rich with the record of service, rich with the spiritual inheritance from great leaders, and within the party this living spirit now keeps fresh and uppermost, as I trust it always shall, the Democratic ideal of service to the Nation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the majority leader what the program is going to be for the balance of the afternoon?

Mr. BYRNS. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi wants to address the House for a few minutes. After that I hope the committee will be called. I do not know that any committee will have a bill ready until we reach the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. Providing the Committee on Agriculture should get into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and have a bill under consideration at 4 o'clock, when we would like to go into conference, what does the gentleman propose to do?

Mr. BYRNS. As I have said to the gentleman, I am sure the Committee will be glad to rise and the House to adjourn in order that the gentlemen on the Republican side may hold their conference.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, the program for the balance of the week will be to call the Private Calendar, probably Thursday and Friday?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; and possibly consider a rule on Friday, although I am not absolutely sure about it.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman know what rule is going to be called up?

Mr. BYRNS. I could not tell the gentleman what the bill is, but I do know there is a rule which was introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. SNELL. From the information we have at present, the tax bill will not come up before Monday or Tuesday of next week?

Mr. BYRNS. That is my understanding, the first of the week. I am hopeful that the tax bill will be ready so that it may be taken up on Monday.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, on Monday there may be a great many people away.

Mr. BYRNS. It will come up for general debate as a preliminary.

Mr. SNELL. Then, as near as possible, we can count on the first of next week for the tax bill?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the very splendid statement relative to Muscle Shoals, made by my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. RANKIN, I want to make an observation concerning another distinguished Mississippian, my predecessor, Hon. Percy E. Quin. Mr. Quin was one of the pioneers in promoting this legislation in behalf of the masses of the people. One of my colleagues in the House said that Percy Quin literally fell in his tracks in behalf of this legislation. As chairman of the Military Affairs Committee in his last speech on the floor of this House he championed this worthy cause.

This is a matter very dear to our people, so long represented by my predecessor, Mr. Quin, and it gave to Mississippi citizens a twofold hope. First it offered cheaper power to all the people, and, secondly, cheaper fertilizer for the farmers. I hope that the day is not far distant when both of these objectives may be realized.

The distinguished Percy E. Quin fought hard to gain these objectives, and I may state now that I believe the people in my section of Mississippi, as a result of Percy Quin's splendid efforts, are entitled to cheaper electric power. I am very happy to say that the initial steps have been taken whereby the people, so long and very ably represented by my predecessor, may hope soon to enjoy the results of the Muscle Shoals legislation. I know this will be true, if the power is available at the present time. It is my happy privilege to pay this tribute of respect to the late Percy E. Quin, who worked so untiringly and so faithfully, and who had this splendid vision of giving cheaper power to all of our people and cheaper fertilizer to the American farmers.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that I served on the committee with the gentleman's predecessor, the late Hon. Percy E. Quin. If any man worked, fought, toiled, and labored through the years to bring about the development of the Tennessee Valley, which we so much wanted, it was Mr. Quin. As the gentleman from Mississippi has suggested, he literally fell in the fight. It was due in large measure to his work and his efforts that we today realize the fruits of this development. I join with the gentleman from Mississippi in his much-deserved and splendid tribute to Percy Quin, and I wish to say that in the gentleman from Mississippi Percy Quin has a worthy successor, who, because of his character, his intellect, and his devotion to duty, has won the esteem of the Membership of this House and who is carrying on for his people in a most creditable and successful way.

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for his statement.

ELECTION OF MEMBER OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina, is engaged now with his committee in the preparation of the tax bill and is unable to be here at this moment. The gentleman has requested me to present this resolution and ask for its immediate consideration and adoption.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 256

Resolved, That ISABELLA GREENWAY, of Arizona, be, and she is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House on Indian Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN MARSHALL

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the very excellent address on John Marshall made on Sunday last over the radio, under the auspices of the American Bar Association, by our colleague, Mr. JAMES M. BECK.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address by Hon. JAMES M. BECK, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee on American citizenship of the American Bar Association, Sunday, February 4, 1934:

One hundred and thirty-three years ago today a notable event took place in a small committee room in the Capitol in Washington. The world at the time took little note, and yet this modest ceremonial was destined to influence profoundly the development of our form of government. The Federal Government had recently removed from Philadelphia to Washington, and while the Capitol had been in part erected, no provision had been made for the Supreme Court of the United States. Its estate was so low that Chief Justice Jay had declined to accept reappointment because of his belief that the Court would not have sufficient dignity and power. The Court, as the balance wheel of our governmental machinery and the supreme conscience of the Nation in matters of constitutional morality, had done little more than organize and consider a few cases when the ceremonial, to which I have referred, took place. No provision had been made for it except a small committee room on the second floor of the Capitol, which could not contain an audience of more than 25. Upon the opening of the Court, its clerk read to the few there assembled a commission signed by John Adams, as President of the United States, appointing John Marshall, of Virginia, as the new Chief Justice of the Court. The Chief Justice then took an oath to support and defend the Constitution and that oath he kept.

The new Chief Justice was not unknown to fame. He had been a gallant officer in the Revolutionary War, and had shared with Washington the privations of Valley Forge. He had become a leader of the bar in Virginia, and no one was more potential in securing the all-important ratification of the Federal Constitution by the State of Virginia than John Marshall. He had served in the House of Representatives, and later had won the admiration of his fellow countrymen by sternly advising the corrupt Directorate of France that America, small as she was, would pay no tribute. On his return from France, he had become the Secretary of State under John Adams, and among the last acts of that administration was Marshall's appointment as Chief Justice. John Adams was to say later, and with entire justice, that "There is no act of my life on which I reflect with more pleasure. I have given to my country a judge equal to a Hale, a Holt, or a Mansfield."

History has confirmed this verdict, for no American jurist has won in the English-speaking world an equal fame with that of Marshall. His reputation is timeless. No one would now question that he was the greatest judge that America ever gave to the world; and, while it is dangerous to speculate as to the future, it is reasonably probable that no judge will ever surpass the immeasurable constructive influence that John Marshall has had in the development of the American Constitution.

Let us briefly consider the nature of Marshall's task. The Constitutional Convention of 1787 had written for the first time in a single charter a comprehensive scheme of civil government. It was a new experiment in political statecraft. Wise as the framers were in what they provided in a compact of incomparable lucidity, they were even wiser in all that they left to the future to decide in the practical application of their form of government. They enumerated powers, but wisely did not attempt to define them. They declared great objectives and made express grants of power, but they wisely left to the future the definition of the necessary means to exercise those powers and to realize those objectives. When John Marshall ascended the bench the serious task of interpretation began, and the Supreme Court under his masterly leadership, which lasted for 34 years, developed the Constitution with such admirable wisdom that when the centennial anniversary of the Constitution was celebrated the greatest English statesmen of the nineteenth century pronounced it, in the oft-quoted words, "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." The work of interpretation was so great that it has been said that the Constitution was but a skeleton and that John Marshall clothed it with living flesh. This, however, is a false analogy. The master architects of the Constitutional Convention provided a finished design of a constitutional edifice of a unique character, and John Marshall was but a master builder, who took the architect's plan and made it a serviceable temple of ordered government.

This would have been difficult under any circumstances, but when John Marshall became Chief Justice the infant Nation, and indeed the whole world, was on the eve of the most tremendous transformation that has occurred in human history. The world was to be transformed by a mechanical civilization, and the problem of John Marshall was to apply the principles of the Constitution in their full integrity to the changing conditions of the most changing period of human history.

He, himself, recognized this, for in one of his great decisions, he said of the Constitution that it was "intended to endure for ages to come, and consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs." In other words, as Jefferson said more tersely and eloquently, "The Constitution is for the living and not for the dead." In accepting this definition of judicial power it is important to realize exactly what John Marshall meant by the word "adapted." So far as any change in the text of the great covenant, an adaptation which changes its grants of power, was made possible only by an express power of amendment, and under article V of the Constitution, it can be changed as and when the people so decide, in the manner provided therein. But no one who has read the decisions of John Marshall can believe that he meant by the word "adapted" to imply that there was any power in any department of the Government to alter the Constitution to meet the passing interests or passions of a fleeting day. Such an idea is repugnant to the Constitution, for of it can be said, as Edmund Burke said of society, that "it is a noble compact between the dead, the living, and the unborn." The essential nature of the Constitution is that it restrains equally the Federal Government and the constituent States from taking any action which is inconsistent with the grants of power or the positive restrictions of the Constitution. All of John Marshall's decisions make it plain beyond controversy that he merely meant by the word "adapted" that the Constitution in its essential spirit should be, by interpretation, applied to the conditions of human life as they would vary from age to age. For example, the commerce power, when the Constitution was adopted, could only be applied to wagons or sailing ships, and yet the Constitution authorized impliedly its application to the steamship, the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, and the radio.

While such application seemingly enlarges the powers of the Federal Government, these powers are essentially the same powers as those granted by the Constitution and cannot be constitutionally enlarged or restricted except by formal amendment. This is the sound doctrine of Marshall, but no one can dispute that in the last half century, through many perversions of Federal power and the abuses of the right of appropriation and under other specious pretexts, such as "emergency", the powers of the Federal Government have been so expanded at the expense of the States and of the individual citizen that if John Marshall were today to resume his place as Chief Justice of the United States he would find some difficulty in recognizing our present constitutional edifice. From a federated state of strictly limited powers, the Federal Government has become a unitary socialistic state of almost unlimited powers. This may be necessary, but it is not what the Constitution intended.

This is largely due to the inability of any people to restrain their political activities by the written word. You will remember in Alice in Wonderland that Humpty Dumpty said, "When I use a word it means just what I choose it to mean, neither more nor less." To which Alice replied, "The question is whether you can make words mean so many different things." To which Humpty Dumpty replied, "The question is, Which is to be master? that's all." The development of our country in the last 50 years by all three branches has been to make each of them the master of the words employed in the Constitution. It is held to mean what each generation wants it to mean. This means that we have no Constitution, except in form.

It reminds one of the powerful satire of the greatest satirist of the eighteenth century, Dean Swift. He tells the story of a testator who left his property to three sons upon the solemn injunction in his will that they should wear coats which he had designed for them without any additions. When the sons came of age they found that it was fashionable in London to wear shoulder knots on their coats, and when they could not find the words "shoulder knots" in the will they picked out enough letters which when assembled would spell "shoulder knots", and then claimed they were obeying the will. Then when it became fashionable to wear gold lace on coats they proceeded to say that while the will had forbidden them to do it, yet the testator in his lifetime had orally given other directions, and their convenient memories recalled that their father was not averse to gold lace. Then when the fashion changed and silver fringes became à la mode, they were confronted with the difficulty that the will expressly forbade wearing silver fringes, but they affected to believe that the word "fringes" in the will simply meant broomsticks. Finally, when it became fashionable to embroider coats they decided, to quote Dean Swift, "to lock up their father's will in a strong box and trouble themselves no further to examine it, but only refer to its authority whenever they saw fit." This allegory is a true description of the gradual transformation of our form of government by executive usage, legislative usurpations, and at times ingenious judicial interpretations.

John Marshall would never have countenanced these perversions. To the Constitution he was as "constant as the northern star, of whose true-fix'd and resting quality there is no fellow in the firmament."

For 34 years he presided over the Supreme Court, and under his masterful leadership it had become one of the greatest, if not the greatest Court in the world. He had outlived all the political enmities of his earlier years, and as the end drew near men of all parties honored him, even as they do today.

The muse of history often writes great drama, and such a climax was to mark the passing of the great Chief Justice. At the ripe age of 80 he had gone to Philadelphia to submit to an operation for an incurable malady. He lodged in a modest boarding house on Walnut Street, and from his room could see the ancient belfry of Independence Hall, from which, as from Pharos, the light of liberty had shone to the remotest corners of the land. He could hear from his sick bed, hour by hour, the solemn reverberations of the bell which had proclaimed, with its iron tongue, the sorrows and triumphs of the infant Nation. Within the shadow of Independence Hall he died, as full of honors as of years, and when his body was moved from his temporary home to his distant home in Virginia, of which he was so proud, and where he rests from his labors, it was thought fitting that his passing from a city where he had served his Nation so honorably should be marked by the tolling of the bell, which we now reverently call the "Liberty Bell." As the funeral cortege passed to the river side, the historic bell was silenced forever by a break in its iron surface.

Could the bell have ended its career more fittingly than in recording the passing of a gallant soldier, a great statesman, and an incomparable jurist?

Generations will come and go, but none will ever come that will not honor John Marshall.

We can best honor him by giving to the Constitution, of which he will always be the most illustrious expounder, our loyal and lifelong support.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. BOYLAN (when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 94, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept certain gifts.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, where did this resolution come from?

Mr. BOYLAN. This came from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. I understand this joint resolution is on the Union Calendar and will have to be considered in the Committee of the Whole. I assume the gentleman from New York will have charge of the time in favor of the bill, and I should like to be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. I will be glad to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on the joint resolution. The gentleman is not even a member of the committee that reports the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I may say that I endeavored to get in touch with the chairman of the committee. I communicated with the gentleman's office and I have been unable to locate him. In conversation with the gentleman, however, he is favorable to this resolution and inasmuch as the call comes on today and the joint resolution has been reported by the committee, I see no reason why I should not call it up.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the gentleman must have specific authority from the committee to call up the resolution.

Mr. BOYLAN. As I stated, I have been unable to get in touch with the chairman. The chairman is favorable to this resolution and I know if the gentleman were here he would call this joint resolution up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not specifically authorized to call it up at this time.

Mr. BOYLAN. I have not been specifically authorized as to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not specifically authorized to call up the joint resolution in the absence of the chairman.

Mr. BOYLAN. But, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the point of order comes too late. We had already proceeded to take the matter up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am sure the gentleman would have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. FULMER. I make a point of order against calling up the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman please reserve his point of order long enough for me to meet his objection?

Mr. FULMER. No. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. FULMER (when the Committee on Agriculture was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 1517) to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOSS and Mr. MAPES rose.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from South Carolina authorized to call up the measure by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. FULMER. Yes, Mr. Speaker; and the chairman of the committee is present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the calling up of the bill. We have fallen into a rather careless habit here of not requiring the Members who call bills up on Calendar Wednesday to qualify. The rule expressly provides that the Member must be so instructed by his committee in order to call up a bill on Calendar Wednesday. I think in justice to the members of the committee the rule ought to be complied with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina has made the statement that he is authorized to call up the bill.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I have been authorized by the committee and by the chairman to call up this measure. The chairman is present and would have called up the bill, but he is suffering with a very bad cold.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been reported. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill read?

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of the "Cotton Net Weight Act."

The word "person", wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations.

The words "in interstate or foreign commerce", wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District or to or through any foreign country, or within any Territory or Distict.

The words "bale covering" shall be construed to mean bagging, ties, and patches.

When considering and enforcing the provisions of this act the omission or failure of any official agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation, as well as that of the person.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate the handling, inspection, and transportation of cotton in interstate and foreign commerce; to study the materials used for bale covering for such cotton; and from time to time to establish standards for materials used for bale coverings, including specifications and tolerance as to size, weights, and patterns, which said standards, when established, shall be known as the United States official cotton tare standards: Provided, That said official cotton tare standards shall be established and promulgated within 1 year from the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That any such standards or change or replacement thereof shall become effective only on and after a date specified in the order of the Secretary of Agriculture establishing the same, which date shall not be less than 1 year from the date of such order. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to prescribe maximum weights of bale covering, including both bagging and ties, used on cotton for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, not to exceed 16 pounds, including patches per bale.

SEC. 3. That from and after 1 year following the effective date of the United States official cotton tare standards, all bale covering used on American cotton for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall be of sizes, weights, and patterns conforming with such official cotton tare standards.

SEC. 4. That from and after 1 year following the effective date of official cotton tare standards all American cotton shall be quoted, bought, and sold for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce on net weights, excluding in each instance the weight of bagging, ties, and patches.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be promulgated such regulations, may cause such investigations, tests, demonstrations, and publications to be made as he shall find to be necessary; and he is hereby authorized to cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person in carrying out the provisions of this act; and he shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees not in conflict with existing law, and to make such expenditures for printing, books of reference, technical newspapers and periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

SEC. 6. Any person who shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act or any regulation made in pursuance hereof; or any person who shall knowingly misrepresent the weight of any bale covering by misbranding or otherwise; or any person who shall forcibly assault, resist, impede, interfere with, or influence improperly, or attempt to influence improperly, any person employed under this act in the pursuance of his duties, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $500.

SEC. 7. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount not to exceed $30,000 annually for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. If any provisions of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut raises the question of consideration.

The question is, Will the House now consider the bill (H.R. 1517) to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton, and for other purposes?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FULMER) there were—ayes 49, noes 48.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members present, not a quorum. The call is automatic.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. A point of no quorum has been sustained and a constitutional question is raised.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a parliamentary inquiry cannot be entertained or any other business transacted in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The call is automatic.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 161, nays 179, answered "present" 2, not voting 90, as follows:

[Roll No. 86]

YEAS—161

Allgood	Bailey	Biermann	Boileau
Arnold	Bankhead	Bland	Boland
Ayers, Mont.	Beam	Blanton	Brown, Ga.
Brown, Ky.	Ellzey, Miss.	Lloyd	Scrugham
Brown, Mich.	Faddis	Lozier	Sears
Buchanan	Flannagan	Lundeen	Secrest
Burch	Fletcher	McClintic	Shoemaker
Burke, Calif.	Fuller	McDuffie	Smith, Va.
Byrns	Fulmer	McFarlane	Smith, W.Va.
Cady	Gilchrist	McGrath	Steagall
Caldwell	Gillespie	McKeown	Strong, Tex.
Cannon, Mo.	Glover	McReynolds	Stubbs
Carden, Ky.	Green	McSwain	Swank
Carmichael	Greenway	Martin, Colo.	Tarver
Carpenter, Nebr.	Greenwood	May	Taylor, Colo.
Cartwright	Gregory	Meeks	Taylor, S.C.
Castellow	Hancock, N.C.	Miller	Terrell, Tex.
Chapman	Harlan	Milligan	Terry, Ark.
Chavez	Hastings	Mitchell	Thomason
Christianson	Henney	Montet	Thompson, Ill.
Clark, N.C.	Hill, Ala.	Murdock	Truax
Collins, Miss.	Hoeppel	Oliver, Ala.	Turner
Cooper, Tenn.	Hoidale	Owen	Umstead
Cox	Howard	Parker	Underwood
Cravens	Huddleston	Parks	Vinson, Ga.
Cross, Tex.	Imhoff	Parsons	Vinson, Ky.
Crowe	Jacobsen	Patman	Wallgren
Cummings	James	Peavey	Wearin
Darden	Jeffers	Peterson	Werner
Dear	Johnson, Minn.	Polk	West, Ohio
Deen	Johnson, Tex.	Randolph	West, Tex.
DeRouen	Jones	Rankin	Whittington
Dickinson	Keller	Rayburn	Wilcox
Dies	Kloeb	Richards	Willford
Disney	Knutson	Robertson	Williams
Dobbins	Kvale	Rogers, Okla.	Wilson
Dockweiler	Lambeth	Romjue	Withrow
Doxey	Lanham	Ruffin	Zioncheck
Driver	Lea, Calif.	Sanders
Duncan, Mo.	Lemke	Sandlin
Eagle	Lewis, Colo.	Schaefer

NAYS—179

Adair	Doughton, N.C.	Kahn	Peyser
Allen	Douglass	Kelly, Pa.	Pierce
Andrew, Mass.	Doutrich, Pa.	Kennedy, Md.	Pou
Andrews, N.Y.	Dowell	Kenney	Powers
Bacharach	Drewry	Kerr	Ramspeck
Bacon	Duffey	Kinzer	Ransley
Bakewell	Dunn	Kniffin	Reed, N.Y.
Beck	Durgan, Ind.	Kocialkowski	Reilly
Berlin	Eaton	Kopplemann	Richardson
Blanchard	Eicher	Lambertson	Robinson
Boehne	Ellenbogen	Lamneck	Rogers, Mass.
Bolton	Eltse, Calif.	Lanzetta	Rogers, N.H.
Boylan	Englebright	Larrabee	Rudd
Britten	Evans	Lehlbach	Sabath
Brooks	Farley	Lehr	Schuetz
Brumm	Fiesinger	Lewis, Md.	Schulte
Brunner	Fish	Lindsay	Seger
Buckbee	Focht	Luce	Shallenberger
Bulwinkle	Foss	Ludlow	Sinclair
Burke, Nebr.	Foulkes	McCormack	Snell
Burnham	Frear	McFadden	Studley
Carpenter, Kans.	Frey	McGugin	Sullivan
Carter, Wyo.	Gambrill	McLean	Sutphin
Celler	Gavagan	McLeod	Swick
Chase	Gifford	Maloney, Conn.	Taber
Claiborne	Gillette	Maloney, La.	Thom
Clarke, N.Y.	Goodwin	Mapes	Thomas
Cochran, Mo.	Goss	Marshall	Tinkham
Cochran, Pa.	Granfield	Martin, Mass.	Tobey
Coffin	Gray	Martin, Oreg.	Treadway
Cole	Griffin	Mead	Turpin
Collins, Calif.	Griswold	Merritt	Utterback
Condon	Hancock, N.Y.	Millard	Wadsworth
Connery	Hart	Monaghan, Mont.	Walter
Connolly	Harter	Moran	Weaver
Cooper, Ohio	Healey	Morehead	Weideman
Corning	Higgins	Mott	Welch
Crosby	Hildebrandt	Muldowney	Whitley
Crowther	Hill, Knute	Musselwhite	Wigglesworth
Cullen	Hill, Samuel B.	Norton	Wolcott
Darrow	Hollister	O'Brien	Wolfenden
Delaney	Holmes	O'Connor	Wolverton
De Priest	Hooper	Oliver, N.Y.	Woodruff
Dirksen	Hope	Palmisano	Young
Ditter	Jenkins, Ohio	Pettengill

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2

Adams	O'Malley

NOT VOTING—90

Abernethy	Church	Guyer	McCarthy
Arens	Colden	Haines	McMillan
Auf der Heide	Colmer	Hamilton	Mansfield
Ayres, Kans.	Crosser, Ohio	Hartley	Marland
Beedy	Crump	Hess	Montague
Beiter	Culkin	Hughes	Moynihan, Ill.
Black	Dickstein	Jenckes, Ind.	Nesbit
Bloom	Dingell	Johnson, Okla.	O'Connell
Brennan	Dondero	Johnson, W.Va.	Perkins
Browning	Edmiston	Kee	Plumley
Buck	Edmonds	Kelly, Ill.	Prall
Busby	Fernandez	Kennedy, N.Y.	Ramsay
Cannon, Wis.	Fitzgibbons	Kleberg	Reece
Carley, N.Y.	Fitzpatrick	Kramer	Reid, Ill.
Carter, Calif.	Ford	Kurtz	Rich
Cary	Gasque	Lee, Mo.	Sadowski
Cavicchia	Goldsborough	Lesinski	Shannon

Simpson	Spence	Taylor, Tenn.	White
Sirovich	Stalker	Thompson, Tex.	Wood, Ga.
Sisson	Stokes	Thurston	Wood, Mo.
Smith, Wash.	Strong, Pa.	Traeger	Woodrum
Snyder	Sumners, Tex.	Waldron
Somers, N.Y.	Sweeney	Warren

So the House refused to consider the bill.

The following pairs were announced:

On the vote:

Mr. Wood of Georgia (for) with Mr. Carley (against).
Mr. Gasque (for) with Mr. Hess (against).
Mr. Buck (for) with Mr. Fitzpatrick (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Crump with Mr. Beedy.
Mr. Prall with Mr. Rich.
Mr. Montague with Mr. Dondero.
Mr. Bloom with Mr. Guyer.
Mr. Mansfield with Mr. Perkins.
Mr. Sumners of Texas with Mr. Waldron.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Reece.
Mr. Ayres of Kansas with Mr. Hartley.
Mr. Busby with Mr. Culkin.
Mr. Kelly of Illinois with Mr. Edmunds.
Mr. Woodrum with Mr. Simpson.
Mr. Warren with Mr. Kurtz.
Mr. Sweeney with Mr. Taylor of Tennessee.
Mr. Sisson with Mr. Carter of California.
Mr. Kennedy of New York with Mr. Stokes.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Cavicchia.
Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma with Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Crosser of Ohio with Mr. Traeger.
Mr. Cole with Mr. Reid of Illinois.
Mr. Haines with Mr. Plumley.
Mr. O'Connell with Mr. Stalker.
Mr. Auf der Heide with Mr. Moynihan of Illinois.
Mr. Browning with Mr. Thurston.
Mr. Cary with Mr. Arens.
Mr. Thompson of Texas with Mr. Hamilton.
Mr. White with Mr. Wood of Missouri.
Mr. Ramsay with Mr. Colden.
Mr. Hughes with Mr. Ford.
Mr. Edmonston with Mr. Dingell.
Mr. Beiter with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Marland with Mr. Lee of Missouri.
Mr. Spence with Mr. Snyder.
Mr. Lesinski with Mr. Smith of Washington.
Mr. McMillan with Mr. McCarthy.
Mr. Fernandez with Mr. Fitzgibbons.
Mr. Brennan with Mr. Church.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CROP PRODUCTION AND HARVESTING, 1934

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1975, an act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1934, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. JONES, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 23

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a recent Supreme Court decision.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to call attention to a most significant ruling rendered by the United States Supreme Court, day before yesterday, in the case of the United States against Chambers and Gibson, sustaining a decision of the Middle District of North Carolina Federal District Court. Under this ruling, 9,576 national prohibition law cases on Federal court dockets, involving nearly 13,000 persons, are to be dropped. As a result of this ruling any person charged with violation of the national prohibition laws prior to repeal, but upon whom sentence had not been passed on or before December 5, will be freed. This applies not only to those who had not been tried on prohibition indictments, but also to those found guilty who appealed their cases to higher courts, provided that a final determination of their cases had not been made by December 5, the date of repeal.

All prisoners convicted subsequent to December 5 will go free, but those sentenced to prison before December 5 must remain in custody. This will inevitably result in a grave discrimination and injustice, which can only be remedied by pardoning the between three and four thousand persons incarcerated at the present time for violation of the national prohibition laws who were sentenced prior to repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Not only does ordinary justice and fair play demand such action, but the whole country will benefit to the extent of about a quarter of a million dollars in subsistence expenses which would be saved by pardoning these prisoners.

My pending resolution, House Resolution 23, which I originally introduced in the last Congress, is in the nature of an official request by the House of Representatives for the President of the United States to exercise the authority vested in his office by the Constitution and issue a pardon to violators of the National Prohibition Act, with such exceptions and on such conditions as he may deem expedient for the public welfare. In this way pardons would be granted only to those guilty of a simple infraction of the law, and habitual criminals and racketeers would remain in prison for the duration of their sentence.

There is ample precedent for such action. On July 10, 1795, President George Washington issued a proclamation of pardon and amnesty to participants in the Pennsylvania whisky rebellion. A similar proclamation was later issued on May 21, 1800, by President John Adams.

On February 6, 1815, President James Madison granted a full pardon to all persons aiding in the defense of New Orleans and the adjacent country who had previously pursued a clandestine and lawless trade.

In an act of Congress approved July 17, 1862, Congress authorized the President to extend pardon and amnesty to persons who participated in the Civil War, against the Federal Government, and as a result of this legislation, a proclamation was issued on December 8, 1863, and a supplemental one on March 26, 1864, by President Abraham Lincoln, which were followed by a full and unconditional pardon and amnesty proclamation by President Andrew Johnson on December 25, 1868.

In an act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, the President was authorized to grant an amnesty to such Mormons as had been guilty of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation. In accordance with the provisions of this legislation President Benjamin Harrison issued such a proclamation of amnesty and pardon on November 1, 1890.

These precedents have received the full approval of our country's best legal minds in the past. In an opinion rendered by the Attorney General on March 9, 1892, it was held that—

> Section 2 of article II of the Constitution, in defining the powers of the President, provides that "he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment * * *."
>
> It has been decided by the Supreme Court that the power herein conferred upon the President is unlimited. * * * He may, therefore, if he thinks fit, pardon an offender because his offense is one of many like offenses, arising from a wide-spread popular feeling and without regard to the character or the particular circumstances of the individual. * * *
>
> On principle, it seems to me, therefore, the unlimited power to grant pardons for all offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment, includes power to issue a general pardon or amnesty to any class of offenders.

In view of the ruling yesterday by the United States Supreme Court, it is necessary that we take action at once to see that liberty and freedom, as a result of repeal, is not confined to those fortunate enough to have sufficient funds to appeal their convictions and secure delays of sentence until after December 5. If approximately 13,000 persons indicted for violation of the national prohibition laws are to go free as a result of repeal occurring before they could be sentenced, we should certainly arrange for the release of the approximately 3,000 who were unable to have their cases delayed until December 5. Hardened and habitual criminals, including racketeers and other public enemies, do not, of course, deserve such clemency. My resolution does not ask for mercy for this class of offenders but simply requests the President to emulate the noble example set by George Washington, and since followed by other illustrious Presidents, and pardon prisoners guilty of a simple violation of the law.

The formal rejection of the eighteenth amendment in the comparatively short period of less than a year constituted a mighty expression of disapproval of the prohibition laws by the American people. It is my firm conviction that a general pardon for Federal dry-law violators, with such exceptions as would be necessary for the public welfare, would serve to further carry out the mandate and wishes of the people. Our famed American spirit of justice and fair play calls for immediate action, and I sincerely believe that no better finale could be desired to end the prohibition era than to culminate it by the restoration to liberty and freedom of these remaining dry-law prisoners.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were 67 ayes and 107 noes.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the call of committees.

Mr. DEROUEN (when the Committee on Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up bill 284, authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to School District No. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg., and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. This is a very important bill.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to School District No. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg., for use for school purposes, the following-described area: The southwest quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter section 27, township 17 south, range 13 east, Willamette meridian; but if such school district fails to use such lands for the purposes herein provided, or attempts to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DESERT-LAND ENTRYMAN

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 157) to amend an act approved March 4, 1929, entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915, as amended by the act of March 21, 1918."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana calls up the bill S. 157, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)", be amended to read as follows:

"That where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to July 1, 1925, under which the entryman or his duly qualified assignee under an assignment made prior to the date of this act has in good faith expended the sum of $3 per acre in the attempt to effect reclamation of the land, that there is no reasonable prospect that he would be able to secure water sufficient to effect reclamation of the irrigable land in his entry or any legal subdivision thereof, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, allow such entryman or assignee 90 days from notice within which to pay to the register of the United States land office 25 cents an acre for the land embraced in the entry and to file an election to perfect title to the entry under the provisions of this act, and thereafter within 1 year from the date of filing of such election to pay to the register the additional amount of 75 cents an acre, which shall entitle him to a patent for the land: Provided, That in case the final payment be not made within the time prescribed the entry shall be canceled and all money theretofore paid shall be forfeited."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Members present will the gentleman from Louisiana kindly have the report read.

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask now that the Clerk read the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred S. 157, after careful consideration of same, reported favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

Representative ROBINSON was designated by the chairman of the committee to report the resolution.

Facts concerning the proposed legislation are set forth in the favorable letter of the Secretary of the Interior under date of March 21, 1933, which appears in the Senate Report No. 6 of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys of the Senate, which is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

"The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to whom was referred the bill (S. 157) to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled 'An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)', having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

"Facts concerning the proposed legislation are set forth in the favorable letter of the Secretary of the Interior, under date of March 21, 1933, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 21, 1933.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands and Surveys,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have given consideration to your request of March 11 for an opinion on the merits of the legislation proposed in S. 157, a bill To amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458).

The acts mentioned in the title of the bill provide relief for desert-land entrymen unable to obtain water for irrigation, where the entries were made or assigned prior to certain dates, by substituting cash payment or compliance with the homestead laws in lieu of the requirements of the law under which such entries were made.

The proposed legislation amends the act of March 4, 1929, by bringing within its purview pending desert-land entries made prior to July 1, 1925, and by authorizing the issuance of patents to claimants who have brought themselves within its provisions upon the payment of $1 per acre for the land embraced in their respective entries. In other words, this bill extends provisions of existing legislation on an additional number of desert-land entries, namely, those made between July 1, 1922, and July 1, 1925. The only other change from existing law is the provision which permits purchase at $1 per acre instead of $2 per acre. I have no objection to the enactment of the proposed legislation.

Very truly yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly give us some explanation of this bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, this will amend the act of March 4, 1929, Public No. 1015, Seventieth Congress. Here is all it does: It amends the act so as to include those lawful pending desert-land entries made prior to July 1, 1925. Further on in the act, where it was required to pay 50 cents, we ask that, in the discretion of the Secretary, he may allow such entryman or assignee 90 days from notice within which to pay the register of the United States land office, instead of 50 cents, 25 cents per acre, and the balance within 1 year from date of filing of such election, to pay the register the additional amount of 75 cents instead of $1.50. The act accomplishes three things: First, an extension from 1922 to 1925; second, it reduces the fee from 50 cents to 25 cents; and, third, 1 year thereafter he is to pay 75 cents instead of $1.50. This refers to desert-land entry. Every person who makes a desert-land entry pays an initial sum of 25 cents. That is the first fee he pays, and then he proceeds to pay as I have just stated, so that it is making it light for these poor fellows, and the Department feels that this ought to be granted.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. And this is something of an emergency relief measure, is it?

Mr. DEROUEN. It is an emergency relief measure, absolutely.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much were these people to pay for their land originally?

Mr. DEROUEN. They paid the same thing, except that here they pay 25 cents an acre, where the act of 1929 provided 50 cents. Then they were to pay $1.50 later on, and we have cut that in half, to 75 cents.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says that this is an emergency measure, and yet he claims he is paying only 75 cents and 25 cents. I cannot see any great emergency in that.

Mr. DEROUEN. We have changed the date; we have extended the time. For entrymen, the payments, not including the original 25 cents, will be $1 per acre.

Mr. SNELL. How much were they supposed to pay for their land originally?

Mr. DEROUEN. Two dollars and twenty-five cents, and now they are going to pay $1.25.

Mr. SNELL. And that is all there is in this bill? It reduces the sum $1 per acre?

Mr. DEROUEN. That is all.

Mr. SNELL. How many people does this affect?

Mr. DEROUEN. I do not have that information.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any idea how many acres are involved?

Mr. DEROUEN. It is a general law, and affects all desert lands.

Mr. SNELL. And this applies only to people who made entry previous to 1925?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes; prior to 1925.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman does not know how many acres this will affect?

Mr. DEROUEN. I have not that information.

Mr. SNELL. Nor how many people?

Mr. DEROUEN. No. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. SNELL. How could the gentleman find out that they needed it if he does not know how many people are involved or how many acres?

Mr. DEROUEN. I have not the information.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the administration is even now considering asking this Congress for a large appropriation to pay for submarginal agricultural land to withdraw it from cultivation?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. What is the sense of our reducing the price to the entrymen on these public lands and thus bring more submarginal land into cultivation while we are intending to tax our people to withdraw other submarginal land from cultivation?

Mr. DEROUEN. This has to do only with men already on the land? I am not opening the door for anybody else.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. It seems to me we should not make it any easier, in view of the fact that we are going to withdraw this land from cultivation, in all likelihood, and ask people to leave the land.

Mr. DEROUEN. If a man has contributed a part to accomplish the purchase of a home, it would look hard to let him lose his home. We are also buying homes to put them on.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I hope we are not buying that kind of land.

Mr. DEROUEN. I do not know. We are buying homes.

Mr. MOTT. Whose bill is that?

Mr. DEROUEN. Senator STEIWER'S.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENTS ON HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, FORT LOWELL MILITARY RESERVATION, ARIZ.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1774) to provide for extension of time for making deferred payments on homestead entries in the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, Ariz., and ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which a homestead entryman for lands in the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, in the State of Arizona, shall make deferred payments be, and it is hereby, extended for a period of 2 years from the 1933 anniversary of the date of the acceptance of his proof tendered on his entry.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the report in connection with this bill.

THE SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORT

[To accompany S. 1774]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1774) to provide for extension of time for making deferred payments on homestead entries in the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, Ariz., having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

Facts concerning the proposed legislation are set forth in the favorable letter of the Secretary of Interior under date of June 5, 1933, which appears in Senate Report 117, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR,
Washington, June 5, 1933.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands and Surveys,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR KENDRICK: I have received your request of May 27, for an opinion as to the merits of S. 1774, providing relief for homesteaders on lands within the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, Ariz.

The Fort Lowell Military Reservation was turned over to this Department for disposition under the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 103), or as may be otherwise provided by law by Executive order of February 24, 1891. The area of the reservation being in excess of 5,000 acres, the lands were subject to disposition under the act of August 23, 1894 (28 Stat. 491), which act provides that persons who enter under the homestead law shall pay for such lands at not less than the appraised value thereof. The greater part of these lands have been appraised at $1.25 per acre. The act of August 23, 1894, provides:

"That persons who enter under the homestead law shall pay for such lands not less than the value heretofore or hereafter determined by appraisement, nor less than the price of the land at the time of entry, and such payment may, at the option of the purchaser, be made in five equal installments at time and at rates of interest to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior."

In regard to such payment departmental instructions of April 9, 1895 (20 L.D. 303), provide:

"That the homesteader be given the option, in making payment upon his entry of these lands, of making his payments in five equal payments to date from the time of the acceptance of his proof tendered on his entry, and that the rate of interest upon deferred payments be charged at the rate of 4 percent per annum."

There appears to be no objection to the enactment of the bill into law.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARLSBAD CAVERNS NATIONAL PARK

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 5397) to authorize the exchange of the use of certain Government land within the Carlsbad Caverns National Park for certain privately owned land therein and ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire for and on behalf of the United States for park purposes title to the northeast quarter northwest quarter section 31, township 24 south, range 25 east, New Mexico principal meridian, within the Carlsbad Caverns National Park, and to grant to the owner thereof in exchange therefor, under such regulations as may be deemed by said Secretary necessary and in the interest of the United States, the privilege to use a shaft or tunnel located in the northwest quarter northeast quarter section 31, township 24 south, range 25 east, of the same meridian, for the purpose of mining and removing guano from the said northest quarter northwest quarter section 31, the right to said guano to be reserved to the owner in the transfer of title to said land to the United States pursuant to this act: Provided, That in addition to said privilege the Secretary of the Interior may also authorize the removal, under such terms and conditions as he deems fair, of any guano located within or on Government lands adjacent to said deposit: Provided further, That evidence of title to the land to be conveyed to the United States hereunder satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior shall be furnished without cost to the Government.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] tell us something about this measure? There was quite an extended discussion in the committee and I consider it an important matter. Many Members on this side would like a little more light on the subject.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I will be very glad to give the information to the House.

The Carlsbad National Monument is located within the State of New Mexico and contains several thousand acres of land. The entrance to the Carlsbad Caverns is quite a large area. The land around the entrance is private property, which belongs to some concern in California which has a great amount of guano deposits directly away from the caverns proper, but the entrance is private property of this concern in California. It is the purpose of this legislation that the people who own that entrance to the caverns would give this land to the Government so that the National Park Service would control the entrance at all times. The private concern will donate this land or deed it to the National Park Service or the Government, and, in turn, the Government will only give the concern which owns the property now the right to build a shaft elsewhere and take the guano deposits. In other words, the Government is getting the best of this deal in all particulars because the private concern could at any time say to the Government, "Now, this entrance is ours"; and all the beauties of the Carlsbad Caverns and the property that the Government has there now would be of no avail.

This is only to provide that the Government may own that land around that particular area, and at the same time it protects the concern which owns the guano deposits in having an area by which they can take out those deposits.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The National Park Service considers this a very necessary bill for the proper administration of the caverns?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes. The National Park Service considers this a very necessary bill, and I can see why it would be necessary—the entrance to the very property of the National Park Service is controlled by a private concern.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACCEPTING CERTAIN LAND FROM UTAH AND PATENT OTHER LAND IN LIEU THEREOF

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 7305) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States a deed of reconveyance from the State of Utah of all of section 2, township 12 south, range 19 east, Salt Lake meridian, Utah, when accompanied by evidence showing unencumbered title in said State, and in exchange therefor the Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to patent to the State of Utah other vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved public land, whether mineral or nonmineral in character, of approximately equal area and value, to be used for the same purposes for which the lands so reconveyed were granted, and to be subject to the same conditions and limitations which applied to said reconveyed lands.

SEC. 2. That upon issuance of patent to the State for the land selected in exchange, the land reconveyed shall become a part of Naval Oil Shale Reserve No. 2, Utah, No. 1, for the exclusive use or benefit of the United States Navy.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF PUBLIC LANDS AT M'MINNVILLE, OREG.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 5823, to authorize the purchase by the city of McMinnville, Oreg., of certain tracts of public lands and certain tracts revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent, upon payment of $2.50 per acre, or fraction thereof, to the city of McMinnville, Oreg., for lots 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, and southeast quarter section 33, southwest quarter northwest quarter section 34, township 2 south, range 6 west; southeast quarter southeast quarter section 2; lots 3 and 4 and southwest quarter southwest quarter section 3; northwest quarter northeast quarter section 15, township 3 south, range 6 west, east half northeast quarter section 10, and the southwest quarter northwest quarter and northwest quarter southwest quarter section 14, township 3 south, range 6 west, Willamette meridian, Yamhill County, Oreg., containing in the aggregate 981.55 acres, subject to all valid existing rights at the time of the filing of the application by the city of McMinnville: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States, its patentees, or their transferees, with respect to lots 5 and 6, section 33, township 2 south, range 6 west, and southwest quarter southwest quarter section 3, township 3 south, range 6 west, the right to cut and remove therefrom the merchantable timber, which in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior may be cut and removed without material damage to the watershed, reserving to said city of McMinnville, when such sale is made under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916, a preference right to purchase the timber at the highest price bid.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRY OF PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 7304) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals", approved July 17, 1914, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals", approved July 17, 1914 (U.S.C., title 30, secs. 121, 122, and 123), is amended by inserting after the comma following the word

"gas", wherever such word appears in such act, the following "sodium, sulphur,".

SEC. 2. Section 1 of this act shall not be construed as amending, modifying, enlarging, or restricting the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain", approved February 25, 1920, as amended or supplemented.

SEC. 3. The act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing any of the minerals subject to disposition under the general leasing law or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto", approved March 4, 1933, is hereby repealed.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Again, will the chairman of the committee make an explanation? Will he tell us exactly how far this bill goes with reference to the oil, nitrate, phosphates, and so forth, spoken of in the bill; how much it changes present law?

Mr. DEROUEN. Section 3 of this bill repeals the act approved March 4, 1933, providing for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing any of the minerals subject to disposition under the general leasing law or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

Section 2 of the bill states that the act of February 25, 1920, is not to be construed as being amended, modified, enlarged, or restricted.

In other words, what this act accomplishes is to facilitate the handling of those entries by the Secretary of the Interior. We remove a great deal of red tape and simplify the matter by adding these words to the act of July 17, 1914. This bill provides:

That the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals", approved July 17, 1914 (U.S.C., title 30, secs. 121, 122, and 123), is amended by inserting, after the comma following the word "gas", wherever such word appears in such act, the following: "sodium, sulphur."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. In other words, it gives the Interior Department more direct action and closer control over this class of entries?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes; and, furthermore, it centralizes control over these matters. That portion of the law we are repealing reads as follows:

Provided, however, That lands lying within the geologic structure of a field, or withdrawn, classified, or reported as valuable for any of the minerals named herein and/or in any of said acts, or upon which leases or prospecting permits have been applied for or granted, for the production of any of such minerals, shall not be subject to such appropriation, location, selection, entry, or purchase unless it shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior that such disposal will not unreasonably interfere with operations under said leasing acts.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does this in any way enlarge existing rights of people to enter upon lands, or does it open any new land to entry?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the chairman allow me to answer the question?

Mr. DEROUEN. Gladly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. This does not. It only enlarges the reservations to the Government of minerals. Under the act of 1914, certain minerals were reserved to the Government. Since that time they have discovered sodium and sulphur on some of the public domain, and this bill seeks only to reserve sodium and sulphur to the Government.

Mr. TABER. In addition to what was reserved heretofore?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALIFORNIA STATE PARK SYSTEM

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 5905) to amend Public Law No. 425, Seventy-second Congress, providing for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State Park System, approved March 3, 1933, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State Park System", approved March 3, 1933, is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That in order to consolidate park areas and/or to eliminate private holdings therefrom, lands patented hereunder may be exchanged with the approval of, and under rules prescribed by, the Secretary of the Interior for privately owned lands in the area hereinbefore described of approximately equal value containing the natural features sought to be preserved hereby, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to all the conditions and reservations prescribed by this act, including the reversionary clause hereinbefore set out."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, beginning with the word "with", in line 3, strike out down to and including the word "out", in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the mineral reservation in the United States as hereinbefore provided with the approval of, and under rules prescribed by, the Secretary of the Interior, for privately owned lands in the area hereinbefore described of approximately equal value containing the natural features sought to be preserved hereby, and the lands so acquired by the State shall be subject to the reversionary clause hereinbefore set out."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GRANT OF PROPERTY TO STATE OF MICHIGAN

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I call up the bill (S. 2152) granting certain property to the State of Michigan for institutional purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Michigan for institutional purposes the property known and designated as the "Mount Pleasant Indian School", located at Mount Pleasant, Mich., such grant to include the land and buildings and such equipment as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That this grant shall be effective at any time prior to July 1, 1934, if, before that date, the Governor of the State of Michigan on behalf of the State files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That right is reserved by the Secretary of the Interior to retain until July 1, 1934, dormitory and other space needed for the housing and care of Indian pupils now accommodated at said school: Provided further, That as a condition precedent to this grant Indians resident within the State of Michigan will be accepted in State institutions on entire equality with persons of other races, and without cost to the Federal Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATE OF WYOMING

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees:

Mr. GREEN (when the Committee on the Territories was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 313) to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the legislature shall prescribe, be leased for mineral, grazing, agricultural, or other purposes, provided that the term of agricultural and grazing leases shall not exceed 10 years; mineral leases including leases for exploration for oil and gas and the extraction thereof for a term not longer than 10 years and leases for the development of hydroelectric power for a term not longer than 50 years; and such land shall not be subject to preemption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only."

SEC. 2. Anything in the said act approved July 10, 1890, inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 6, after the word "years", strike out "and leases for the development of hydroelectric power for a term not longer than 50 years."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCK, 2 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. VINSON of Georgia, 5 days, on account of illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 31 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 8, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

(Thursday, Feb. 8, 10:30 a.m.)

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

342. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1934 in the sum of $17,296 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia (H.Doc. No. 241), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. DIES: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H.R. 3842. A bill to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 627). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KNUTE HILL: Committee on Indian Affairs. H.R. 5595. A bill to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of restriction in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes", approved May 10, 1928 (45 Stat.L. 496), as amended by the act of February 14, 1931 (46 Stat.L. 1108); without amendment (Rept. No. 624). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KLEBERG: Committee on Agriculture. H.R. 5632. A bill to supplement and support the Migratory Bird Conservation Act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, for the enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act and regulations thereunder, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 625). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. AYERS of Montana: Committee on Indian Affairs. H.R. 5739. A bill to facilitate a more economical administration of forest and grazing lands on Indian reservations; without amendment (Rept. No. 626). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 190. A bill for the relief of Elizabeth T. Cloud; with amendment (Rept. No. 594). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 200. A bill for the relief of Jacob Durrenberger; with amendment (Rept. No. 595). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 206. A bill for the relief of Pierre E. Teets; with amendment (Rept. No. 596). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 210. A bill for the relief of Anne B. Slocum; with amendment (Rept. No. 597). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 265. A bill for the relief of Benjamin Stern and Melville A. Stern and Benjamin Stern, as executors under the last will and testament of Louis Stern, deceased, and Arthur H. Hahlo as executor under the last will and testament of Isaac Stern, deceased, all of New York City, N.Y., for compensation and in settlement of their damages and loss sustained by virtue of a lease in writing, dated September 12, 1919, between the said parties and the United States of America, by Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; with amendment (Rept. No. 598). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 290. A bill for the relief of William A. Reithel; with amendment (Rept. No. 599). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 308. A bill for the relief of Arthur Richter; without amendment (Rept. No. 600). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 325. A bill for the relief of Douglas B. Espy; without amendment (Rept. No. 601). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 326. A bill for the relief of Con Murphy; without amendment (Rept. No. 602). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 374. A bill for the relief of Morris Dietrich; without amendment (Rept. No. 603). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 458. A bill for the relief of the Brookhill Corporation; without amendment (Rept. No. 604). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 492. A bill for the relief of Yvonne Hale; without amendment (Rept. No. 605). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 704. A bill for the relief of John N. Brooks; with amendment (Rept. No. 606). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 878. A bill for the relief of Kathryn Thurston; without amendment (Rept. No. 607). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 940. A bill for the relief of Mary E. Roney; with amendment (Rept. No. 608). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1000. A bill for the relief of Beryl Elliott; with amendment (Rept. No. 609). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1248. A bill granting insurance to Lydia C. Spry; without amendment (Rept. No. 610). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1402. A bill for the relief of James E. Dethlefsen; with amendment (Rept. No. 611). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1488. A bill for the relief of the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co., of Camden, N.J.; with amendment (Rept. No. 612). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1802. A bill for the relief of Henry Stanley Wood; with amendment (Rept. No. 613). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1870. A bill for the relief of Corinne Blackburn Gale; with amendment (Rept. No. 614). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1933. A bill for the relief of Philip F. Hambsch; without amendment (Rept. No. 615). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1935. A bill for the relief of Norman C. Brady; without amendment (Rept. No. 616). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1977. A bill for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger; without amendment (Rept. No. 617). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2036. A bill for the relief of Lottie Naylor; with amendment (Rept. No. 618). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2038. A bill for the relief of Jeanie G. Lyles; with amendment (Rept. No. 619). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2182. A bill for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc.; without amendment (Rept. No. 620). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2183. A bill for the relief of Western Electric Co., Inc.; with amendment (Rept. No. 621). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2203. A bill for the relief of Enoch Graf; without amendment (Rept. No. 622). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2338. A bill for the relief of Augusta Burkett; with amendment (Rept. No: 623). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SEARS: Committee on Naval Affairs. H.R. 5542. A bill for the relief of Joe G. McInerney; without amendment (Rept. No. 628). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SEARS: Committee on Naval Affairs. H.R. 5686. A bill for the relief of Russell H. Lindsay; without amendment (Rept. No. 629). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SUTPHIN: Committee on Naval Affairs. H.R. 5780. A bill for the relief of Lieut. H. W. Taylor, United States Navy; without amendment (Rept. No. 630). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOLAND: Committee on Naval Affairs. H.R. 6690. A bill for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy; without amendment (Rept. No. 631). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MERRITT: A bill (H.R. 7744) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer to the city of Bridgeport, Conn., a certain unusued light-station reservation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H.R. 7745) to amend administrative provisions of the Federal liquor taxing laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. THOMASON: A bill (H.R. 7746) to create a national park in the Guadalupe Mountain district in the State of Texas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BURKE of California: A bill (H.R. 7747) to provide a pension for the blind veterans of the military and naval services in the United States; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H.R. 7748) regulating procedure in criminal cases in the courts of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H.R. 7749) providing for old-age and other pensions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. McGRATH: A bill (H.R. 7750) for preliminary examination and survey of Palo Alto Harbor on San Francisco Bay, Santa Clara County, Calif.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BOYLAN: A bill (H.R. 7751) to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SANDERS: A bill (H.R. 7752) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Texas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H.R. 7753) to compensate the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for lands set aside by treaties for their future homes and later patented to the State of Minnesota under the Swamp Land Act; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A bill (H.R. 7754) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans direct to municipalities and to public-school districts for the immediate payment of teachers' deferred and present salaries; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: A bill (H.R. 7755) to designate a building site for the National Conservatory of Music of America, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CHASE: A bill (H.R. 7756) to discontinue reductions in compensation of Government personnel, to eliminate certain restrictions on promotion, employment, and retirement of such personnel, to restore veterans' benefits, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. STEAGALL: A bill (H.R. 7757) to permit State banks, not members of the Federal Reserve System, to receive the benefits of permanent Federal deposit insurance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7758) to amend section 22 of the Banking Act of 1933, relating to double liability of stockholders of national banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BOILEAU: A bill (H.R. 7759) to amend the law relating to timber operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BRUNNER: A bill (H.R. 7760) to guarantee the principal of Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds, extend the period for making loans by such Corporation from 3 to 5 years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DIMOND: A bill (H.R. 7761) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000 for municipal public works, including enlargement, extension, construction, and reconstruction of water supply system; extension, construction, and reconstruction of retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers in said town of Wrangell; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. SADOWSKI: A bill (H.R. 7762) for the relief of the aged; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DIMOND: A bill (H.R. 7763) to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000 to be used for the construction, reconstruction, replacing, and installation of a water-distribution system; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7764) to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, installation of sewer and water pipe, construction of bridges, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: A bill (H.R. 7765) to provide for a population, unemployment, and agricultural census to be taken as of November 12, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. DISNEY: A bill (H.R. 7766) to provide the necessary locks, dams, and dredging to open the Arkansas River from its mouth to Muskogee, thence to Tulsa, Okla.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska: Resolution (H.Res. 257) providing for a committee to investigate the business, operations, and affairs of all of the Federal land banks of the United States for the period beginning March 4, 1933, and a full and complete investigation of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation since its inception; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. HART: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 262) to provide for the restoration of a limitation on the importation, free of duty, of Philippine sugar; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Washington: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 263) to provide relief for damages caused by unusual floods in the State of Washington in 1933 and 1934, to aid in preventing a recurrence of similar floods, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DISNEY: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 264) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 12 to May 19, 1934, inclusive; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the War Department, regarding legislation for the Canal Zone with respect to the sale, manufacture, importation, and exportation of alcoholic beverages; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ABERNETHY: A bill (H.R. 7767) granting a pension to Ada Daniels Simpson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of California: A bill (H.R. 7768) for the relief of R. E. Blair; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania: A bill (H.R. 7769) for the relief of Everson P. Cole; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A bill (H.R. 7770) for the relief of Carrie Howard Steedman and Euginia Howard Edmunds; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H.R. 7771) for the relief of Albert Brindley; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DOCKWEILER: A bill (H.R. 7772) for the relief of Claude Luther Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7773) granting a pension to Beverly A. Foster; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FADDIS: A bill (H.R. 7774) for the relief of J. B. Orndoff; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KELLY of Illinois: A bill (H.R. 7775) for the relief of Meyer Joseph Lapine, deceased; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H.R. 7776) for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEWIS of Colorado: A bill (H.R. 7777) granting a pension to Lillie M. Settle; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7778) granting a pension to Mary J. Edwards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H.R. 7779) for the relief of Augustine A. Kane; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MEAD: A bill (H.R. 7780) for the relief of Raymond Keach; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MEEKS: A bill (H.R. 7781) for the relief of Rosemund Pauline Lowry; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN of Illinois: A bill (H.R. 7782) granting a pension to Ella F. Stewart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 7783) granting a pension to Chanley C. Freeman; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7784) granting a pension to Jackson McCoury; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma: A bill (H.R. 7785) for the relief of John M. Taylor, Dora Rucker (nee Taylor), Addie Matthews (nee Taylor), William T. Taylor, and James L. Taylor, themselves, respectively, and as the heirs of James Taylor, deceased, "Eastern Cherokees", so-called, who removed themselves to the Cherokee Nation west of the Mississippi River at their own expense, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TARVER: A bill (H.R. 7786) granting 6 months' pay to Hester Hamilton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMASON: A bill (H.R. 7787) to provide for the retirement of Maude L. Dally (Petty), disabled former Army nurse; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H.R. 7788) for the relief of the estate of William Brooks Sorsby; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TURNER: A bill (H.R. 7789) for the relief of L. T. McRee; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia: A bill (H.R. 7790) for the relief of Claudius A. Beall, Jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WEIDEMAN: A bill (H.R. 7791) for the relief of Walter Evans Bracher; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H.R. 7792) for the relief of Lloyd L. Warfield; to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2163. By Mr. BAKEWELL: Petition of residents of the State of Connecticut to the Congress of the United States, protesting against certain interference through censorship of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2164. By Mr. BOYLAN: Letter from the National Enameling & Stamping Co., of New York City, protesting against the proposed amendment to section 63–A of the bankruptcy act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2165. By Mr. CUMMINGS: Petition of the Willard Ladies' Aid, Willard, Colo., urging the passage of House bill 6097, providing for higher standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2166. Also, petition of Nazarene Church, Longmont, Colo., urging the passage of House bill 6097 providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2167. By Mr. DONDERO: Petition of the Commission of the City of Royal Oak, Mich., urging the enactment of legislation to effectively regulate and control all bondholders' committees, so called, to the end of preventing fraudulent and unethical practices and safeguarding the rights of bondholders and of municipalities and other creditors having large issues of bonds outstanding; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2168. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of Walter F. Groldsek, Kingston, N.Y., protesting against the proposed excise tax of 5 cents per pound on coconut oil and sesame oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2169. By Mr. HENNEY: Petition of the members of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Churches at North Prairie and Eagle, Wis., protesting against the diabolical schemes of self-seeking politicians to involve the United States in war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2170. By Mr. HOWARD: Petition of R. I. Jones and 34 others who reside in the central Northwest area of the United States, urging the passage of the Frazier bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2171. By Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut: Resolution requesting the President of the United States to obtain from the Government of the German Reich, and specifically from its dictator, Chancellor Adolph Hitler, an explanation of its high-handed, autocratic, dominating, and unwarranted attitude toward persons of Jewish origin and extraction, which course of action distinctly violates Germany's express treaty obligations to respect the civil and religious liberties of the minority nationalities residing within its borders; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2172. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Flatbush Chamber of Commerce, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the passage of House bill 7251 providing for the construction and use of an underground pneumatic-tube service from Holmes Airport in Jackson Heights to the general post office, New York City; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2173. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, city of New York, favoring the passage of House bill 7469, amending the Federal home loan bank law; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2174. Also, petition of the joint committee on unemployment, New York City, interested in the welfare of the unemployed and the increase in purchasing power of the agricultural, industrial, and salaried workers of America; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2175. By Mr. TREADWAY: Resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, urging the greater use of granite in Federal building projects; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2176. By Mr. WERNER: Petition of citizens of Kimball, S.Dak., urging adequate issuance of currency, restoration of silver, and suggestions for use of new currency; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

2177. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Mrs. E. G. Polster, and others, supporting the proposed pure food and drug bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2178. Also, petition of the United Mine Workers of America, Henryetta, Okla., regarding a tax on natural gas; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2179. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Flatbush Chamber of Commerce, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the passage of House bill 7251; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar days February 6 and February 7 was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	King	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Lonergan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	Long	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McAdoo	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	McKellar	Thompson
Bulkley	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Trammell
Byrd	Goldsborough	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Gore	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Overton	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Patterson	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Pittman	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	Pope	White
Copeland	Hebert	Reed
Costigan	Johnson	Reynolds

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from Rhode Isand [Mr. METCALF].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 5397. An act to authorize the exchange of the use of certain Government land within the Carlsbad Caverns National Park for certain privately owned land therein;

H.R. 5823. An act to authorize the purchase by the city of McMinnville, Oreg., of certain tracts of public lands and certain tracts revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218);

H.R. 5905. An act to amend Public Law No. 425, Seventy-second Congress, providing for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system, approved March 3, 1933;

H.R. 7304. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals", approved July 17, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 7305. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 313) to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JOHN N. KNAUFF CO., INC., v. THE UNITED STATES (S.DOC. NO. 128)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, enclosing, pursuant to order of the court, a certified copy of the special findings of fact and memorandum by Littleton, J., filed November 6, 1933, in the case of John N. Knauff Co., Inc., v. The United States (Congressional, No. 17630), which with the accompanying paper was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following house concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

House resolution relative to aid for the worthy indigent blind

Whereas the Ohio State Legislature, now meeting in special session, December 1933, wishes to be of service to the blind of the United States and therefore of Ohio; and

Whereas since the Ohio State Legislature is aware of the difficulties and problems which the sightless man and woman encounter in securing suitable employment for themselves and for their dependents; and

Whereas since the bill now before the National House of Representatives, known as H.R. 5694, and introduced by the blind Congressman, the Honorable MATTHEW A. DUNN, of Pittsburgh, which bill is, "to create a Bureau of the Blind in the Post Office Department, to provide for the issuing of licenses to blind persons to operate stands in Federal buildings, and for other purposes", and which would enable thousands of sightless persons, now dependent upon charity and other sources for a living, to earn their own way through life in fair competition with their fellowmen, and since the Federal Government has taken many steps to relieve the great unemployment problem of the country, by the passage of legislation for public works projects and for other purposes, and since all the legislation thus far passed will be of no benefit to the sightless of the United States but rather detrimental in that the cost of living will be increased, and has already been increased because of the Government's plan to raise commodity prices, and since the Dunn bill is in line with the administration's policy to put back to work unemployed persons now idle, due to conditions over which they have no control, and since the recent policy of the administration under its Civil Works Administration will not affect the blind or help them in any way, and since State and county funds are becoming depleted due to the grave situation in which State, county, and municipal governments find themselves, and since, due to such conditions, the sightless are receiving less financial assistance than they need, especially in such times when their needs are greater: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Ohio State Legislature go on record endorsing the Dunn bill and at the same time memorialize Congress with the view that it regards the problems confronting the blind in a sympathetic manner, and take action on the Dunn bill as soon as it is ready to be acted upon when in its final form: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; Postmaster General James A. Farley; Congressman Henry T. Rainey, Speaker of the House of Representatives; Vice President John Garner, President of the Senate; Congressman Joseph W. Byrns, majority leader of the House of Representatives; and Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Senate majority leader, with the urgent request that they use their good offices to bring about the early passage of the Dunn bill soon after Congress convenes in January 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of radiogram dated at Manila, P.I., January 31, 1934, from Mr. Felino Cajucom, president of the Sakdalista Party, relative to Philippine independence and autonomous concessions, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Walter A. Cook, master of St. Lawrence County Pomona Grange, Potsdam, N.Y., praying, on behalf of the grange, for the prompt ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

FARM CREDITS

Mr. LOGAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Kentucky dealing with farm credits.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress that it is the sense of the members of the Kentucky Legislative General Assembly, the senate and house concurring, that the Government of the United States should perform its solemn promise and place American agriculture on the basis of equality with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit, and that adequate legislation to that end should be adopted at the earliest possible date

Whereas, unless immediate relief is given, hundreds of thousands of farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions; and

Whereas the price of agricultural products during recent years has in fact been far below the cost of production; and

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors throughout this State and Nation; and

Whereas Senate bill no. 457, introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, of North Dakota, provides for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness and provides for a reduced rate of interest for the same through the Federal Farm Loan System and Federal Reserve Bank System; and

Whereas the provisions of this bill will have a vital effect upon the agricultural industry of the State of Kentucky; and

Whereas at the present time many loans relating to the agricultural industry should bear a reduced rate of interest; and

Whereas agriculture is the basic industry of this country and there can be no sound business prosperity until agriculture is put on an equality with other industries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of your memorialists, the members of the Kentucky Legislative General Assembly, the senate and house concurring, that the Congress of the United States should enact the provisions of the said Senate bill no. 457; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the clerk of the Kentucky Senate to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Kentucky in Congress and to United States Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, the Senator who introduced the bill.

In senate February 5, 1934.
Passed.
Attest:
[SEAL]

BYRON H. ROYSTER,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY—MEMORIAL

Mr. LOGAN. I also desire to have printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table a resolution adopted by the Senate of Kentucky protesting against the ratification of the St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty. I placed a resolution in the RECORD the other day which asked for the ratification of the treaty, and I desire this one in opposition to the treaty also to be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table, and, under the rule, to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Resolution "C", opposing ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterways Treaty

Whereas this body some days ago, without due consideration and careful deliberation, passed a resolution memorializing the United States Senate to ratify the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterways Treaty now pending before the United States Senate; and

Whereas after due consideration and careful deliberation it is hereby resolved that the United States Senators from Kentucky be respectfully requested to oppose ratification of the said treaty, which will entail an expenditure of several billions of dollars; and

Whereas the opening of this waterway would permit British, German, French, and Russian coals to be delivered by vessel to Canadian and American ports on the Great Lakes amounting to millions of tons annually, carried as ballast, returning with Canadian grain and food supplies; and

Whereas it is reasonably certain that fifteen to twenty-five millions of tons of coal per year for many years sent to Canada from the coal-mining districts of southern coal fields would be displaced by the importation of foreign coal, resulting in a serious displacement of labor in the mines and thousands of men employed on the railroads, and in resultant unemployment of men employed on the farms and in industries which provide materials and supplies to the coal and railroad industries; and

Whereas the development of this waterway in addition to being destructive to the coal industry of this State, resulting in substantial losses in taxation needed for the support of public schools, the State government and public institutions, would also be destructive to railroads traversing the mining and farming districts of the country, whose securities are owned by thousands of our citizens and insurance companies in which many of our citizens have their life savings; and

Whereas millions of dollars are now being expended to improve our economic stabilization which must be paid from future taxation, to expend other billions of dollars to destroy properties upon which we are dependent and to cast thousands of persons on the unemployment rolls is in a measure economic suicide; and

Whereas Lake Michigan, which lies wholly within the boundaries of the United States, has always been regarded as American waters, is now sought by this treaty to be made an international lake and joint control thereof turned over to Canada in opposition to the interests of the American people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Kentucky, That we respectfully request the Honorable ALBEN W. BARKLEY and the Honorable M. M. LOGAN, representing the State of Kentucky in the Senate of the United States, to oppose ratification of the pending treaty in an honorable effort to aid the best interests of the people of this State.

Resolved further, That the clerk of the senate be directed to forward to the Honorable ALBEN W. BARKLEY and the Honorable M. M. LOGAN duly attested copies of this resolution.

Passed in senate February 5, 1934.
Attest:

BYRON H. ROYSTER,
Chief Clerk of Senate.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF FIREARMS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter from Donald S. Hopkins concerning Senate bill no. 885, in regard to the purchase and sale of firearms. Mr. Hopkins asserts that bills of this type have been tried in various States and have been ineffective as far as crime prevention is concerned and dangerous from the standpoint of the rights of honest citizens.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOCK HAVEN, PA., February 7, 1934.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
3012 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. DAVIS: I notice that there has recently been introduced into the Senate bill No. 885, in regard to the purchase and sale of firearms.

Bills of this type have been tried in various States and have been found sadly wanting in effectiveness. About all the effect they seem to have had is to make it more difficult for the honest man to secure a rifle or revolver and to add to his expense of owning one. I cannot notice any cessation in crime in New York State or in Pennsylvania from the passage of laws like the Sullivan law. This law will not prevent the criminal from getting arms and will merely tend to disarm the honest citizen, who should be encouraged to arm himself and defend himself in the face of inadequate protection. I think it well to try to prohibit the sale of machine guns and sawed-off shotguns, but such laws as have been introduced in the Senate will merely tend to hurt the sportsman without preventing the criminal from securing weapons.

I notice that one of the laws calls for the marking of every bullet. This law is simply ridiculous, because anybody can pull a bullet from a rifle case with a pair of plyers, file off the initial or letter on the bullet, and reseat the bullet in just a moment or so, and this law would not be of any avail except to add to the cost of manufacture of bullets.

As to keeping a sample bullet for each gun, everybody knows that if the bore of a rifle gets pitted after use it changes the markings on the bullet entirely, and a trifle of rust or wear in a barrel will change the markings on the bullet. Therefore the provision in the law to keep sample bullets from the various guns sold would not be of any value at all.

These laws would make it impossible for more than half a million sportsmen in Pennsylvania to ship their guns out of the State for repairs, or to sell them to anybody outside of the State, or to have their guns shipped to repairmen. It would also be impossible for any dealers to carry a stock of pistols or revolvers from which sportsmen might make selections.

To say that these laws will not inconvenience sportsmen is simply ridiculous, and they will affect a great proportion of our population who use guns intelligently and honestly, and who support a great industry in this country. I hope you can see your way clear to vote against such ridiculous, useless, and even dangerous bills as these are. What they will tend to do will be to disarm the honest citizen without in any way preventing the criminal from securing weapons.

One of my good friends was almost killed by a hold-up man a year or so ago. The hold-up man struck him with a lead pipe. Wouldn't it be good policy to have all lead pipe marked with initials so that they would make the imprint of the initial on the skull and the man owning such lead pipe could thereby be identified! It seems to me such a law would have about as much sense as some of the gun laws now being proposed.

Thank you very much for your consideration of this matter.

Yours very truly,

DONALD S. HOPKINS.

THE MATCH INDUSTRY

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a letter addressed to me by J. H. Weaver, of the Columbia Match Co. This letter shows that the N.R.A. match code has increased employment 20 percent and wages 28 percent to 43 percent. However, this increase in employment is being nullified because of foreign importations. The Government is losing a large revenue because foreigners are evading part of the import duty of 20 cents per gross. Thirty-percent protection results in a 70-percent loss, not alone to our workers but to the Government through evasion of tariff duties.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 8, 1934.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The following facts regarding the match industry of the United States are respectfully submitted for your consideration:

1. Foreign matches imported in 1933 total more than 13 trainloads of 50 cars each (667 cars), or 13.9 cars for each State. This is fully 50 percent of the smokers' size strike-on-box matches consumed in the United States.

2. Foreign matches being sold, delivered, at an average price of 42 cents a gross, when American matches made under the N.R.A. match code cost approximately 70 cents per gross.

3. Consumers pay same price for foreign matches, closing our factories and allowing foreign factories to operate.

4. American factories now existing can produce, conservatively, three times the quantity used.

5. America is a natural match-producing country, as we have an abundance of all the needed raw materials.

6. We produce a quality far superior to foreign matches, for which the consumer pays the old pre-war price, 1 cent for smoker's size and 5 cents for household size, with our manufacturers assuming a high excise tax.

7. Under the N.R.A. match code, our manufacturers increased employment 20 percent and increased wages from 28 percent to 43 percent.

8. This increase in employment is being nullified because of foreign importations. Factories have laid off employees, and future outlook not bright.

9. The Government is losing a large revenue by foreigners evading part of the import duty of 20 cents a gross, by the mere coloring of splints with a cheap analine dye and entering them as fancy matches as low as 6 cents per gross, only 30 percent of protection intended by Congress.

10. American match manufacturers pay approximately 24 percent of their net return from sales in excise tax.

11. American match industry has but one market for its products, being barred from most foreign countries by Government monopolies.

12. American match industry has suffered for many years with foreign match imports, causing the closing of more than 10 factories in the last 10 years.

The American match industry on February 1 and 2 appeared before United States Tariff Commission to protest against foreign importations of matches under provisions of section 3, National Industrial Recovery Act. Our plea is now before commission, that all imported matches be restricted, subject to an equalization fee, or sold at a fair American price.

I earnestly request your support in righting the injury to the American match industry by your asking the President to act under provisions of N.I.R.A. and grant the relief the American match industry is seeking.

The President has full authority under the above section of N.I.R.A. to grant this form of relief to an industry that has lost 50 percent of its home and only market strike-on-box and penny-size matches.

Yours very truly,

COLUMBIA MATCH CO.,
J. H. WEAVER, President.

P. S.—Foreign match imports are not the only menace to our industry as lighters are not subject to any excise tax and the Government is losing revenue through failure to place a tax on lighters commensurate with match tax.

Last week the Secretary of the Treasury saw fit to remove the dumping order against Russia without giving the match industry any hearing, and we now believe the Russians are bringing matches here in large quantities, which will still further hurt our industry.

RESOLUTIONS OF OHIO UNEMPLOYED LEAGUE

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD and to lie on the table resolutions adopted by the Ohio Unemployed League Special State Conference on the C.W.A.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following resolutions were adopted as a basis for militant organized action of the unemployed in Ohio at the special State-wide conference of the Ohio Unemployed League held January 21, 1934, in Columbus. This conference was called by William R. Truax, president of the Ohio Unemployed League, to formulate plans to cope with the imminent collapse of the Civil Works program.

The resolutions read as follows:

"Whereas 46,000 of the 246,000 men employed on C.W.A. jobs in Ohio have been fired; and

"Whereas a general wage cut has been instituted of 20 to 50 percent through reductions in working hours ranging from 6 to 15 hours per week; and

"Whereas Harry L. Hopkins, Federal C.W.A. Administrator, has called for the demobilization of the C.W.A. by May 1 at the rate of 1,000,000 men every 2 weeks: Be it

"Resolved, That the following demands be adopted by the Ohio Unemployed League, in special conference assembled, as a basis for organized action of the unemployed throughout Ohio:

"1. That all C.W.A. work be resumed immediately, and that jobs be provided for all unemployed workers.

"2. That a 30-hour week and 6-hour day be maintained, and that the first 5 days of the calendar week shall constitute the working week, and that Saturday shall be a holiday.

"3. That all carry-over time or make-up work shall be performed within the stipulated 5 days, provided that no workday, including carry-over time, shall exceed 8 hours.

"4. That uniform rates of hours and wages be maintained throughout the State.

"5. That all work be paid for at a minimum uniform rate of $1 per hour, $30 per week; that this rate shall be increased in direct proportion to increases in average prices; and that all work covered by union wage scales above the minimum rate shall be paid for at the prevailing union rate.

"6. That straight pay of $30 per week shall be the minimum wage on C.W.A. and P.W.A. projects regardless of time lost due to bad weather.

"7. That wages be paid regularly on Friday of each week, and that the distribution of pay checks be done during the working hours.

"8. That all tools, equipment, and necessary protective clothing be provided through a C.W.A. appropriation.

"9. That free and adequate transportation be provided to and from the place of work for all C.W.A. and P.W.A. workers.

"10. That heated shacks, windbreaks, and salamanders for fires be provided on all open C.W.A. and P.W.A. jobs for protection from bad weather.

"11. That there shall be no infringement on the right of workers on C.W.A. and P.W.A. jobs to organize on the job into organizations of their own choosing for collective bargaining; be it further

"Resolved, That these demands be presented in person by the executive board of the Ohio Unemployed League immediately to Gov. George White and the State Civil Works administration, and to President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Federal Civil Works Administration.

Submitted by the committee on C.W.A. resolutions.

Geo. W. Snyder, Perry County, chairman; Bernard C. Michael, Allen County; Pearl Bolen, Meigs County; Ralph Hernandez, Fairfield County; W. B. Brown, Licking County; Herb Richards, Hocking County; Ross E. Cox, Franklin County; R. J. McCormick, Wood County; J. Darlington, Mahoning County.

Adopted at Columbus, Ohio, January 21, 1934, by the Ohio Unemployed League special State conference on C.W.A.

READMISSION OF EMMA GOLDMAN

Mr. ASHURST presented a resolution, adopted by the Arizona Peace Officers' Association, protesting against the readmission of Emma Goldman to the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That the Arizona Peace Officers' Association, an organization of some 500 members, does hereby protest the recent decision of the Department of Labor to permit the notorious anarchist, Emma Goldman (Mrs. James Colton), to reenter our country, as it is our belief that such action is a violation of the spirit if not the letter of the United States immigration laws.

We feel that as such it is calculated to establish a dangerous precedent for future guidance and will serve to lessen the fear of and minimize the effectiveness of our deportation laws.

It is obvious that our deportation laws, so far as they apply to alien radicals, are of a deterrent rather than a punitive force; and we feel that if a precedent is established whereby persons of widely known anarchistic views are permitted to reenter our country after deportation for cause, as was clearly the case with Miss Goldman, that the spirit and the purpose of our immigration laws is thereby set at naught.

Therefore the members of the Arizona Peace Officers' Association do thereby protest the readmission of Miss Goldman to this country, and do place themselves on record as upholding the stringent enforcement of our immigration laws in the spirit as well as in letter.

J. G. CROWLEY,
President.
J. E. WILKIE,
Secretary-Treasurer.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 6370. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr. (Rept. No. 270);

H.R. 6492. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y. (Rept. No. 271);

H.R. 6794. An act authorizing the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N.J. (Rept. No. 272);

H.R. 6909. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo. (Rept. No. 274); and

H.R. 7291. An act authorizing the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Hannibal, Marion County, Mo. (Rept. No. 273).

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1994) for the relief of Estelle Johnson, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 275) thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 405. An act for the relief of Capt. Asa G. Ayer (Rept. No. 276);

S. 489. An act for the relief of the J. M. Dooley Fireproof Warehouse Corporation, of Brooklyn, N.Y. (Rept. No. 277); and

S. 1731. An act for the relief of Marion Von Bruning (nee Marion Hubbard Treat) and others (Rept. No. 278).

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2509) to readjust the boundaries of Whitehaven Parkway at Huidekoper Place, in the District of Columbia, provide for an exchange of land, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 279) thereon.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS ON FOODS, ETC., BEFORE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Printing I report back with an amendment Senate Resolution 171, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 6, after the words "during the", to strike out "second session of the Seventy-third Congress, on food, drugs, and cosmetics" and insert "current session on the bill (S. 1944) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drugs, and cosmetics."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Commerce of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the bill (S. 1944) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drugs, and cosmetics.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bill were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 2678) for the relief of S. E. Marty; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2679) to establish the Ocmulgee National Park in Bibb County, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 2680) exempting David Sinclair from the provisions of sections 203 and 205 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2681) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make available to the municipality of Aberdeen, Wash., the U.S.S. Newport; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2682) to exempt certain articles from the tax on floor stocks imposed by the Agricultural Adjustment Act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 2683) for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2684) to regulate foreclosure of mortgages and deeds of trust in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 2685) to provide for the conservation and settlement of estates of absentees and absconders in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2687) for the relief of Alfred W. Kliefoth; and

A bill (S. 2688) to validate payments for medical and hospital treatment of members of Reserve Officers' Training Corps and Citizens' Military Training Camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PENALTY FOR PRESENTATION OF FALSE WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I introduce a bill and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and request to have printed at this juncture, following the bill, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior describing the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2686) to provide a penalty for the presentation of a false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who knowingly or willfully makes or aids, or assists in the making, or in any wise procures the making or presentation of any false or fraudulent affidavit, declaration, certificate, voucher, or paper or writing purporting to be such, concerning any application, bond, bid, loan or payment thereof, or pertaining to any other matter within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry, or who knowingly or willfully makes or causes to be made, or aids or assists in the making, or presents or causes to be presented, any false or fraudulent affidavit, certificate, voucher, or paper or writing purporting to be such, and every person before whom any declaration, affidavit, voucher, or other paper or writing to be used in aid of the prosecution of any application, bond, bid, loan, or payment thereof purports to have been executed who shall knowingly certify that the declarant, affiant, or witness named in such declaration, affidavit, voucher, or other paper or writing personally appeared before him and was sworn thereto, or acknowledged the execution thereof, when, in fact, such declarant, affiant, or witness did not personally appear before him or was not sworn thereto, or did not acknowledge the execution thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than 5 years.

The letter from the Secretary of the Interior presented by Mr. ASHURST is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 7, 1934.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill providing a penalty for the presentation of a false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry.

A large number of cases are arising constantly in the enforcement of the laws relating to the Interior Department; the transaction of business in connection with the Public Works Administration; in violations of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry; and enforcement of regulations under section 9 (c) of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933, which are not susceptible of successful prosecution on charges of perjury, and there is no law at present under which prosecutions may be secured for the presentation of false papers.

The early enactment of this legislation is especially desired, so that prompt and vigorous steps may be taken while expenditures are being made of Public Works Administration funds, in view of the following provisions of section 2 (c) of the National Industrial Recovery Act:

"This title shall cease to be in effect and any agencies established hereunder shall cease to exist at the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, or sooner if the President shall by proclamation or the Congress shall by joint resolution declare that the emergency recognized by section 1 has ended."

It is respectfully requested that the proposed measure be placed before the Senate for appropriate action.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

SPECIAL STATISTICAL STUDIES BY DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for reference to the appropriate committee, and ask to have published in connection with the bill a letter from the Secretary of Labor explanatory of it.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2689) to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and, with the accompanying letter, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Department of Labor be, and hereby is, authorized, within the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, upon the written request of any person, to make special statistical studies within the general scope of the Department's activities; to prepare from its records special statistical compilations; and to furnish transcripts of its studies, tables, and other records upon the payment of the actual cost of such work by the person requesting it.

SEC. 2. All moneys hereinafter received by the Department of Labor in payment of the cost of such work shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation of that bureau, service, office, division, or other agency of the Department of Labor which supervised such work, and may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, for the ordinary expenses of such agency and/or to secure the special services of persons who are neither officers or employees of the United States.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor shall prescribe rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act.

The letter from the Secretary of Labor presented by Mr. WALSH is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 8, 1934.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I am writing to urge you to introduce the attached draft of a bill to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes.

There is a great need for the passage of this bill. From time to time persons request the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies within the general scope of the Department's activities and in relation to labor matters and offer to pay the full cost of this work. This has been particularly true since the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Various code authorities, including, for example, the planning and coordination committee of the petroleum industry, have asked the Department to collect data relating to hours of work, wages, and similar working conditions. These statistics would have been of great value not only to the person or authority requesting the survey but also to the Department of Labor and to the Government generally since they would have served not only to show the existing state of facts but to help formulate policies for future action. Moreover, if the Department of Labor had made the studies which it was asked to undertake, a closer cooperation between business and Government would have resulted, and, if the work had been satisfactorily performed, there is no doubt that business would have had an increased confidence in the accuracy, efficiency, and thoroughness of this Department.

Unfortunately at the present time the Department of Labor cannot undertake this work even though the person requesting the statistical or other information is willing to pay the full costs of the enterprise. The reason is that the act of March 3, 1918, (39 Stat. 1106, 5 U.S.C. 66), provides that no Government official or employee shall receive any salary in connection with his services as such an official or employee from any source other than the Government of the United States. This statute as interpreted by the courts and administrative officers makes it impossible for the Department of Labor to accept from outsiders the cost of special services even though rendered for their exclusive benefit. See International Railway Co. v. Davidson (257 U.S. 506, 515 (1922); 31 Op. Atty. Gen. 1919; 16 Comp. Dec. 43).

To overcome this bar, other departments have from time to time asked Congress for permission to enter into arrangements to perform compensated services for private persons. Thus, for example, section 18 of the act of June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 25, 26; 13 U.S.C. 218), authorizes the Bureau of the Census to make statistical compilations at cost for private individuals; and the appropriation act for the Department of Agriculture for 1920 (act of July 24, 1919, 41 Stat. 270; 5 U.S.C. 513), and section 14 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act (act of June 10, 1930, 46 Stat. 537; 7 U.S.C. 564), authorize the Department of Agriculture to enter into cooperative arrangements with States and private agencies as a result of which these non-Federal agencies contribute in part to expenses incurred by the Federal Government.

I can see no valid objection to the proposed bill and I think its merits are so outstanding that it deserves immediate passage by the Congress. The importance of prompt action is increased by the universal desire to know the full effects of the recovery program undertaken by the present administration.

Very truly yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

H.R. 5397. An act to authorize the exchange of the use of certain Government land within the Carlsbad Caverns National Park for certain privately owned land therein;

H.R. 5823. An act to authorize the purchase by the city of McMinnville, Oreg., of certain tracts of public lands and certain tracts revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218);

H.R. 5905. An act to amend Public Law No. 425, Seventy-second Congress, providing for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system, approved March 3, 1933;

H.R. 7304. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals", approved July 17, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 7305. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain

State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on the 6th of February I introduced Senate bill 2644, for the relief of Mary Seeley Watson. Through inadvertence the bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH and Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to House bill 7199, the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 38, line 4, to strike out "$176,040" and insert in lieu thereof "$238,410."

On page 38, line 9, to strike out "June 30, 1933" and insert in lieu thereof "June 27, 1933, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to reinstate the civilian instructors released subsequent to such date, and so much of the above amount as may be necessary for the payment of the instructors so reinstated shall be immediately available."

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6951, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 45, after line 10, to insert a new paragraph reading as follows:

"For the fiscal year 1935 all expenditures by the Indian Service shall be segregated by functions of the Service and jurisdictions, such expenditures to be classified thereunder in accordance with approved character and object designation; and the estimates for the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the fiscal year 1936 and thereafter shall be prepared and submitted to the Bureau of the Budget and to Congress accordingly: Provided, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, in addition to the budget provided for by this paragraph, there shall also be prepared and submitted an alternate budget for the Bureau of Indian Affairs which shall follow the order and arrangement of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935."

INVESTIGATION INTO ACTIVITIES OF DEALERS IN ARMS AND MUNITIONS

Mr. NYE. I submit a resolution which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 179) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the activities of individuals and of corporations in the United States engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, import, or export of arms, munitions, or other implements of war, and particularly to investigate and ascertain:

(1) The nature of the industrial and commercial organizations engaged in the manufacture of or traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war.

(2) The methods used in promoting or effecting the sale of arms, munitions, or other implements of war.

(3) The quantities of arms, munitions, or other implements of war imported into the United States and the countries of origin thereof, and the quantities exported from the United States and the countries of destination thereof.

(4) The adequacy or inadequacy of existing legislation, and of the treaties to which the United States is a party, for the regulation and control of the manufacture of and traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war within the United States, and of the traffic therein between the United States and other countries.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO APPOINTMENT OF MR. ERICKSON AS SENATOR FROM MONTANA

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following original resolution (S.Res. 180), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to examine into the circumstances surrounding the appointment by the Governor of the State of Montana, on March 13, 1933, of the Honorable JOHN E. ERICKSON as a Senator from such State. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $2,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

REPORTS OF PUBLIC-UTILITY COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT

On motion of Mr. KING, it was Ordered, That the annual reports of the following-named public-utility companies in the District of Columbia, for the year ended December 31, 1933, heretofore transmitted to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document: Capital Traction Co.; Capital Transit Co.; Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co.; Georgetown Gaslight Co.; Potomac Electric Power Co.; Washington Gas Light Co.; Washington Interurban Railroad Co.; and Washington Railway & Electric Co.

LAND GRANTS IN WYOMING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 313) to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming, which was, on page 2, line 5, to strike out all after "years" down to and including "years" in line 7.

Mr. CAREY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MENACE OF KIDNAPING

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the menace of kidnaping and the holding of kidnaped persons for ransom is a ghastly thing that is now and for some months past has been suspended like the sword of Damocles over the homes and the lives of the American people.

It is impossible to describe the terror, the anguish, and the torturing suspense of the relatives and close friends of kidnaped persons who are held for ransom. It is quite understandable that such distressed relatives, in their mental anguish, will yield to the threats and demands of the kidnapers who have seized, secluded, and secreted a person.

I am of the opinion that if the demands of the kidnapers were refused, the kidnapers treated with contempt, their communications entirely ignored, the outlaws notified that no terms would be made with them, and they were given to understand that no ransom would be paid under any circumstances, the kidnaping of persons for ransom would measurably cease in the United States.

In those countries which have laws making it a crime to pay a ransom the crime of kidnaping persons is practically unknown.

During the past few weeks I have caused an examination to be made; and from my brief investigation it would appear that a law making it a crime to pay a ransom to persons who have seized and secluded an individual would reduce kidnaping almost to the vanishing point in our country. At an appropriate time I expect to prepare and introduce such bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 248. An act for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett;

S. 381. An act for the relief of Samson Davis; and

S. 727. An act for the relief of Francis N. Dominick.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 157. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)";

S. 284. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to School District No. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg.;

S. 1774. An act to provide for extension of time for making deferred payments on homestead entries in the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 2152. An act granting certain property to the State of Michigan for institutional purposes.

GOLD CLAUSE IN BONDS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the decision of the highest court in Great Britain in what is known as the "Belgian bond case". It is very complete and parallels some of our resent transactions.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. Is the material sent to the desk the decision of the House of Lords?

Mr. GLASS. It is. Has it been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. STEIWER. I thought that it had been so printed, but I have no objection to the Senator's request.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, if it has been printed in the RECORD, I would not care to have it duplicated. I did not know that it had been printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to printing the decision in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the decision was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the London Times, Saturday, Dec. 16, 1933]

HOUSE OF LORDS—BONDS OF A BELGIAN COMPANY; CONSTRUCTION AND PAYMENT—FEIST AGAINST SOCIÉTÉ INTERCOMMUNALE BELGE D'ELECTRICITÉ

Before Lord Atkin, Lord Warrington of Clyffe, Lord Tomlin, Lord Russell of Killowen, and Lord Wright.

The house allowed this appeal by Mr. Josiah Feist from a judgment of the court of appeal, dated March 17, 1933, dismissing an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Farwell, dated October 27, 1932, on an originating summons issued by Mr. Feist to obtain the decision of the court on the construction of a bond held by him and issued by the present respondents, Société Intercommunale Belge d'Electricité.

The bond was a bearer bond for £100, dated September 1, 1928, and formed part of a total issue of £500,000 bonds issued by the respondents, a limited company incorporated under the laws of the Kingdom of Belgium. On its face the bond was described as a 35-year sinking-fund 5½-percent sterling bond, due September 1, 1963.

RELEVANT CLAUSES

The following clauses, inter alia, appeared on the face of the bond:

"1. Société Intercommunale Belge d'Electricité (Société Anonyme) * * * for value received will, on the 1st day of September 1963, or, on such earlier day as the principal moneys hereby secured become payable in accordance with the conditions endorsed hereon, pay to the bearer * * * on presentation of this bond the sum of £100 in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on the 1st day of September 1928.

"2. The company will during the continuance of this security pay at the registered office of the bankers * * * interest thereon at rate of 5½ percent per annum in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on the 1st day of September 1928, by equal half-yearly payments on every 1st day of March and 1st day of September in accordance with the coupons annexed hereto.

"4. This bond is one of an authorized issue of bonds of the company of an aggregate principal amount not exceeding £500,000 in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom at any one time outstanding.

"5. This bond is issued subject to and with the benefit of the conditions endorsed hereon, which are to be deemed part of it."

Condition 6 provided that the bonds of the issue should constitute and they and each of them were thereby declared to be the direct and unconditional liability and obligations of the respondents in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom in accordance with the provisions of the bonds and the conditions.

Condition 18 provided:

"This bond shall be construed and the rights of parties regulated according to the law of England and as a contract made and according to the terms thereof to be performed in England * * *."

The half-yearly interest coupons annexed to the bond stated on one side, inter alia: "Coupon for £2 15s. being half-year's interest due on ———" and on the other side bore the words: "For £2 15s. in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on the 1st day of September 1928 * * *."

On March 1, 1932, a half-yearly installment of interest on the appellant's bond fell due. The respondents claimed the right to pay the nominal sum specified in the coupon, that was, £2 15s., and to pay it in whatever might be legal tender in England at the day of payment as a full discharge of their obligation under the bond.

The appellant thereupon, by originating summons, claimed (1) a declaration that on the true construction of the bond the respondents thereby warranted or guaranteed to the appellant as holder that they would discharge their obligations thereunder by tendering him in payment of the principal and interest due on the bond at the times specified therein gold coin of the United Kingdom to the appropriate amount of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on September 1, 1928.

He also claimed that in the event of any breach of such warranty or guarantee the respondents should be made liable in damages.

Alternatively, he asked for a declaration that the respondents were bound to tender to him such a sum in sterling as might be sufficient to purchase in the market on the day of payment gold of not less weight and fineness than that contained in the gold coin of the United Kingdom, which would have sufficed to discharge such payment if falling due on September 1, 1928.

Mr. Justice Farwell held that on the true construction of the bond the respondents were entitled to satisfy the principal moneys and interest by tendering whatever might at the due date of payment respectively be good legal tender for the nominal amount of the bond or coupon.

The court of appeal, affirming the decision of Mr. Justice Farwell, were of opinion that the bond was a contract for the payment of the nominal amount of money by way of principal and interest, and that it was impossible to construe it as a contract for the payment of any other sums of money ascertained by their gold value from time to time.

Mr. Feist now appealed.

The previous hearings were reported in the Times of October 28, 1932, and March 18, 1933, and in 49 the Times L.R., 8, 344.

Sir William Jowitt, K.C., Mr. Lionel Cohen, K.C., and Mr. Cyril Radcliffe appeared for the appellant; Mr. Gavin Simonds, K.C., and Mr. H. S. G. Buckmaster for the respondents.

JUDGMENT

Lord Russell of Killowen, in giving judgment, said that the difficulty in the case arose from the presence in the bond of what was sometimes known as a "gold clause", and from the particular phraseology which it had assumed.

The company claimed that they were entitled to satisfy the principal moneys and interest secured by the bond by tendering whatever might at the due date of payment be good legal tender for the nominal amount of the bond or coupon, as the case might be. "It is obvious", said his lordship, "that this decision deprives of all effect the words which occur in clauses 1 and 2 of the bond—namely, 'in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on September 1, 1928.' Those words need, in that view, never have been inserted at all."

The bondholder, on the other hand, contended that they were inserted for a specific purpose—namely, to protect the lender against any depreciation of sterling in terms of gold—and that the gold clause, with its reference to gold coin of a defined standard of weight and fineness, was a clause which dealt, not with the method in which a debt of fixed unvarying amount was to be discharged but with the fixing of the amount of the debt to be discharged.

He (his lordship) agreed that the question of construction was a difficult one; but after careful consideration of all the contractual provisions of the bond he had come to the conclusion that they should give to the gold clause the meaning and effect for which the bondholder primarily contended.

The courts below, in construing the bond, had started with the assumption that the bond must be, as was stated on its face, a bond for £100; they then construed the words of the gold clause literally, and held that its sole intention was to obtain payment in one particular form of tender only, and that that intention must be defeated by the operation of the law.

QUESTION OF CONSTRUCTION

He approached the question of construction in a different way. He considered, first, the state of affairs existing at the date of the bond. The gold standard act, 1925, had exempted the Bank of England from obligation to pay its own notes in legal coin but had provided that such notes should not thereby cease to be legal tender. Further, it had repealed the provision of the currency and bank notes act, 1914, entitling the holder of a currency note to be paid its face value in gold coin. It had, however, provided that the Bank of England should be bound to sell on demand gold bullion at the price and, as therein specified, to any person on demand, but only in the form of bars containing approximately 400 ounces troy of fine gold.

The currency and bank notes act, 1928, had received the royal assent, though it did not come into operation until November 22, 1928. By that act the Bank of England was authorized to issue bank notes for £1 and for 10s., which were to be legal tender for any amount. Existing currency notes were converted into bank notes, the bank becoming liable on them; and the bank was empowered to require any person in the United Kingdom owning gold coin or bullion to an amount exceeding £10,000 in value to sell it to the bank on payment (in the case of gold coin) of the nominal value thereof. The country was on the gold standard, but the notes were inconvertible and gold coin was substantially no longer in circulation.

Those being the circumstances and conditions of the time it was not, he thought, improper or hazardous to make two surmises: (1) That the gold clause was inserted in clauses 1 and 2 of the bond in contemplation of the contingency of this country going (as it did in 1931) off the gold standard at some future date; and (2) that neither party to the bond could have contemplated payment under the bond being actually made in gold coins.

He then turned to the bond to see if from the contents of the document itself it was apparent that the parties did not use the words of the gold clause in accordance with the literal meaning which they would bear if considered apart from the rest of the document and the circumstances which surrounded its execution. His lordship referred to clauses 2 and 4, and said that, taking even clause 1 by itself, it would be practically impossible to fulfill its literal requirements even if a sufficiency of gold coin were still in circulation, for according to its strict reading the coins tendered would all have to be coins of the exact standard of weight and exact standard of fineness specified in the coinage act, 1870, without remedy, allowance, or variation from the standards. Thus, neither in clause 1 nor in clause 2 could the words have been intended by the parties to carry their literal interpretation.

TWO COURSES

He, therefore, asked himself the question: If the words of the gold clause could not have been used by the parties in the sense which they literally bore, ought he to ignore them altogether and attribute no meaning to them, or ought he, if he could discover it from the document, attribute some other meaning to them? Clearly the latter course should be adopted if possible, for the parties must have inserted those special words for some special purpose, and, if that purpose could be discerned by legitimate means, effect should be given to it.

In his opinion the purpose could be discerned from clause 4, in which the reference to gold coin of the United Kingdom was clearly not a reference to the mode of payment but to the measure of the company's obligation. So, too, condition 6, which again was a clause not directed to mode of payment but to describing and measuring liability, showed that the words were used as such a measure. In just the same way he thought that in clauses 1 and 2 of the bond the parties were referring to gold coin of the United Kingdom of a specific standard of weight and fineness not as being the mode in which the company's indebtedness was to be discharged, but as being the means by which the amount of that indebtedness was to be measured and ascertained. He would construe clause 1 not as meaning that £100 was to be paid in a certain way, but as meaning that the obligation was to pay a sum which would represent the equivalent of £100 if paid in a particular way; in other words, he would construe the clause as though it ran thus (omitting immaterial words), "pay * * * in sterling a sum equal to the value of £100 if paid in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on the 1st day of September 1928." He would similarly construe clause 2.

He was conscious that that construction strained the words of the document, and that it fitted awkwardly with some of its provisions, but he preferred that to the only other alternatives—namely, attributing no meaning at all to the gold clause, or attributing to it a meaning which from other parts of the document and the surrounding circumstances the parties could not have intended it to bear.

THE DECLARATION

He would allow the appeal and substitute for the declaration made by Justice Farwell a declaration in the following terms: "Declare that on the true construction of the bond the appellant is entitled as holder thereof to receive from the respondents from time to time by way of principal and interest thereunder and on the due dates of payment therefor such a sum in sterling as represents the gold value of the nominal amount of each respective payment, such gold value to be ascertained in accordance with the standard of weight and fineness existing on September 1, 1928, and that accordingly every 'pound' comprised in the nominal amount of each such payment must be treated as representing the price in London in sterling (calculated at the due date of payment) of 123.27447 grains of gold of the standard of fineness specified in the first schedule to the coinage act, 1870, and any fraction of a 'pound' comprised in the nominal amount of any such payment must be treated as representing the price in London in sterling (calculated at the due date of payment) of a corresponding fraction of 123.27447 grains of gold of the same standard of fineness."

The other noble and learned lords agreed.

Solicitors: Messrs. Allen and Overy; Messrs. Stephenson, Harwood, and Tatham.

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION INVESTIGATION

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New Orleans Item of February 6, 1934, entitled "That Election Inquest."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New Orleans Item, Feb. 6, 1934]

THAT ELECTION INQUEST

We note with regret that Chairman CONNALLY, of the Senate committee which recently investigated election practices in New Orleans, seems to have misconceived the attitude of some of the New Orleans newspapers. In addressing the Senate last week Senator CONNALLY said that the Louisiana press "was very unfair and very unfriendly to the committee in the first days of its hearing."

"Mobs", he added, "were clamoring to get into the hearing—both mobs. The mob alined with the Senator from Louisiana and the mob alined against him."

We quote an exchange between Senator CONNALLY and Senator LONG:

"Mr. CONNALLY. I am not complaining about what the papers did, but that does not change the fact. The fact is that two of the papers in New Orleans were alined on one side and one paper alined on the other side.

"Mr. LONG. Oh, no; we have none.

"Mr. CONNALLY. I was informed that one of the papers was with the Long organization.

"Mr. LONG. No; we have none.

"Mr. CONNALLY. Be that as it may, I do not retract what I said, and while we public men have to take the punishment of unfair publicity, I am not complaining. But I do say that the Louisiana papers, when the committee first met, seemed to want some sensational and scandalous stuff to put on the front pages."

We can speak only for the Item and the Morning Tribune. Both these newspapers tried from the first to be absolutely fair and impartial in their extensive reports of those hearings, both as to the contending parties and the senatorial committee. We particularly desired to be courteous to the visiting Senators, not only because we recognized their dignity as members of the world's foremost deliberative body but also because we realized that they were assigned to a difficult and disagreeable business.

Mr. CONNALLY has overstated the manifestations at the hearing very little if any. These occasionally became almost moblike. We are frank to say that they wellnigh disgusted us at times, for the inquiry was essentially judicial in its nature, and we wished to see it carried on in a manner befitting its character.

The Item and Tribune certainly took no position, nor adopted any tone, either editorially or in its news columns, derogatory to either of the parties at bar or to the court itself.

In order to maintain complete neutrality, we even suspended the usual welcome to our distinguished visitors, nor did we print any comment of our own on the hearing at any of its stages until the verdict was rendered.

We certainly did not seek sensations or scandals in the hearing for the first page. On the contrary, we rather regretted that so many of these thrust themselves forward unsought. Mr. CONNALLY came into the committee after the death of Senator Howell. The fact is that when the committee then returned to New Orleans to resume its hearings it had already been bombarded extensively with numerous attacks. These originated and were circulated not only in Louisiana but in other parts of the country. They contributed considerably to a prejudice against the committee. They were further aggravated by a very unusual and bitter personal attack on Senator CONNALLY himself, even before he got here, by the committee's own official investigator—Mr. Holland.

A long train of other agitating developments continued to punctuate the proceedings. Mr. CONNALLY is right in recognizing the existence of scandals and sensations, but he is not quite right in his apparent impression that the newspapers caused them. And certainly our own newspapers neither caused nor contributed to them.

They arose of themselves as spontaneous outbursts among the partisans, quite incidental to the hearing. And when they arose the newspapers were bound to report them. Our newspapers reported them without exaggeration or bias. They were too frequent and conspicuous to be disregarded.

We think Mr. CONNALLY missed the true bearings of this situation, so far as the newspapers are concerned. For very few persons who are busy day and night, on a particularly hot spot to boot, read completely or critically all that the newspapers are saying about them.

We have never before felt called on to pass upon the point, but in view of Mr. CONNALLY'S remarks, it is a pleasure to say that we think he and his colleagues conducted themselves with dignity and tact in a generally creditable manner under very difficult circumstances.

Senators often throw each other flowers that they do not always deserve. We think on the whole, however, that Senator ROBINSON, the Democratic floor leader, was well within the record when he closed the Senate debate last week in these terms:

"It seems to me, Mr. President, respecting the subject that has just been discussed, that the select committee of the Senate has had a very difficult duty to perform; that it has encountered numerous impediments and embarrassments; and that the committee has discharged its duty with fidelity and ability."

Louisianians who cherish the good name of their State, value their own privilege as voters, and realize how fraud and corruption can nullify their personal rights and undermine their public institutions will do well to take serious note of the Senate committee's denunciation of political methods that have been widely employed and too softly tolerated in this State.

They will do well to give their thought and lend their time and effort wherever and whenever these can serve to improve Louisiana's political methods and election system.

ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL WORKS IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article relative to the administration of Civil Works in West Virginia which appeared in the Fairmont Times on February 7, 1934.

There being no objection, the article referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Fairmont (W.Va.) Times, Feb. 7, 1934]

GOOD MORNING!

In spite of all the denials, evasions, and such which have followed the efforts of Senator NEELY and the West Virginia delegation in Congress to get rid of this fellow, Beehler, and clean out most of the C.W.A. organization in West Virginia, the fact remains that there is plenty of fire behind the Neely smoke. We could give you what the late Judge Charles Powell would call "day and date" on enough stuff to convince the most skeptical that by design, little short of sinister, there were built up in many counties of the State Republican organizations with no other motive in life than to beat the Democrats this coming fall. The C.W.A. work seemed to be wholly subordinated to this aim.

We have before us a letter from a man in whom we have the greatest confidence. He has made a survey of the situation, and in one paragraph he sums it up as follows:

"I know definitely that this whole scheme is adroitly laid to promote the interest of the Republican Party, and Beehler is either a party to it or he doesn't know what is going on. I agree with Hopkins that no particular political affiliation should be required to either give or withhold work from any individual, but I do think that after the tremendous vote in West Virginia in 1932 in turning out those who had plundered and robbed this State, bombed newspaper plants, gone to the penitentiary for embezzlement, and those convicted of many other crimes should not be placed in administrative positions. Over all this State ex-Republican officeholders, ex-gunmen, and ex-convicts are running this C.W.A., and if Beehler had been sent into West Virginia with only one set of instructions, namely, 'You build the best Republican machine that is within the power of man to build', he could not have progressed more effectively along such lines as he has to date."

If nothing were involved in this question except the building up of political machines to help the outs get back in, the people as a whole probably would take little interest in the present controversy and let the politicians fight it out. But the C.W.A. is so vital to all the people in West Virginia that it is little short of criminal to have it made a political football in which the chief aim seems to be the restoration of power to the most corrupt set of political gangsters this State has ever known.

When these facts are finally brought out, there will be no doubt what the administration in Washington will do. The President is already on record that there must be no politics in these recovery efforts. If it comes to his attention that the cards have been stacked in a dozen or more West Virginia counties where the whole C.W.A. program has been turned into a Republican political machine, we'll let you guess what will happen.

Here is an example of the type of discrimination that has been practiced in the giving of employment in Logan County:

In December 1932 the West Virginia Coal & Coke Co. shut down its operations at Earling for lack of running orders, having supplied labor for about 84 men 5 days a week up to that time. The following day two investigators were dispatched from welfare headquarters to Earling and proceeded to register these men. Within the following 3 days every man was given employment upon the roads in preference to 3,500 men previously registered and who had been without employment for months.

That is just one instance. The other day a similar thing happened in Marion County, the facts of which are being assembled now for use in the investigation now being conducted by the legislature.

A thorough and complete reorganization must be had in West Virginia before the spirit of this great effort of the Government will be lived up to.

DECISION OF FEDERAL COURT IN ELECTRIC PATENT CASE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the decision of Federal Judge Paul Jones, of Cleveland, in the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, on day before yesterday involving a subject of which much has been said in the Senate. It involves the electric manufacturing industry and has to do with patent rights which were alleged by the General Electric Co., and which alleged rights entered very largely into the controversy involving a certain N.R.A. code.

There being no objection, the decision was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO, WESTERN DIVISION

GENERAL ELECTRIC CO., PLAINTIFF, v. SAVE SALES CO. ET AL., DEFENDANTS, IN EQUITY, NO. 1265

(Memorandum filed Feb. 2, 1934. F. J. Denzler, clerk United States District Court, Northern District of Ohio)

JONES, J.: This matter is for review on exceptions to the report of the special master finding the patent in suit valid and infringed. The master's report well covers the issues and matters in controversy, which have been adequately briefed by solicitors for the parties. Under these circumstances, there is no occasion for an extended statement of issues and arguments; but it will be sufficient to set forth the considerations upon which a conclusion has been reached.

The validity of this patent only could be asserted by giving the claims the most limited scope, in view of what was known and practiced in respect of frosting electric-light lamps, outside and inside. Transferring the frosting from the outside to the inside was not invention, unless some new result of a dstinctive character was accomplished. Minimized light reduction and increased strength of the bulb appear to be the chief results accomplished over clear or other frosted lamps. Double dipping was practiced before Pipkin. It is the precise character of the second dipping and its effect and result that mark any improvement over the earlier treatments; but the fact that Pipkin first claimed increased strength of bulb by his treatment would not entitle him to rights of conception if such increased strength was present but not known to exist in the earlier teachings. The failure to claim what is inherently present and apparent upon investigation and experiment does not impair the effectiveness of a prior disclosure. Wood apparently had not figured percentage of brightness or of strength, as compared with clear lamps; but I do not believe that percentage of maximum reduced brightness or percentage of increased strength are patentable features. If they should be thought to be patentable, then the variations in percentage of increased strength are patentable features, although it be "but in the estimation of a hair" would escape infringement due to the narrow scope to be accorded the claims. But Wood did disclose the features of rounding jagged edges. And so the Patent Office thought when rejecting earlier applications of Pipkin.

No doubt the plaintiff has put the inside-frosted lamp into widely increased commercial use by improved methods of production, and perhaps has supplied the market with a better and more satisfactory lamp; but I think Wood furnished the germ of the idea in the correspondence and in his patent. Under these circumstances, the evidence of commercial success has no persuasive force.

The Patent Office history of the Pipkin patent so far impairs its patentability over Wood as to give adequate force to the challenge of validity in the granting of this patent. I think the patent invalid for lack of patentability over Wood, whose patent clearly anticipates the Pipkin claims. Insofar as the master's findings and conclusions are inconsistent with this result, the exceptions thereto will be sustained.

Accordingly, the bill will be dismissed and costs awarded the defendants.

JONES,
United States District Judge.

FEBRUARY 2, 1934.

THE N.R.A.—SPEECH BY SENATOR BORAH

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD a very splendid address delivered over the National Broadcasting chain last night by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am deeply indebted to the National Broadcasting Co. for an opportunity to discuss with you tonight a matter which seems to me of very great moment.

Upon the subject which I am going to discuss, I have received in the last few months thousands of letters, sometimes as high as 300 letters a day. Necessarily, I cannot make answer personally to all of these letters. I am in a sense undertaking to reply to these letters tonight. I feel doubly indebted to the broadcasting company for the opportunity.

The questions are two—but in a sense one and the same. The first question is: Can the people, particularly the less-well-to-do people of this country, and that constitutes now about 90 percent of our people, be protected from unjust and extortionate prices now imposed upon them through the price-fixing methods of combines, trusts, and monopolies? Can those who, through great industry and self-denial, are endeavoring to pull themselves out of their present economic distress, be shielded from the cruel exactions of monopolies? There are millions of people in our country still in want of sufficient means to properly feed and clothe and educate their families (a million children, it has been published, are kept out of school in one city for want of proper nourishment), who are now being driven to a still lower standard of living because prices have been fixed at a point beyond their reach. They are compelled to still further deny themselves and their families the things they sorely need. And these prices are being fixed without restraint, without hindrance, by combinations and monopolies, passing under the euphonious terms of "trade associations", and the prices are being fixed regardless of humanity or justice. This is the first question.

The second question is this: Can small business be rescued from ruin—small business, independent business, which is the real economic strength and backbone of the Nation? The same combinations and monopolistic methods which are fixing prices for the people generally are, through price-fixing and other monopolistic methods, destroying small business. This may seem a strong statement, but it is not too strong; it is true. It can be proven by the facts. I received in one day over 50 letters from small business firms alone scattered throughout the land. These letters tell the story of the battle which they are waging for existence. In many instances the battle has been lost. The second question, therefore, is: Can small business be saved from utter destruction?

In order to fully understand this situation it is necessary to go back in history. When the Industrial Recovery Act came before the Senate for consideration at the last session it provided for the suspension of the antitrust laws, for all laws which had for their purpose the control and restraint of combines and monopolies. When it came to be considered in the Senate I offered an amendment for the purpose of restoring these antitrust laws. The amendment was adopted by the Senate. It went to conference and was there stricken out. A generalization with reference to monopolies was inserted which has proven wholly ineffective. So the National Recovery Act became a law with a provision therein suspending all antitrust laws. All effective control or restraint upon these powerful combinations were removed. They have made good their opportunity.

It is my contention that the antitrust laws should be restored and that they should be enforced. I do not believe it is possible to protect the people of this country from exorbitant and unjust prices or to save small business from utter ruin if these great combines and monopolies are permitted to go unrestrained and uncontrolled. I may say that I have pending now an amendment to the Industrial Recovery Act which would restore the antitrust laws.

It was thought by some, and is still by some contended, that the antitrust laws, if in full effect, would conflict with the administration of the National Recovery Act. If the National Recovery Act is to be executed and administered in harmony with its true terms and its declared purposes, the antitrust laws would not be a hindrance but a distinct assistance in its administration. Neither in practical effect, in moral effect, or in law, is there any conflict between the National Recovery Act and the antitrust laws. The principal contention as to this phase of the matter came from those who were most anxious to get rid of the antitrust laws and the principal objection to restoring the antitrust laws comes from the same source. It is my contention that this is a poor subterfuge, that these two bodies of law, the antitrust and the National Recovery laws, can be made to work in perfect harmony for the welfare of the great body of the American people. It is also my contention that unless the antitrust laws are restored and enforced, the American people will continue to be pillaged and robbed through extortionate prices and that small business will continue to be crushed and driven into bankruptcy. If the antitrust laws are not necessary for the protection of the people and the N.R.A. can, without the aid of the antitrust laws, protect the consumers and small business men, then why has it not done so, and why does it not do so? What I am asking tonight is: Who is responsible for these exorbitant prices and for the harassing and destruction of small business? Everything which the average person engaged in manual labor must purchase has risen in price all the way from 67 percent to 150 percent. Cotton towels have risen 87 percent. Did the N.R.A. do that or consent to that, or was it those who sit about a table and fix the prices of these articles? And if its machinery without the aid of the trust laws can prevent such things, why is it not used? Children's hosiery has risen 94 percent. Who is responsible for that? Men's wear, such as men's socks, have risen 67 percent; cheap shirts, 72 percent; overalls, 110 percent. This is rather an important item to a large body of people in the United States, whose purchasing power is at the lowest ebb. Who is responsible for this, picking the meager pockets of the workingman? I contend it is the result of combines, price fixing. Who is it that is contending the N.R.A. is responsible for it?

I have a letter in my files from an elderly lady from the South who says: "I am sending you a sample of knitting cotton which sold last spring—1933—for 50 cents a pound. Now I must pay 90 cents a pound." And she asks, "Who gets this large profit?" Yes; who does? It is my contention that the few who control the sale of this particular product have raised the price nearly double. I ask: Does the National Recovery Act and those who are administering it need any help to prevent this extortion? Has the blue eagle become a hawk? Certainly not. What is happening is this. While the N.R.A. is seeking to restore purchasing power, monopoly hovers around, soars down like a bird of prey upon the citizen, and not only takes all gain from the laborer, from the farmer, from the people generally but, while taking is good, it takes more than the gain assured by the N.R.A. And while it is in the act of extortion it is screaming "chiseler" to all who object to being fleeced.

According to a monthly survey of business, put out by the American Federation of Labor sometime ago, a 6-percent increase in wages was more than eaten up by an 8.5-percent increase in living costs. In other words, the laborer is more than paying as a consumer for his increase in wages. He is worse off by 2.5 percent than he was last March. Using the figure of 100 to represent pre-war prices, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics index showed farm prices on August 15 at 72, as compared with 76 on July 15, and 64 on June 15. The prices of things the farmer buys were 103 on June 15, or 3 points over the pre-war. This moved to 107 on July 15 and reached 112 on August 15. What a perfect scheme. As the farmer's prices increase, the prices of the things which he has to buy increase so as to remove all possible gain to the farmer. Just so long as a few men sit about and fix prices upon the things which the farmer has to buy, the farmer will never be able to enjoy that equality with industry which has been promised. Those who can control prices can always keep just ahead of the prices of the commodities from the farm.

At the present time it is perfectly clear that monopoly is gathering up everything which the average man and woman might reap in the way of benefit from the present recovery program. These monopolies and combines can, so long as they have unrestrained power to fix prices, deprive the people of any opportunity to make any real gains in their income or in their standard of living. With the antitrust laws suspended these monopolies are restrained neither by the feelings of remorse, the stings of conscience, or the fear of punishment. They are now free and untrammeled to extort the last cent they can from the people of this country and to harass and drive small business to its desperation and ruin.

Let me quote briefly from letters of small business. Under date of January 22, from New York, the writer says: "In almost every industry there are large units. These large units are made up of a number of concerns being merged together. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, where these mergers take place the concerns are overcapitalized. Now these concerns that are overcapitalized attempt to make a profit on the overcapitalization with the result they have to get exceptionally high prices for their merchandise. Such concerns are not able to compete with small units except by price fixing. And if they can fix the prices for the entire industry, they will naturally fix them high enough for themselves to make a profit. And if the little man should get the business, he would make a profit out of all proportion to what he was entitled and what he would ask for if he were permitted to sell the goods in his own way. But the real trouble exists where one price is fixed in an industry, the larger units are usually the people who get all the business and the small units get nothing."

Here is the secret, both of high prices and of injury to small business. The people are paying on overcapitalization and are not permitted to pay on the basis of honest capitalization. The high prices they are compelled to pay not only covers overcapitalization but they cover high salaries, and many of them. Small business is not permitted to sell upon a basis of honest capitalization or reasonable salaries.

Another letter under date of January 30 says: "There may be a lot of good in the N.R.A., and incidentally there may be a lot of harm. In the opinion of the writer, unless immediate steps are taken to correct the representation constantly being made by monopolies, it will only hasten the time when there will be no need for the N.R.A. May I ask if the N.R.A. is supposed to help the masses, or is it supposed to add more money into the pockets of the very selfish class?" This is a business house in Brooklyn.

Let me say to the writer that the N.R.A. is supposed to benefit the masses. The law was passed for that purpose. The objective was a righteous one. But monopoly put one over on the framers of the National Recovery Act in securing a repeal or suspension—which amounts to the same thing—of the antitrust laws. It is a notorious fact that big business made it known they were not willing to get in and cooperate unless the trust laws were suspended or repealed. For thirty-odd years an effort has been put forth here in Washington to repeal or emasculate the antitrust laws. Here was the opportunity and they succeeded. And the people are paying for the mistake.

A business house from Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Entrenched industry and capitalistic industries can use this new set-up even more selfishly than they were able to use it under old methods." The writer goes on to state how, through monopolistic practices, such as price fixing, they are ruining small business. Another small business firm in Brooklyn says: "Representing a small business struggling for existence, we are at the mercy of monopolies who control raw material and consequently prices. Under the guise of the N.R.A., the ——— industries have raised prices 30 percent on items the price of which was the same from 1928 to about 1933."

A business firm from Wisconsin says: "They themselves tell us that if we were to ask 20 ——— manufacturers for quotations, their prices would be so identical as not to vary one cent. Not only that, ——— salesmen now openly boast that their concerns have a large bond posted with the ——— ring, which is to be forfeited the minute they cut the prices set by the combine. Many of these companies have boosted their prices by 60 percent, with no excuse of processing taxes to justify this advance." Another letter from a business man at Jacksonville, Ill., says: "Without the antitrust laws in effect, small business cannot survive."

I shall not, for want of time, quote further. But these letters are coming from all parts of the United States and from men anxious to keep in the recovery program. But they also want the right to live, to continue business. And it is the duty of the Government to all that they enjoy the right to live and continue business.

Since this discussion about the small business man has arisen, I had a conversation with one of the prominent figures in one of the great industries in the country which is under a code. I do not feel justified in using his name, but he made this statement: "Senator, you must realize that the small business man is passing out. He does not belong in our modern industrial development. It is not in the interest that a business should be conducted upon the theory that he must be retained. It is natural for us to sympathize with him, but the philosophy of the present constructive program is against him."

Gasoline is a necessity, as modern society is now organized, to the American public in an extent exceeding 2½ pounds daily, for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Its price is, therefore, almost as critical as the price of bread and meat. The domestic consumption of gallons in the year 1933, as reported by the United States Bureau of Mines, was 378,143,000 barrels, 42 gallons each; 378,143,000 multiplied by 42 makes 15,882,006,000 gallons. An increase of 1 cent in the retail price per gallon means an increase of $158,820,060 annually, or $435,000 daily, at the 1933 rate of consumption. Since last June the price of gasoline has increased over 30 percent. In June it was about 12½ cents a gallon and has gone up to an average of 16 cents a gallon. The major companies are in a position to fix prices and to drive out of business the small independent oil men.

My State produces a large amount of lumber. I know most of those engaged in the business. Naturally I have only the friendliest feeling for the industry. But let me call your attention to a statement furnished me by a western lumber company. This statement says:

"In the week of February 5 to 11, 1933, we sold retail $276.18 worth of lumber consisting of 120 different items. On November 3, 1933, our retailed price on this same material was $445.49, showing an increase of 61 percent over the February 1933 prices. Today's price (Feb. 1, 1934) is $484.90, an increase of 9 percent over November 3, 1933, prices, and 75 percent over February 1933. And now, under the new minimum selling price established by the code, this selling price has increased another $71.40 to $556.30, a jump overnight of 15 percent and 25 percent over November 3, 1933, prices, and 101 percent, or more than double, the February 1933 prices. These exact figures are taken from our records."

Balzac, the great French novelist, once said that money never loses an opportunity to be stupid. It seems to me that economic power never loses an opportunity to be stupid. These prices will in the end injure the lumber industry. People who want to build a home will not build a home; they cannot build it. Farmers who want to improve their barns and granaries or build new ones will not do so. They will either do without or find substitutes. But such is the program that is now being carried out.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, is a hard-working, able, conscientious, courageous public servant. But he has some most peculiar ideas. It is difficult to understand him. To illustrate: He believes that the taxpayers who must pay these great bills are entitled to some protection. He insists on competition in the matter of bidding for public works. He believes the Government cannot be protected if these bidders for public works are permitted to get together and put in the same bids. He goes so far as to say these people who get together and put up prices on the Government are crooks, or something to that effect. And he seems to think they are such, regardless of what their politics may be.

Now, Mr. Ickes has been much criticized for these ideas. But I venture to think he is right. The taxpayer ought to be protected and the Government ought not to be "gypped" by a combination of bidders. But if the Government is entitled to the benefit of competition, if the Government is entitled to protection against fixed bids and thereby fixed prices, are not the people entitled to protection against price fixing? If a farmer wants, for instance, to buy a farm implement, he could travel from San Francisco to New York and he would, I suspect, find the price the same all the way along, fixed by somebody and fixed at an unconscionable point. If a workingman wants to buy a pair of overalls, he might travel from the Canadian line to the Gulf, but he would likely find the same price. And he would further find that if some small business man felt that, owing to his less highly watered business, he was willing to sell for a lower price, he would be put in jail. Now, my friends, this is all wrong. It is an injustice to the whole people. And in many instances and in many respects it cannot be defended morally any more than the exactions of Dick Turpin on the London road.

Billions of dollars are being expended by the Government to restore prosperity. When the game is played through, in whose possession is this money? Largely in the possession of trade associations, combines, and monopolies, which have the power to fix, and are fixing, prices. If workingmen get a little higher wage, it is taken away by the higher prices of things they must buy, and they are unable to save a dollar. If the average man or woman makes a gain somewhere, the cost of living goes up and they are no better off—the situation is not changed. If the farmer receives some benefit from some policy of the A.A.A., the monopolies and combines, which operate under the N.R.A., take it away. Last summer when the packers came to the conclusion that the consumers would not carry the processing tax, they made themselves safe by reducing the price of hogs. Play the game as you will, the monopolies, who are able to fix prices, will win.

What benefit is it to the laborer to raise wages if a few companies may raise prices to rob him of the benefit of the raise in wages? What is the use to kill pigs and reduce acreage if the harvester combine, the packers, and the major oil companies can put up prices so as to grab off to themselves all the benefits? Until we can increase the purchasing power of the masses, until they can buy more, not less, as they are doing now, until they can make some savings, there can be no permanent prosperity. Prices should be kept down within reason and the price of labor raised and unemployment decreased. When that is done the increased demand for goods, for the things which men and women must have in order to live, that of itself will stimulate business, and that stimulation will normally raise the prices of articles which the people need. But to raise prices first, as monopoly is doing, is simply to hold labor down, likewise the producer, to the bare level of existence. With the price-fixing power in the hands of those interested in charging all the traffic will bear, there is no hope of restoring the purchasing power of the masses and no hope of prosperity until that is done.

When these conditions are pointed out someone goes into a trance and begins to ejaculate about how we cannot go back to rugged individualism; that we have arrived at a new era, the era of planned industrialism. I do not care to enter into a discussion as to the merits or demerits of rugged individualism or of planned industrialism. So far as the subject I am discussing tonight is concerned, I am not interested in that question. What I have to say is that it matters little what you call it; if combines, trusts, and monopolies dominate the program, it is just the same to the people, whether you call it rugged individualism or planned industrialism. It makes little difference to the consumer paying extortionate prices or to small business fighting for its life against monopolies whether you call the process rugged individualism or planned industrialism. If monopoly is permitted to have its way under both schemes, permitted to fix the rules of the game under both schemes, the results are the same to the people. Any scheme, whatever you may call it, which does not protect the individual citizen from unjust charges and prices, which fails to insure to him economic justice; any scheme which does not give small and independent business a fair chance in the struggle for existence, is a libel upon government, a travesty upon justice, and a brutal indefensible system, regardless of whether you call it new freedom, old freedom, rugged individualism, or planned industrialism. The test is whether the citizen is free from these injustices and is permitted to have his portion of the wealth and income of the country. If we are to have planning and a great scheme of cooperation, we are certainly not going to consent that it shall be a legal rendezvous for monopoly. If we are going to have this new scheme, the average man and woman must be treated, not merely as an economic cog in a vast machine but as human beings, hoping, aspiring, feeling, sentient souls. The average man or woman cannot be reduced to economic slavery, carrying the weight which kills, simply in the name of this or that scheme. They are entitled to be treated as citizens and to be protected against the rapacious charges of combines and monopolies. If a plan is defective in that respect, it is nothing but legalized robbery. I do not care what you call it.

POST-OFFICE APPOINTMENTS

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, yesterday during the time the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] was addressing the Senate I was permitted to interrupt and to make some comments upon the existing rules in the Post Office Department with respect to the appointment of postmasters. In submitting such comments, I asserted that I understood that changes had been made in this administration with respect to the system of appointment. My statements were denied by Senators, and because they were so positively challenged I desire to take a few minutes to place in the RECORD the Executive order under which postmasters are presently to be appointed.

It is not necessary, I think, to read the statements made yesterday by the Senators who challenged my statement, but I am referring to the statements made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Both those Senators made the statement that the system under which the Department is now operating is identical with the system under which it has been operating in the appointment of postmasters for many years, and specifically is identical with the system that was employed under the Hoover, the Coolidge, and the Harding administrations.

At that time I was not prepared to offer the Executive order because I did not have it in my possession. But since then I have acquired a copy and have examined it. I read from the order:

> When such examination has been held and the papers submitted therewith have been rated, the Commission shall furnish a certificate of not less than three eligibles, if the same can be obtained, to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of one of the highest three for appointment to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the Postmaster General may reject the name of any person or persons so certified if he shall find that such person or persons is disqualified.

I will conclude the reading at that point although that does not complete the paragraph.

The language last read, namely, "that the Postmaster General may reject the name of any person or persons so certified if he shall find such person or persons is disqualified", constitutes a significant change from the earlier Executive order. In the brief time since yesterday I have not had time to examine all of those orders, but I have examined one of them, namely, the one in effect just previous to the order from which I am reading. I find that in that order this extraordinary power of unlimited rejection is not conferred upon the Postmaster General. So far as I can learn by inquiry of those interested in the Post Office Service, the language to which I have alluded appears in the Executive order of July 12, 1933, for the first time since the commencement of the merit system in this country.

I did not yesterday intend to charge the Postmaster General with any impropriety under the order. Indeed, I have no information about the conduct of the Postmaster General with respect to it. I did not intend to impute anything with respect to him. What I did intend to say is that there had been a change in the system, a change in the rule. It was that statement of mine that was controverted and it is with respect to that matter that I am addressing myself briefly this morning.

Mr. President, I ask that the Executive order to which I have referred may be printed as a part of my remarks at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Executive order is as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS

When a vacancy exists or occurs in the position of postmaster at an office of the first, second, or third class, the Postmaster General may submit to the President for renomination the name of the postmaster whose term has expired or is about to expire, or the name of some qualified person within the competitive classified Civil Service. If no such person is nominated, the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants not in either of the above-mentioned classes to fill such vacancy. When such examination has been held and the papers submitted therewith have been rated, the Commission shall furnish a certificate of not less than three eligibles, if the same can be obtained, to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of one of the highest three for appointment to fill such vacancy: Provided, That the Postmaster General may reject the name of any person or persons so certified if he shall find that such person or persons is disqualified, in which event the said Commission shall upon request of the Postmaster General complete the certificate of three names: Provided, That no person who has passed his sixty-sixth birthday at the date for close of receipt of applications for such examination shall be permitted to take the same: And provided further, That no person shall be examined for postmaster who has not actually resided within the delivery of the office for which application is made for 1 year next preceding such date: And provided further, That at the expiration of the term of any postmaster, or anticipating such expiration, or upon the death, resignation, or removal of any postmaster, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, request the Civil Service Commission to hold an examination.

If, pursuant to this order, it is desired to submit to the President for nomination the name of a person in the competitive classified service, such person must first be found by the Civil Service Commission to possess the requisite qualifications.

No person who has pased his sixty-sixth birthday shall be appointed acting postmaster in an office of the first, second, or third class unless he is already in the Postal Service.

The Civil Service Commission, in rating the examination papers of candidates who are veterans of the World War, Spanish-American War, or the Philippine insurrection, shall add to their earned ratings five points and make certification to the Postmaster General in accordance with their relative positions thus acquired.

The time such candidates were in the service during such wars may be reckoned by the Commission in making up the required length of business experience. As to such candidates all age limitations shall be waived.

This order shall supersede all previous Executive orders affecting the appointment of postmasters to post offices of the first, second, and third classes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 12, 1933.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely rise to suggest to the Senator that while it may be that the sentence he read was not in the former Executive order, it has not brought about any change in practice. The Postmaster General has never been required to appoint a disqualified man, not only as postmaster, but as rural carrier. The same rule has applied from time immemorial with reference to the appointment of rural carriers. For instance, if one of the highest rated is discovered to be a nonresident of the territory or for some reason not shown on the civil-service examination is disqualified, the Postmaster General has never been required to appoint him. It has been the practice, always, to require a new certification so as to get a full list of qualified people, regardless of whether they were the first three on the list or not.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true; and it is equally true that in the order which I have just sent to the desk there is an exception, as it has always existed, to the effect that disqualified men need not be appointed; and the disqualifications are enumerated. The disqualifications are defined in this Executive order and in previous Executive orders. But the language to which I have called attention does not appear in previous Executive orders, and it has the effect of conferring upon the Postmaster General the right, without the assignment of a reason, without any reference to the qualifications enumerated in the Executive order, but solely within his own discretion, to refuse to accept any one of the three highest names on the list.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that sometimes reasons are assigned for the removal of Republican postmasters which are rather inconclusive and not particularly persuasive. For instance, I know of several situations where Republican postmasters whose terms have not expired have been removed for so-called "pernicious political activity", that being the official excuse or reason assigned by the Post Office Department. I have repeatedly sought to obtain from the Post Office Department a definition of what precisely "pernicious political activity" consists, because it occurred to me that it would be interesting to apply the rule reciprocally. But I never have been able to get a bill of particulars.

I fully realize the Postmaster General's very tender and unremitting aversion to political activity of any nature, and I can sympathetically understand how keenly he would desire to have the entire Post Office Department, from the top down, separated from any remote relationship to politics. But it does seem to me if Republican postmasters are to be removed for a violation of the Democratic Postmaster General's tender political conscience in this respect, it would be interesting to know precisely what constitutes the "pernicious political activity" that ought to separate a man from his postal job. Then we should be able to apply the rule uniformly and perhaps assist the Postmaster General in attaining the antipolitical isolation which these orders would indicate he seeks.

Mr. STEIWER. That would be interesting, of course, but I hope the Senator from Michigan is not seeking to divert me from my original purpose. I do not intend to join with him in his subtle allusion to the Postmaster General or his administration of the matter. I have no desire to touch upon that. All I intend to do is to make the record show plainly that the system today is not the system of former administrations.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I will yield in just a moment.

There was written in the Executive order language which is most pertinent with respect to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan and which, if it is to be given any meaning at all, is bound to result in the exercise of unlimited discretion at some time by some Postmaster General and will, in my judgment, completely destroy the merit system in the appointment of postmasters.

I yield now to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. What the order does is to put in effect in words just what the three previous administrations have been putting into effect in practice, nothing more, nothing less. The selection of postmasters is made in exactly the same way.

With reference to the two individual cases referred to by several Senators, will the Senator from Oregon permit me to say that on yesterday my good friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], whom I admire very much, pointed out the case of a postmaster by the name of Geren, at Columbus, Ohio, who said he had been dismissed and another man appointed in his place when Mr. Geren had 3 more years to serve. That was not correct, and the Senator was misinformed. The postmaster in question at Columbus, Ohio, had served 10 months beyond his term. It was a civil-service appointment. Another man had been appointed 10 months after the term of Mr. Geren had expired.

Mr. STEIWER. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I simply want to say that I heartily agree with the statement of the Senator from Oregon that postal affairs are not being conducted under this administration as they were under the preceding administration. As an example of that I cite the visit of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Phillips to Missouri about a year ago, when he served notice on the postmasters at a meeting out there, in effect, and almost in exact words, that if they did not indulge in pernicious political activity they were going to be fired.

Mr. STEIWER. That has nothing to do with the system under which the Post Office Department is administered. If the statement be true, it merely reflects upon the officer who was guilty of that misconduct.

I am not talking about the misconduct or the good conduct of any officer in an earlier administration or in this administration, nor am I imputing any misconduct to the Postmaster General or any assistant in this administration. I am merely insisting that there is a change in the rule under which the system may differ if the Postmaster General wills it to be different.

I want to say a word with respect to what was said a moment ago by the Senator from Tennessee. If the system is the same today as it has been previously it is merely because the Postmaster General wills it so. It is not the same by reason of the force of an Executive order, because there is a difference in the Executive order as has been stated. There is a difference in the meaning of the language. There is a difference in the object to be attained by the language, and it is impossible to say that the system necessarily is going to be the same now as it was under the former system.

Now that the matter has been challenged let me refer to the earlier order, the one in effect at the time the President issued the order of July 12, 1933. The former order, after providing that appointment should be made from the three highest, provided that the Postmaster General could reject the name of any person or persons so certified if he should find that "by reason of character or residence such person or persons shall become disqualified after such examination."

That language very clearly conferred upon the Civil Service Commission authority to determine the qualifications and the eligibility of those to be certified to the Postmaster General. It gave to the Postmaster General a discretion only in the event that something happens after the names have been certified, and then only for stated grounds which were clearly identified in the Executive order.

But in the Executive order to which I have invited attention the discretion of the Postmaster General is not limited to anything happening after the examination has been held by the Civil Service Commission, and it is not defined by limitation as to character or anything else. By the express language of the order the whole discretion is turned over to the Postmaster General to be exercised in accordance with his judgment, without rule and without limitation. If the Postmaster General in his wisdom has seen fit to adhere to the old practice, that is one thing; but if this or any other Postmaster General shall subsequently determine to depart from the old practice by reason of having powers and discretion conferred upon him, that most certainly is another thing.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. Until we were informed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] a moment ago that postmasters had been removed for pernicious political activity, I had supposed that that had not been considered as a cause for removal from office. I was led to that conclusion because it happens that in the city of Providence only recently the chairman of the Democratic committee of Providence was named as postmaster. I understand he is still acting in that capacity. I do not mean to say that he has not the qualifications to fill the office. The fact is that he was postmaster there previously, and, so far I know, performed his duties in a perfectly satisfactory manner.

I merely allude to the fact because of my amazement at the statement made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I have one more——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I do not ask the Senator to yield. I am rising to a question of order.

The Senate has been in session for 30 minutes engaging in what is essentially a political discussion. I am going to demand the regular order, and that the Senate proceed with its business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION APPROPRIATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I ask recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. I will now proceed with my comment, if I may.

The effect of the two orders, taken in comparison, leads to this conclusion: That under the former order the Postmaster General was bound to appoint from the three highest eligibles; or, within the strict limitations of the order, he could select someone else, provided that other person had been found to be qualified by the Civil Service Commission. Now, the Postmaster General, under the latitude allowed him, and in the exercise of his discretion, may name not only one of the three eligibles but may name, if he sees fit, in the exercise of his discretion, any other person who has taken the examination, provided such person meets the qualifications of residence and is not more than 66 years of age. The new authority and wide discretion conferred by the President's executive order upon the Postmaster General permits an appointment system entirely different from all former systems employed under civil service, and, of course, it is susceptible to grave political abuses.

So I conclude that the statement I made yesterday is supported by the record. The contentions made in contradiction to my statement apparently are unsupported.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, my attention has been called to certain remarks made by my colleague [Mr. FESS] on the floor here yesterday concerning the removal of postmasters in Ohio without charges, merely to supplant Republican postmasters by Democrats.

I am sure my colleague did not intend to misrepresent the facts, but he has been so badly misled into making these statements that I think it necessary to make a brief statement as to what the actual truth is.

My colleague said here that the postmaster at Columbus had been removed, that his resignation had been asked, without any charges being made against him. The fact is that his term expired in December 1932. He was allowed to serve until October 1933; and then, having had a civil-service status before his service as postmaster, he was restored to civil service as a clerk in the Columbus post office, so as to preserve his retirement rights.

My colleague said that the same thing happened in Toledo, and the same thing actually did happen in Toledo; namely, the term of the postmaster there expired in December 1932. He was allowed to serve until August 1933.

My colleague said the same thing happened in Cleveland, and I know he will agree now, after a conversation I have had with him, that he was grossly mistaken about the Cleveland situation.

He did not allude specifically to Cincinnati, but the fact is that the Republican postmaster there became a candidate for public office, and so was required under the law to resign, and he did proffer his resignation without its having been asked.

In Dayton, Youngstown, and generally throughout the State, Republican postmasters are being permitted to serve out the terms for which they have been appointed. I do not think there is a single case in the whole State of Ohio where any Republican postmaster has been removed without cause. So far as I am concerned, it seems to me fair play that Republican postmasters should be permitted to serve out the terms for which they have been appointed and confirmed.

I hope my colleague will agree that this statement is the truth. If he has any instance where he thinks a Republican postmaster has been unjustly removed, I should like to hear what it is.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. BULKLEY] called attention this morning to the particular cases to which I referred yesterday in a colloquy with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] when he was speaking about the policy that had been in vogue under President Harding, and contrasted that policy with the policy of the present administration.

I made the statement without any thought that it would be any reflection upon my colleague. There is no one in this body for whom I have a higher admiration than my colleague. His conduct in all the matters in which I have been associated with him, politically or otherwise, has been without blemish, and has been, as I regard it, very much on the square. When he called my attention to the matter this morning, I explained to him why I made the statement; and I certainly did not at the time think of making any reflection upon him.

As I stated before, I have never made any complaint in this body or to any individual about the postmaster situation in Ohio until yesterday; and I did it yesterday when it was called to my attention by the comparison of the two administrations.

Mr. President, I think it is due to the Senate and myself and all concerned that I state that my statement probably has been misinterpreted. For example, all of these people were reappointed, given recess appointments.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, that is not quite accurate. The postmasters in Columbus and Toledo had recess appointments which the Senate did not confirm.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BULKLEY. And, of course, if the Senator is seeking to draw a parallel with the Harding administration, he will remember that the precedent for the refusal of the Senate to confirm appointments last winter goes right back to the beginning of the Harding administration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FESS. Not now. Just a moment.

These reappointments were made. They were not confirmed by the Senate. They were made in recess, then submitted after we came into session and were not confirmed by the Senate, and therefore, were not really reappointments. That is the error into which I fell.

When these persons spoke to me and said there had been no complaint made, I realized, as Senators will, that there was no basis for complaint if confirmation was not made. All that was necessary was to make the appointments; and the appointments were made without calling for any particular resignation, but simply to fill the vacancies that would occur when these men ceased to hold their offices.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. Will my colleague agree with me that he was mistaken about Cleveland?

Mr. FESS. I have to accept the Senator's statement of facts that I did not know. Evidently I was mistaken in the facts; and the Senator, instead of being subject to criticism there is entitled to the highest commendation for what he did. That was all unknown to me.

Mr. President, in the light of what occurred in the case of the Federal Trade Commission, where vacancies were demanded because of a change of administration on the ground that the administration could get along better and more effectively with persons of their own political thinking, and in view of the statements of the Postmaster General that "Democrats can ride horses just as well as Republicans", and so forth, I assumed that this was the general practice, although, as I stated before, I had never made any complaint; and I stated to my colleague that in the appointment of postmasters I knew that he would not have anybody nominated who would fall below the basis of his standard of character, and as long as that was done I had no opposition; I would go along with any recommendations he might make. So I want my colleague especially to understand that I meant no reflection upon him in what I stated yesterday, and it is in a sense a misinterpretation of the facts as they existed.

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course, I well understand that my colleague did not intend any reflection upon me; but I should be sorry to have any reflection on the action of the Department, either.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I was hoping we could vote on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]; but I have quite a post-office discussion in my system with regard to Louisiana, and if this line of debate is going to continue, now would be a good time for it.

If we can vote on the pending amendment, I shall withhold a 2- or 3-hour discourse that I want to make on post offices; but if the post-office discussion is going to continue I want to discuss post offices, too.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, let us finish the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that he do withhold his discussion and let us go on with the bill.

As every Senator understands, all this discussion this morning on post-office nominations is, under the peculiar rules of the Senate, permitted because a Senator, when he takes the floor, does not have to speak to the subject before the Senate, provided he is willing impliedly to say that he thinks he is doing it. I suggested the regular order, but, of course, Senators took advantage of the interpretation of the rules of the Senate.

I hope we may go on with the work before us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. LONG. I call for a division, Mr. President.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from New Mexico offers the following amendment:

On page 2, line 2, to strike out "$950,000,000" and to insert "$2,500,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I think there is no need of spending much of the time of the Senate in discussing the proposed amendment. Every Member of the Senate has weighed in his own mind the action which is going to be taken today. I do not anticipate that anything I may say will influence any votes, but this is a question of so great importance that I think I should briefly state the grounds which lead me to offer the amendment.

It has become a platitude that the chief cause of the depression is the failure of our purchasing power to live up to our productive power. It is, as I have said before, a platitude in our speech, and yet it seems that all our official actions are governed by entirely different principles.

In my conception the C.W.A. has been by far the most successful effort of the present administration to deal with the fundamental problem. I say that not in criticism of other efforts, but in particular commendation of the work which has been done by the C.W.A. administration since it was inaugurated in November.

I need scarcely say, Mr. President, that I am not one of those who agree with Governor Smith that we should abide by experience as against experiment. The experience of the last few years has been bitter and futile experience. I think the experience we have had is experience in what should not be done. I do not believe it can justly be used as a criterion for what we should do from now on. I entirely approve of the policy of the administration in experimenting as widely as possible so long as the experiment seems to have any rational or reasonable basis which may give us hope of success. Personally, I have voted for all the experiments suggested by the administration, with the single exception of the economy act, which in my opinion was untenable in theory, and which I do not believe any Member of the Senate could at the present date successfully defend as a practical operation.

I am blaming no one in the administration or out of it for the fact that most of the experiments have failed, but I think that is the fact. I think it is a further fact that this experiment of the C.W.A. has done more to put purchasing power in the hands of the masses of the people than all the other experiments which the administration has adopted put together. I think it has been a magnificent success. I do not yield to the Senator from Tennessee or any one else in my admiration of the way Mr. Hopkins and his assistants have handled this tremendous problem. I do not believe any of us could in November have anticipated the speed and success with which over 4,000,000 people were put to work in this short space of time. And just because it has been such a magnificent success, I appeal to the members of the majority party in this Chamber and elsewhere to keep it going; not to let it drop on the 1st day of May.

This, in brief, is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. Hopkins has testified before the committee that during most of the time the C.W.A. was expending $70,000,000 a week; that recently, on account of the reduction of the hours in rural sections from 24 to 15 hours a week, the expenditure had been reduced to $45,000,000 a week. At $45,000,000 a week, with such minor reductions as may be possible in the summer months, it will require something like $2,000,000,000 to keep this work going until the next regular session of Congress. My amendment calls for two and a half billion dollars because, as Senators well realize, the total sum must include the $500,000,000 which is expected to take care of the regular relief work for that period of time.

Mr. President, a great many objections to the C.W.A. have been raised on the floor of the Senate. Many of them come from this side of the aisle. I feel that Mr. Hopkins has been fair enough to admit the existence of certain defects in the administration of the C.W.A. There has been the question of graft. There has been the question of political discrimination. I know quite well that both those things exist, and I am convinced that it was impossible for any administration to put to work as many men as Mr. Hopkins has put to work in so short a space of time without defects being found throughout the program.

I know that in my own State there is probably not a county from which there have not been complaints about political or other discrimination in the C.W.A. I know, further, that some of the work which has been done by the present administration throughout the country has been in itself comparatively insignificant in tangible results. I do not think that criticism is as valid as a great many people believe. There is at any rate an enormous amount of useful public work still to be done. Where C.W.A. activities have been confined to raking leaves, I believe it has been largely the fault of those locally in charge of the work. It is also due to the fact that this work had to be done at short notice, and that it was impossible to give the broad supervision which was undoubtedly necessary, and which can be given in the future.

I agree that in some parts of the country the wages have been so high as to attract men from other occupations. The Senator from Tennessee, in my opinion, answered that objection satisfactorily yesterday, showing that that was due to a part of the law which will no longer be in effect.

I think, furthermore, that in many parts of the country there has been dissatisfaction because where in a community there were three unemployed, it has been possible to put only one to work. I believe in increasing the program. But if we are not going to increase the program, then I think that in many parts of the country it would be better to stagger the work; to give three times as many men employment at wages which in many cases are commensurate with what they would normally be receiving. Mr. Hopkins himself makes that admission in the hearings.

Those are the current criticisms of C.W.A. I concede that they are valid criticisms, so far as they go, but I submit that when we are talking in those terms we are looking at the trees so hard that we are unable to see the woods. I know that in my State—and I think I am speaking for the majority of States west of the Mississippi—the C.W.A. work has been the only work which has ameliorated the situation in any way.

I do not want to criticize the other activities in which the Government has been engaged. In some parts of the country no doubt some of them have given help. But I do say that in the West, at any rate, the C.W.A. work has been the principal Government activity toward which people have looked to obtain relief. I am not speaking merely of the unemployed; I am speaking of the communities as a whole. When the unemployed are given purchasing power, it, of course, enables the small storekeepers who have for years extended them credit to get their bills paid, and in return to pay the bills of the wholesalers who have kept the storekeepers going. The process is far-reaching. It is important. It is more important, to my mind, than anything else which has been done in the United States during the past few months.

I think that when the history of 1933 is finally written the greatest plume in the crest of the Roosevelt administration will be the C.W.A. work under Administrator Hopkins.

Why, then, are we proposing to cut this work down on the 1st of May? If the Senate votes for the recommendations of the committee, the C.W.A. work will begin tapering off almost at once, and on the 1st of May it will cease altogether.

So far as I can find from the hearings, the only reasons were those given by Mr. Hopkins on page 33 of the Senate hearings, which were quoted yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee. Said Mr. Hopkins:

Our reasons for not recommending a sum of money which will continue Civil Works I think are substantially these.

Let me discuss these for a moment seriatim.

First. It was started as an emergency enterprise. When the President announced Civil Works, it was to meet the emergency this winter.

Mr. President, I submit that that argument would apply with equal validity to every other effort which the administration has made. Neither the C.C.C., nor the N.R.A., nor the P.W.A., nor the A.A.A., nor any of the other Government activities were initiated with the intention of being continued permanently. They were all undertaken, in the first place, as emergency measures.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to say that, so far as I am concerned, I agree entirely with the position of the Senator from New Mexico that the most helpful money that has been spent by the Government in its whole recovery program has been spent by the C.W.A., but is it not a fact that the C.W.A. was called into being as a temporary measure by reason of the failure of the P.W.A. to get in operation? In other words, the only excuse that I have heard offered or that I can conceive of being offered upon the floor of the Senate at the time the appropriation for $3,300,000,000 was made for Public Works Administration was that of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] who said, "You cannot prime a pump with an eye-dropper." In other words, the whole theory of the original appropriation was that so much money would be thrown into the undertaking, that such a vast program would be started that unemployment would be hit a staggering blow before cold weather.

Without any criticism of the administration of the Public Works, nevertheless it is true that so far as the purpose of Congress was concerned it was a complete failure. It was tied up in so much red tape, it was so cumbersome, so slow-moving, so timorous and fearful in the selection of projects that cold weather was approaching without any appreciable blow having been given to the unemployment. It was for that purpose that the C.W.A. was created. Now at the present time, with the Public Works Administration belatedly coming along, it is my understanding that they are tapering off the C.W.A. because P.W.A. will soon be performing its functions. I may say further that while I intend to follow the recommendation of the President in this matter, I would personally much prefer making this further grant to the C.W.A. to making further grants to the slow-moving P.W.A.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Missouri has just said. Of course, the C.W.A. was an emergency undertaking; it was an undertaking which was not submitted to Congress and with which Congress had nothing to do. It was meant as a substitute for the P.W.A., for which Congress did provide. I prefer to deal with that matter in a moment. I was trying to discuss first the first reason stated by Mr. Hopkins, namely, that this was purely an emergency enterprise. I say in that respect that when we are dealing with experimental measures we are dealing with emergency enterprises all the way through, and the theory means that where the experiment is successful it will be kept in effect and that where an experiment has failed it will be dropped.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Without discounting for a moment the emergency and the need for taking some action, one thing that is worrying me considerably is what will happen when we actually do cut off the money for Civil Works Administration, because I can see no prospects of the people now working under that administration being employed in any other line of activity.

Mr. CUTTING. That is exactly what is worrying me.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we are going into a long-time expenditure, I do not think that this activity is calculated on that basis. It is calculated for a year only or for 6 months, and what I am afraid of is that we are going to run out of money after a while without having planned for a situation that may eventually be on our doorsteps.

Mr. CUTTING. I began by discussing the five reasons given by Mr. Hopkins as to why the work ought to stop. I should like to continue to discuss the five reasons before yielding any further. After that I shall be glad to yield and to state my own personal viewpoint about the whole matter.

First—

Mr. Hopkins said—

It was started as an emergency enterprise.

To my mind, while that is a correct statement, in what respect does the C.W.A. differ from any of the other experiments entered upon by the administraton?—

Second—

Said Mr. Hopkins—

There will be a substantial pick-up in public works.

Of course, we all hope that that will be the case. I do not want to argue that question, except to say that none of us has any idea as to how much of the C.W.A. work will be absorbed by the P.W.A., and that we ought not to take any chances until we do know definitely facts which are not on record either in Mr. Hopkins' testimony or anywhere else. I should like to read a few lines in this connection from the Philadelphia Record of this morning:

How long shall we continue C.W.A. work?

The question is without point. It is like a debate between the captain and the first mate on how far to sail the ship in a storm. "Let's sail 100 miles", says the captain. "Make it 150 miles", says the first mate.

But the ship must sail until it gets to port. C.W.A. must continue until it is no longer needed.

I quote further:

Well, then, how long shall we continue C.W.A.?

Until the P.W.A. succeeds in creating enough jobs to take C.W.A.'s place.

If it be decided that we should keep 4,000,000 at work, let us keep 4,000,000 at work. The Record thinks the number should be greater if we are going to increase mass purchasing power.

I may say, Mr. President, that I heartily agree with the Philadelphia Record in that respect. I quote further:

But even granting that 4,000,000 is the proper number—

If P.W.A. creates 500,000 jobs, then cut C.W.A. to 3,500,000. If P.W.A. creates 1,000,000 jobs, cut C.W.A. to 3,000,000.

But let's stop taking guesses as to how many jobs P.W.A. will create. Let's wait until it creates them. Let's consider C.W.A. and P.W.A. as complementary projects, with the one purpose of "stabilizing" 4,000,000 jobs.

So far, C.W.A. offers more hope than P.W.A.

C.W.A. has spent $286,000,000 since November 15; P.W.A. has advanced only $51,000,000 to States and cities for construction since July 1.

In the month of January, C.W.A. spent $188,000,000. In that entire month, P.W.A. advanced only $2,953,000 to States and cities, or less than 2 percent of C.W.A. expenditures.

I think that is a sufficient answer to the second reason given by Mr. Hopkins.

Third—

Says Mr. Hopkins—

Third. Civil Works was started at the low point of employment—that is, December and January have always been the low months in factory reemployment—so there will be a seasonal pick-up.

There again is something which we all hope will be the case, but we have no possible figures to show what kind of a seasonal pick-up there will be during the present year.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. By increasing this appropriation it does not follow, does it, that the money necessarily is going to be expended?

Mr. CUTTING. Of course not.

Mr. WAGNER. If private industry, plus the Public Works Administration, should absorb enough of the unemployment to obviate the necessity for a continuation of the program under the C.W.A., it can be retarded; but if we fail to make an appropriation, demobilization has got to take place by May 1, and we may walk right into another serious recession.

Mr. CUTTING. Of course, Mr. President, I hope as sincerely as anyone else does that the prophesies made by Mr. Hopkins will come true, and in that case nobody would suggest spending money which it would be unnecessary to spend.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. But if the appropriation were changed from the sum carried in this bill, namely, $950,000,000, to $2,500,000,000, would not the Senator take that as a direction to Mr. Hopkins to continue the work? Suppose the Senator were in Mr. Hopkins' place. After he had recommended that this work be gradually discontinued by May 1, after an appropriation of $950,000,000 for that purpose had been recommended, then, if the Congress should increase the amount to $2,500,000,000, if the Senator were in Mr. Hopkins' place, would he not regard that as a direction to continue the work rather than to shut it off?

Mr. CUTTING. Oh, no; I should not regard it in that light for a moment if there were no necessity for the work. I should not regard it as such a direction any more than Mr. Ickes, the Public Works Administrator, would take advantage of an appropriation for his administration if he did not think the money could be properly expended.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I will suggest that, after all, the entire program is under the direction of the President, just as the President directed the transfer of the $400,000,000 in order to inaugurate the C.W.A. program.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As a matter of fact, the Civil Works Administration was created by Executive order, and at any time the President should determine that it was necessary to do so another Executive order could terminate it.

Mr. CUTTING. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Here are the facts before us: The President, as the chief administrator of this work, has sent his representative here, who recommends, as the President recommends, that the appropriation be $950,000,000. If the President is looking after it—and evidently he is, and evidently he is doing it well—why can we not trust him to go on and continue the work?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am not disposed to depart from my line of argument in order to discuss at this time the main principles involved. I am dealing with the arguments which Mr. Hopkins—sent, as the Senator from Tennessee says, by the President—came before Congress to present, and I am trying to show that, in my judgment, these five particular arguments are transparently weak.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was not my intention at this time to interrupt the argument of the able Senator from New Mexico. I had expected later to present the inquiry I wish now to make. It is, however, pertinent to what has been stated by the Senator from Tennessee.

In the Washington Post of yesterday morning, February 7, Mr. Elliott Thurston, one of the best known and most reputable press correspondents in Washington, made a statement which, with the permission of the Senator from New Mexico, I shall read.

Mr. CUTTING. I think it is a very interesting statement, and I shall be glad to have it go into the RECORD at this point.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I shall read only a portion of the article. Mr. Thurston said:

> The Civil Works Administration, now employing 4,000,000 men at a cost of $70,000,000 weekly, is not to be ended on May 1, as the administration originally planned. To the $950,000,000 appropriation which the administration is now requesting of Congress will be added enough to bring the figure to around $2,500,000,000 and to continue C.W.A. until Congress meets again next January.
>
> This is the program now approved but not yet announced by the President's emergency council.

If this article correctly describes the facts, the Senator from New Mexico is working in harmony with, not against, the policy of the administration. If not, this is the appropriate moment for us to be so advised by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no advice to give the Senate other than what the President has himself recommended. He has sent a message here asking the Congress for $950,000,000 to carry out his program in connection with the Civil Works Administration. That is the only information I have, and, so far as I know, that is the only information that anyone has about the matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. So far, then, as the Senator from Tennessee is informed, I take it he does not know that the article of Mr. Thurston is other than correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know anything about it, but I feel this way: Inasmuch as the President has made a recommendation for $950,000,000, if he wanted a larger sum he would ask for it. He has not asked for a larger sum, but has simply asked for $950,000,000; and, in view of the wonderful work that has been done by this administration, I do not think we ought to give him more money than he has asked for.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. May I add to what has been said by the Senator from Tennessee that before the Committee on Appropriations Mr. Hopkins, who appeared in behalf of the administration of the C.W.A., declared it to be his intention to gradually proceed with the reduction of the forces until May 15, and that his statement is not in accord with the statements contained in the Washington Post.

Mr. CUTTING. I am sorry the Senator from South Carolina has missed my argument up to date. Of course, we know what the Administrator has recommended, and I have been trying to show that the arguments which he used before the committee were obviously on their face entirely inadequate and feeble.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not mean to make that statement at all in reply to the arguments being presented in a very logical way by the Senator from New Mexico. I was simply responding to the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] as to what information the committee had with reference to the accuracy of the statements referred to in the Washington Post.

Mr. CUTTING. I understand that; and, of course, I always welcome any remarks from the Senator from South Carolina.

The fourth reason given by Mr. Hopkins is as follows:

> A great many of the persons on Civil Works are tenant farmers and other farmers who need the benefits this winter because of their economic situation, and who in the spring, in the beginning of the planting season, when they can get their cattle out to grass in the Northern States, will be able to get along.

Mr. President, I appeal to some of my friends from the Northern States as to the number of farmers now employed on Civil Works, who in their judgment, will be able to get along in the spring on permanent employment. How many people will actually be able to get back to the soil who are not employed there now?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that any calculation which anticipates a substantial absorption on agriculture of those now employed on Civil Works is bound to be refuted by events. In the first place we have a program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration which is endeavoring to curtail acreage and production. Obviously insofar as that succeeds, it will reduce the man power required for labor in planting and cultivating and harvesting crops.

So far as the dairy interests are concerned in the North, their situation is so desperate that I would not hesitate to predict that there will be a sharp decrease in the amount of agricultural labor employed by dairy farmers in the Northern States this coming spring, summer, and fall.

Mr. CUTTING. I am glad to have that confirmation of my own views from one who speaks with authority.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Northwest States from the standpoint of agriculture are in a very desperate situation. I think they are in worse condition now, everything considered, than they have been at any time in the last 40 or 50 years. I have letters and telegrams almost every day from people living on farms who have not had a crop for 2 years. They have no credit. Because some of them have not any mortgage on their dairy herds they cannot get Federal relief, or feed and hay to save their dairy herds and breeding stock. It takes 10 to 15 years to build up a dairy herd.

If the Federal Government cannot make the Agricultural Adjustment Act work better than it has worked in our part of the country, the increase in Federal relief must be amplified rather than diminished. These people tell me they cannot get work under the C.W.A., that there are not enough funds to go around to give them work. They have no credit because there is no one to lend them money even if they had security. I do not know how this fund of $950,000,000 will be allocated, but it looks very much as though our part of the country will have to have very much more relief in the next year than during the last year.

Mr. CUTTING. I take it from what the Senator from Minnesota is saying that he feels that the Northwestern States require more relief rather than less than they have been getting. Is that correct?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. I am not sufficiently well informed to say how much more will be needed, but from present indications and the present condition of the country, and based on the information I receive, they will need more relief. They are not the kind of people to ask for relief unless they need it. I do not know whether $2,000,000,000 is too much or too little. I do not know whether $950,000,000 is sufficient. I can only speak for my part of the country, but that part of the country, so far as agriculture is concerned, is in worse condition than it was a year ago.

Mr. CUTTING. Exactly, and therefore I submit that the fourth reason given by Mr. Hopkins is entirely inadequate to justify a reduction in the present appropriation.

Fifth—

Mr. Hopkins said:

> With the pick-up in general business through the instrumentality of the Recovery Act we will get very substantial numbers of these totals on a self-sustaining basis in industry.

I do not intend at this time to discuss the Recovery Act. That is a very controversial subject. I should prefer to leave any discussion of that matter to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senators from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER and Mr. NYE].

Nevertheless, it will be obvious that no specific figures are given which justify the prediction of any particular absorption in industry as a result of the Recovery Act. My own belief is that the Recovery Act by its very nature increases costs and prices more rapidly than it increases wages, and to that extent it is decreasing purchasing power rather than increasing it. If there is going to be a rapid increase in production through the Recovery Act, it will probably end in a worse crash than anything we have had up to date.

However, that is a matter of speculation. All I can say at the present time is that the West and most sections of the country, other than the great industrial centers, have found the Recovery Act an obstacle rather than a benefit to the promotion of their own immediate recovery.

In conclusion, Mr. Hopkins said:

> Finally, I do not believe that anybody can now project the economic situation over a period of months ahead to an extent that would warrant asking an appropriation from the Congress to do certain and specific things. It seems to me that this $950,000,000 is a fund which will carry us through until the Congress meets again.

That is the entire argument which Mr. Hopkins made in the course of a long examination before committees of the House and Senate as to the reasons for reducing the present C.W.A. program.

Let me read now what the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] asked the Administrator:

> Senator COPELAND. Mr. Hopkins, let me ask you this question: Let us take the gloomy view. Suppose there were no recovery such as we anticipate there will be, and it should be necessary for you to continue your activities longer than your present program calls for. Would you then, in your opinion, have money enough to last you until Congress convened again?
>
> Mr. HOPKINS. I doubt it. I do not see why you should take a gloomy view, however.

Mr. President, I submit that when we are dealing with a depression of this gravity, when we are admittedly experimenting with one program after another, the only reasonable assumption that Members of Congress can take is the gloomy view. If we take the optimistic view and we are disappointed, on Mr. Hopkins' own testimony we shall not have enough money to carry out the program. If we take the gloomy view and things turn out for the best, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] pointed out a few moments ago, there will be no necessity for making a single unwarranted expenditure.

I think there is another reason which more than any of those mentioned by Mr. Hopkins impels a great many Senators to go slowly and cautiously with regard to any program of this sort. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] said a few moments ago that there is a serious danger that when we once start putting people on the dole, we shall find it difficult to end the practice. I am not quoting the exact language of the Senator, but that was his general point of view, and it is the point of view which I know is in the minds of many of us whether we are for or against this particular appropriation.

I do not believe we can end it until we find some better way to care for the mass of our unemployed. No one likes a dole, conceding that the C.W.A. expenditure is a dole. I do not concede that it is necessarily so. I insist that this program can be built up into a constructive program of public works of importance to the Nation. But, granting that it is a dole, what are we going to do with these people? Are we going to let them starve? There are twice as many of them off the C.W.A. rolls today as there are on them. We have to take care of those people before we begin considering turning off the rolls of employment any of those who are already there.

I do not think we should take an overoptimistic view of the situation which confronts this country. I do not believe Federal budgets are going to be decreased in magnitude. I think for a long period of years they are going to increase. We must face that fact among many others which may be distasteful.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. The administration seems to feel that the amount requested at the present time will be adequate. Naturally, the sooner these men can be returned to private industry, the better it will be. Whether we look at the situation gloomily or optimistically, we should at least attempt to encourage the starting of private industry and the transfer of these men to private industry. I think we all agree on that.

We shall undoubtedly be in session here in Congress until the 1st of May, and perhaps much longer than the 1st of May.

Mr. LEWIS. The Fourth of July.

Mr. PITTMAN. But it is within the power of Congress at any time to pass a deficiency bill for this matter or any other matter. If we were adjourning this body tomorrow, or the next week, or even within a month, the argument the Senator from New Mexico has made would seem to me almost unanswerable; but, in view of the fact that we are going to have 2 or 3 months' experience on this matter, I do not feel that there is any emergency at this particular time.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator may add 4 or 5 months.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Further, in regard to what the Senator from Nevada has just said, and referring again to what was said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] a while ago, if the administration has the matter under advisement, why not just wait and see what the administration expects to advise the Congress about it?

This was an administration plan. It was not a plan that was gotten up by Congress. It was an administration plan, and it seems to me we ought to follow the administration about it.

Mr. CUTTING. I am glad to have the assurance of the Senator from Nevada that we shall be in session on the 1st of May. I have not the slightest doubt that if that is the fact, and if we do not increase the amount suggested by the committee, we shall have to do so at or about the 1st day of May. I see no particular reason, however, for making two bites of the cherry. I think most of the facts on which we can reach a decision on a question of this sort are before us now. The money appropriated will not have to be expended except under the direction of the President of the United States; and I submit that the reasons given by Mr. Hopkins are, to my mind, altogether insufficient to justify any retrenchment in the magnificent work which he has been doing.

May I for a moment call the attention of the Senate to a rather significant turn of phrase used by Mr. Hopkins in introducing these reasons? He says:

> Our reasons for not recommending a sum of money which will continue Civil Works I think are substantially these—

I submit to the Senate that probably no man charged with the administration of a great public office ever before appeared before a committee of either House of Congress and said, "I think the reasons for my doing this or that are these"; and Mr. Hopkins does not say quite that. He says:

> I think our reasons for doing this are these—

Those are not the words of a man who is convinced that the fundamental facts of the situation necessitate the action which is being recommended. He says in effect: "I think the reasons for which these works are going to be retrenched are these."

I submit that it is quite obvious that Mr. Hopkins came before the committee of the Senate in order to give the reasons which might be urged in favor of retrenchment, good or bad, and that he did not give the reasons which could be urged in favor of continuing the work at its present level. That is a perfectly natural thing. It is not a reflection either on Mr. Hopkins or on those who were responsible for the administration program with regard to Civil Works. It is our responsibility to decide whether those arguments which Mr. Hopkins thinks are the reasons which induced the change of policy with regard to Civil Works are or are not sufficient to counterbalance the reasons which some of us have advanced in order to justify the continuation of this splendid and magnificent administration success.

Mr. President, I said a little while ago that our national budgets, in my opinion, are bound to get larger, and not to decrease. Our States and our municipalities are practically bankrupt in many parts of the country. They are not going to be able to carry the share which they have carried of the general burden. They have no control over the distributive system of the United States. That control rests in the Federal Government.

The burden of education, for instance, is one which I am convinced is going to have to be more and more borne by the Federal Government and less and less by the property owners who pay taxes in the States and cities. The destitute and the hungry and the unemployed are going to have to be dealt with more and more by the only branch of our Government which has sufficient power to translate the inherent wealth of this country into terms of credit to the average man who is without it.

We are the wealthiest country that has ever been known in the history of the world. Our man power, our resources, our industrial and agricultural plant are superior to anything in history; and yet we are still dealing on the old economic assumptions of scarcity and want and insufficient resources. The Federal Government is the only government which we have which can in any measure equate the consuming power of the country with what is acknowledged to be the overwhelming productive power of the United States.

Now, may I say just a word about the arguments which were made yesterday afternoon by the Senator from Tennessee?

In reply to a question propounded by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who asked whether it would be possible to take care of any of the unemployed who were not being taken care of at the present time, the Senator from Tennessee said:

> I do not think it is proposed to take care of every unemployed person, but those in charge of this work are going to take care of all the worthy unemployed they can find.

I hope my friend from Tennessee, for whom I have the warmest regard and affection, will pardon me if I say that when I heard him make that remark, he reminded me for a moment of ex-President Hoover. I know that is asking the Senator to extend his indulgence pretty far.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not hear the statement. What was it?

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator stated that we were going to try to take care of the worthy unemployed. It reminds me of Mr. Hoover.

Mr. McKELLAR. I withdraw the remark entirely if that is what it reminds the Senator of. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTTING. I shall be glad to withdraw my remark, then, as applied to the Senator from Tennessee. I do remind him, however, that Mr. Hoover in 1931 made the promise that under the program of his administration no person in the United States would starve; but a year later, in the 1932 campaign, he altered those remarks to the statement that "no deserving person" would starve.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see the point of the Senator's statement. I thank him for calling my attention to it; and I most cheerfully withdraw that statement from the RECORD if I made it yesterday, and I know I did, or the Senator would not charge me with it.

Mr. CUTTING. I appreciate what the Senator from Tennessee has said; and I hope he agrees with me that the Houses of Congress, or the administration, or anyone else in the country, cannot afford to start drawing a line between the worthy starving, on the one hand, and the unworthy on the other. We must deal, so far as we can, with the total mass of our destitute people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again, I think, speaking seriously, the Senator is correct about it. In the running debate I may have used the expression "worthy unemployed." I did not intend to. Of course, people who are unemployed and who are suffering from starvation ought to be helped.

Mr. CUTTING. I was merely trying to make my point, and I hope the Senator from Tennessee understands that nothing personal was intended; but it does help to make the point, to emphasize that this is, in my conception, an inherent duty of the Federal Government.

What is the government? In a democracy surely the government is merely the citizens of a country coming together as a unit to take care of the common welfare. This is not a gratuity which we, as Members of Congress, are showering upon the starving and the destitute. It is not, in my conception, a matter of graciousness or generosity. It is a matter of duty. If we were giving a gratuity, I think we would be morally, at least, violating our oaths of office, because it is not our own money that we are spending; it is the money of the taxpayers. In my conception, however, we are representing, and the executive branch of the Government equally is representing, the 15,000,000 unemployed or the 10,000,000 unemployed or the 6,000,000 unemployed, whatever their numbers may be, just as much as we are representing the taxpayers. If anything, we should be representing them more, because to a greater degree they need our assistance.

But I do not think the primary purpose of legislation of this kind is simply to aid the starving, important though that may be. I believe the primary purpose of this legislation is to aid the entire people of the United States, rich as well as poor, and that such aid can be accomplished effectively only by putting purchasing power down at the bottom. How long we are going to have to continue this particular process I do not know. My opinion is that we are going to have to continue it until we find some better method of accomplishing the same results. When that time comes I hope that we will adopt that better method.

May I recall to the Senate briefly one or two of the statements made in the campaign of 1932, which I think crystallized this issue.

Governor Roosevelt during the campaign wrote a letter in which he spoke of the inherent right of every citizen to employment at a living wage.

Speaking at Detroit a few days later President Hoover said that Mr. Roosevelt was wholly blameworthy for bringing politics into the question of unemployment. He said that Mr. Roosevelt was "holding out for political purposes promises to 10,000,000 men which cannot be kept." He added that such a program would cost from $9,000,000,000 to $12,000,000,000, and was, therefore, in the nature of things, impossible.

To my mind, those two statements marked a definite cleavage in political thought. They crystallized an issue on which the citizenship of the United States was asked to decide on one of two candidates for the Presidency.

There were, of course, other issues involved in the campaign; but when Mr. Hoover took that position at Detroit, and when Mr. Roosevelt continued to take his position in favor of the duty of the Government toward the unemployed, most of the liberal thought of the country, in my opinion, decided to go with Mr. Roosevelt. If I may speak for myself, personally, it was that particular issue which determined me to desert my party affiliation and support for the Presidency the man who would acknowledge and glory in his responsibility to the masses of the people.

I do not for a minute believe that Mr. Roosevelt has gone back on his word. I believe he still stands where he stood in the campaign of 1932. I hope that the administration as a whole, and the people who are carrying out the program, will stand by at least the spirit of those words.

Many people say that technological improvement is going ahead at such a speedy rate that in the long run we will not be able to find employment for all our people, even though we reduce the hours of labor to a comparatively small figure. The fact remains that when, through the ordinary channels of labor, or through other channels, the people cannot find employment the Government owes a duty to those who are starving and those who are destitute, not merely in behalf of those who are starving and those who are destitute, but in behalf of the people of the country as a whole.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from New Mexico states that, according to the estimates, we are going ahead with such rapidity along the lines of technological improvement that we cannot absorb our labor. I do not believe that the Senator is one who subscribes to that theory. I have not so listed him in my general calculations. But whether he does or does not, the fact is that as long as we produce enough for the people to live on it can be shared in such a way that all can be employed for such length of time as is necessary for every man to produce and have his share. If it ever gets down to the point where 15 hours a week is enough, then, the Lord should be praised for having made it such a simple thing for the people to live.

Mr. CUTTING. I quite agree with the Senator from Louisiana. For a long time to come technological improvements will not be sufficiently great to prevent people from working increasingly fewer hours, and still be doing useful work, work which needs to be done for the national welfare. What I did say was that if such a time should come, we should then have to consider some other method of procedure, but that the basic principles would even then remain the same, namely, that the people of America, the common people of America, have a right to share in the benefits of our civilization. If they do not share through one process, they will have to share through another. That, I think, was the fundamental issue which was fought out in the campaign of 1932, and that same issue is being fought out today, and the fight is going to be continued until it is settled one way or the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. Assuming that the expenditures are necessary to take care of the unemployed during the present emergency, is it the Senator's opinion that we should continue on with a nationalistic program, or is it his opinion that we will absorb most of the unemployed in normal occupations if we revive the world's trade, at least revive as much of it as we can?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and I hesitate at times like these to venture any indication of what may happen with regard to world trade. Within the last week we went ahead with one of the great experiments, which was guaranteed on both sides of the aisle to depreciate the dollar on the foreign market. A great many people were in favor of the bill. Others said it would do very little domestically; that it would not increase the purchasing power of the people of the United States by one penny. But there was not a single man on either side of the aisle who had the temerity to rise and say that this program was not calculated to depreciate the dollar on the world's exchanges. Yet what happened? As soon as we passed the bill the dollar went up. So I should prefer at this time not to make any prophecy about what is going to happen in regard to international trade or exchange, because I am quite certain that I should be found in error tomorrow or next week.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield further?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not ask the Senator to make a prophecy. We are, of course, trying to find out what is the best thing to do. I was just wondering whether or not the Senator thought it was the better thing for the country to pursue a course of nationalism, curtailment of acreage, buying up of marginal land, and movements of that kind which are calculated to decrease employment and make necessary such expenditures as the one under discussion, or whether, on the other hand, we should try to live with our neighbors and revive world trade, if possible, so that they might find markets?

It has occurred to me—and I am no prophet, either—in answer to my own question, that the thing we are short on now is markets for the commodities that we produce, and of course we cannot create a market without buying from foreign peoples. We cannot expect to sell to them without letting them sell to us. And while in other days that policy perhaps was not so necessary as it is today, with the necessities of the occasion, I simply asked the Senator whether he did not feel that perhaps a policy of international cooperation was more calculated to serve the unemployed than a policy of nationalism.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I think that in the long run the Senator from Maryland no doubt is correct. We are going to need international cooperation before the conditions of the world as a whole are improved. I am afraid, though, that we shall have to wait a long while before we can put into effect any tangible methods toward that end, because cooperation means cooperation from two sides. While the world is in such an extremely chaotic condition as it is in at the present time, I should hesitate to risk the welfare of any of our own people on any future policy of that sort, although I agree with the Senator from Maryland that sooner or later that will be the ideal toward which we shall have to move.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to have the Senator's very valued opinion. I am glad to know that he thinks we must eventually cooperate with each other in order to get out of the chaos which we are now sensing.

One of the bad things about the depression, in a way, has occurred to me to be the dictatorships, which have been inevitable. However, they may be a blessing in disguise. In order that the world may be rebuilt, there is a call for sacrifice on the part of the people of every nation in the world. No one yet wants to make a sacrifice. The only men, it seems to me, who can get the people to make the necessary sacrifice in all countries are those who have the confidence of the people to the extent that they can lead them to make the essential sacrifices which all of us must make in order to rebuild an international well-being.

I think that if it were possible for the President of the United States and the leader of Germany, the leader of Italy, and Mr. MacDonald—and perhaps whatever person will emerge out of the French situation—to meet in a room, they would all recognize what must be done, and if they would make up their minds to get each of their respective peoples to make the necessary sacrifices, a lot of our international and national problems might be solved. But until that leadership comes, I doubt very much whether legislative bodies can secure the necessary reform which must precede any real, sound, substantial recovery.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I divert the Senator from the interesting colloquy passing between him and the Senator from Maryland, to ask him to revert his mind to his amendment and be so kind as to explain to me wherein he sees any difference or feels any difference in the policy his amendment suggests from that which is the present policy of the Government touching the subject matter?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I tried to make that plain in my statement.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator that I regret very much having to be absent during the early part of the Senator's statement. I was unavoidably detained in the committee room and did not hear his statement.

Mr. CUTTING. I have no hesitancy, however, in repeating it for the benefit of the Senator from Illinois. The policy of the administration, as expressed in the hearings, was to begin tapering off the C.W.A. work from the present date so that it may cease entirely on the 1st of May. The policy which I advocate is to continue the C.W.A. work until it shall have been found by experience that it is safe to let it go.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I understand the position of the Senator from New Mexico—and if I do not, I hope the Senator will correct me—it is this: My information is that there are about twice as many people undertaking to get on the C.W.A. rolls as there are already on the rolls. As an example, the center of the white area shown by the United States Chamber of Commerce as its estimate for recovery in the United States is located at Shreveport, La. That is the center of the best-recovered part of America. Yet today the report that I had brought to me shows that in the city of Shreveport, where they have 4,000 people on the C.W.A. rolls, there are around 7,000 people trying to get on the C.W.A. rolls who cannot get on there, and who have nothing to do, and who are not going to get anything to do. Now, if we unload the balance of them, certainly we are not going to promote recovery.

Further, I think that I might say we do not need any dictatorship, we do not need any foreign trade to share the food that we have in this country among the people who are here. We do not need any trade agreement with Hitler or with Mussolini to share the wearing apparel that we have in this country which we have to share. There is not a thing on God's earth that America needs any international trade or any international treaty to bring here. We have got too many houses, and we will not let people live in them; we have too much to eat, and we will not let the people eat it; we have too much to wear, and we will not let the people wear it, but everybody wants to go over to Mussolini and make a treaty about something under conditions of this kind.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, in that case, does not the Senator from Louisiana agree with me that this is a bad time to cut down the purchasing power which is being provided and which has, to my mind, been most successfully provided since the C.W.A. program started?

Mr. President, that is all I have to say.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that I think it would be a good idea, when we get ready to take care of those who are going to be taken care of by a division of what each of us has, if the Senator would set us the example by act rather than by words.

Mr. LONG. I will set that example now, but when the Government gets all I have, all it will have will be a deficit. That may be one of the reasons. But let me say, if the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me for just a moment, for this might do a little good, that if the Senator from Maryland can take his eyes off Italy and off Mesopotamia and off the Balkan States and look right here at America he will find here a land that is flowing with milk and honey, with more stuff than the people can eat and more stuff than they can wear. So what is the use of dodging and whipping the devil around the stump? We have got to redistribute wealth in America if the people are going to live. That is the only way it can be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will indulge me just a moment further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator if he desires to ask a question, but I do not wish to be interrupted unduly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I cannot transgress on the time of the Senator from Wisconsin unduly, but in my own time I shall try to take care of the subject matter which has just been discussed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] to provide $2,000,000,000 for civil works. I had not thought it possible, at this late stage in the worst economic crisis in the history of this country, that there would be any question concerning the necessity of increasing purchasing power on the farm and in the city. Senators on both sides of the aisle are questioning whether or not that proposition is sound. It is therefore pertinent to the question at issue to review some of the causes of the depression and some of the economic trends which were responsible for its creation. We should endeavor, if possible, once more to present to the Senate the frontal issue of the depression, as some of us have attempted to from time to time since its onset.

Most economists are now agreed that one of the primary causes of the present depression was the World War. During that conflict 10,000,000 of the flower of the young manhood of practically every civilized nation on earth were killed; nearly 20,000,000 more were crippled, wounded, and incapacitated; 9,000,000 children were orphaned by the war; 5,000,000 women were widowed. If we stop to remember that all wealth in the last analysis is the product of human labor we obtain some appreciation from these cold casualty statistics of the enormous wealth of which the world has been deprived by the killing and the maiming of man power in the war.

In addition, $330,000,000,000 of capital was destroyed. This huge sum is almost beyond the comprehension of the human mind; but there can be no doubt that it was the product of the labor of generations of men, and it was destroyed during the war just as certainly and just as effectively as if we had piled it up into a mountain range of currency, touched a match to it, and burned it into ashes. It is perfectly obvious that the world could not cripple and destroy so great a percentage of its manpower, that it could not destroy this tremendous accumulation of capital, representing the labor of millions of men over a long period of time, without contributing to a dislocation of economic forces.

Mr. President, there had been going on in this country prior to the World War a process of concentration of wealth in the hands of but a relatively small proportion of the population. The World War tremendously speeded up concentration of wealth. The statistics of the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue show that 21,000 individuals in this country accumulated a million dollars or more of capital as a result of concentration of wealth during the war and the failure to tax war profits to the limit. The war, in other words, Mr. President, produced one new war-made millionaire in this country for every three American boys who gave up their lives in France.

War, of course, always produces a tremendous demand for goods. Nearly 4,000,000 men were withdrawn from production and put into uniform. The tremendous demand for goods produced by war, coupled with the diversion of manpower into active military service, greatly accelerated the process which economists call technological improvement of industry. In other words, it spurred on the inventive genius of American industrialists and engineers to find ways and means of producing more and more goods with less and less man power.

The result was belt-conveyor assembly-line factory design and the introduction of automatic machinery. This economic trend, carried on into the period of so-called "boom" which followed, and even during these tragic years of depression this process has been tremendously speeded up, because every industrial organization with cash reserves has been investing them in more and more automatic machinery, more and more labor-saving devices, in order to reduce their production cost to meet cutthroat competition in the ever-diminishing domestic and foreign market.

Although wages appeared to be high in the war period and during the boom before they took a nose dive during the depression, the fact is that, measured in terms of the worker's ability to turn out goods, real wages in this country were falling. They were falling from the time of the war down to 1929, with the exception of just two industries—transportation and construction.

In this period there was plenty of lip service on the part of industrialists to the theory of the economy of high wages. In other words, although many employers endorsed the proposition that purchasing power must be kept in step with increased capacity to produce, as a matter of fact the ability of the wage earner in this country to buy the goods which he produced was constantly diminished. If the production curve should be platted upon a chart and the curve of real wages platted upon the same chart, those two curves would be shown to have been separating from 1920 to 1929. Of course, every Senator is familiar with what has happened to wages in this country since the depression enveloped us.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield for a question, Mr. President.

Mr. LONG. I am not trying to distract the Senator from his line of argument but, on the contrary, the Senator has touched a point which I was hoping he would not forget to discuss more fully, and that is the concentration of wealth that has resulted from the conditions which he has just described.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I expect to come to that a little later.

Agriculture, one of our great basic industries, received its first serious economic discrimination during the World War. Since that time this great industry and those engaged in it have been fighting a losing economic battle. During the World War the Government conducted a well-directed, well-managed, and well-financed campaign appealing to farmers all over the United States to grow more wheat, more corn, more cotton, more hogs, and to produce more dairy products. Each one of those appeals wound up with the slogan, "Help your Government win the war."

At the same time the Federal Reserve Board, which controls the credit policy of the Federal Reserve national banking system, adopted a liberal credit policy for both agriculture and industry, encouraging both the farmer and the industrialist to borrow money for the purpose of increasing their production. Farmers all over the United States responded to this appeal. They borrowed money with which to buy more land, to erect larger buildings and larger barns, to buy power machinery to take the places of sons who had patriotically joined the Army—many of whom were fighting at the front. The result was that farmers all over the country had their lines of credit at the banks extended almost to the breaking point.

Then in August of 1920 the Federal Reserve Board had a secret meeting in Washington and decided that the country was too much inflated as a result of their credit policy, and that afternoon ordered the Federal Reserve banks all over the United States to curtail the war-time loans made both to farmers and to business men. This produced a terrific process of deflation. It ruined thousands of business men in the country. So far as the farmers were concerned, there was just one place where they could turn for cash to meet the demand on the part of the banks to liquidate this war-time indebtedness which they had incurred largely as the result of appeals on the part of their Government. They were forced by this deflation policy to dump their crops on a falling market, and in the autumn of 1920 this policy on the part of the Federal Reserve Board precipitated one of the worst crashes in agricultural commodity prices that the country had ever experienced up to that time.

Three years later, after a most careful investigation, the then Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, father of the present Secretary of Agriculture, issued a statement over his own signature in which he reported that after a careful investigation he was convinced that this deflation policy upon the part of the Federal Reserve Board had cost the farmers of the country $15,000,000,000.

As stated a moment ago, this great industry, taking it as a whole, has never recovered from that blow. The farmers have been fighting a losing battle against the depression, not begun in 1929 but the depression which began so far as their industry was concerned in 1920. The obvious effect was a constantly diminishing purchasing power on the part of the farmers. I sometimes think that those who are not familiar with our vast agricultural sections fail to realize the great economic importance of this group in our population and the absolute necessity of restoring the purchasing power of that group, if we are ever to recover from the depression and to build that recovery upon a sound basis.

There are 6,000,000 farmers in the country who with their dependents make up 30,000,000 of our population directly dependent upon agriculture for their income and support. I think it is an underestimate to say that there are at least 30,000,000 more people in the country who are engaged in manufacturing, distributing, and selling products which the farmers buy. Thus we find that 60,000,000 people, or nearly half the population of the United States, are dependent either directly or indirectly upon the purchasing power of the agricultural industry.

Another economic trend which developed in the post-war period and contributed to the depression was a too liberal policy on the part of so-called "investment or international bankers" in the matter of foreign loans. Those loans produced a false or temporary demand for American products in the export trade. Industrialists and financiers in this country increased plant capacity to supply this demand because they failed to realize that the demand was temporary.

Another factor in causing the depression was the stock-market boom, which operated like a suction pump upon the agricultural and manufacturing regions of the country. It sucked the credit away from the farming and manufacturing centers and diverted it to New York, where it was used not for the purpose of financing the production, distribution, and sale of things which people can eat and wear and use, but it was taken to New York where it was used for a wasteful purpose, from the point of view of society. It was used for the purpose of financing speculation of brokers and others in mere slips of paper—stocks and bonds.

At the peak of the boom, in 1929, more than $8,000,000,000 had been drawn out of the Federal Reserve Banking System itself, taken around Robin Hood's barn, and shoved into the stock market, contrary, as I contended then and as I believe now, to the letter and spirit of the Federal Reserve Act. In addition, $8,000,000,000 from other sources was attracted by the high call-money rates to the stock exchange, so that at the peak of the boom $16,000,000,000 of the working capital, of the credit of the people of the United States, was being employed for the purpose of increasing the forced draft under the boiling caldron of the stock market.

This unprecedented boom turned the attention of responsible leaders of industry and finance away from the institutions for the management of which they had accepted responsibility. It concentrated their attention upon efforts to make quick, easy, paper profits for themselves. The revelations of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency demonstrate that many men who were paid huge salaries to devote their ability and integrity to the management of some of the largest financial and industrial institutions formed pools for the purpose of manipulating the prices of securities issued by the concerns which employed them. These men got in on the ground floor of these pools and manipulated the prices until they reached a fictitious value and then unloaded them upon unsuspecting investors.

Mr. Wiggin, for example, while at the head of the largest bank in the country, for the management of which he was paid $250,000 a year, took advantage of inside information, which came to him as the result of his position of trust, and unloaded stocks on the market which he knew in advance were going to depreciate rapidly in price. We find him in the midst of this crisis selling short the stock of his own bank in order to make a profit for himself and members of his family.

The public was drawn into the stock-market boom. Bad advice from bankers and from financial counselors who talked over the radio and received in one instance the exorbitant sum of $25 a week, encouraged investors to turn into cash their hard earned savings, at that time conservatively invested in gilt-edged securities, in order to buy stocks and bonds concerning which even these so-called "financial counselors" knew little or nothing.

As a result, when the crash came, it wiped out the reserves of millions of people who otherwise would have had those reserves not only to help carry them and their families through the depression but their combined purchasing power would have helped to carry the Nation through the crisis.

In the period from the war to the end of the boom purchasing power of the people on the farms and in the cities was constantly declining while at the same time, due to the improvement of industrial processes and the introduction of scientific agricultural methods, our ability to produce both manufactured and industrial products was constantly increasing.

I thought we had learned a lesson during these tragic years of depression. I believed it was acknowledged by nearly everyone that we could not maintain industry built on mass-production methods; I supposed it was universally recognized that we could not support agriculture developed on scientific lines unless at the same time the people had purchasing power with which to buy the products of the farm and factory. It appears from the debate upon this amendment, however, that some Senators question the soundness of this theory.

Mr. President, the Taylor Society of New York, a foremost scientific society in this country, sponsored a study of purchases by income groups in 1929, at the peak of the so-called "boom." They found that people with incomes of $1,000 a year or less purchased 17.7 percent of all the goods sold; that those with incomes of $1,000 to $2,000 purchased 36.4 percent of all the goods sold in 1929; that those with incomes from $2,000 to $3,000 purchased 13.1 percent of the goods sold; that those with incomes of $3,000 to $5,000 purchased 10.7 percent; that those with incomes of $5,000 and over purchased 22.1 percent.

In other words, Mr. President, according to this study, people with incomes of $5,000 or less in 1929 purchased 77.9 percent of all the goods sold, while those with incomes from $5,000 clear up to the top brackets of the income tax, purchased only 22.1 percent of all the goods sold.

The concentration of wealth fostered under the policy of laissez faire or of rugged individualism resulted in taking away the purchasing power of the great mass of the people of this country in relation to our increased capacity to produce goods. I could cite a number of statistics to show how far the process of concentration of wealth has developed, but instead I shall cite a simple illustration. I want to say, however, that it is sound; that it is just as sound as any estimate of that kind can be; for, although it is not sponsored or published by him, it is predicated upon the life-long studies of Dr. Willford I. King, of New York University, one of our recognized authorities upon distribution of wealth and income. This example also checks against the studies which have been made by the various brancnes of the Federal Government of this important question.

Suppose that $100 represents all the wealth of this country and its people. Suppose that 100 people represent all the people of the United States. If this $100, representing all of our wealth, is distributed among these 100 people, representing all the people of this country, as wealth is now distributed among our people, what is the result?

One individual would have $59; one individual would have $9; 22 people would have $1.22 each; and 76, or the rest, would have less than 7 cents apiece.

In a nutshell, this presents the problem that confronts the Congress and the Government of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. The figures that the Senator has quoted do not take into account that it is the class that would have the 7 cents apiece that owes the greatest pro rata of the debt.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not intend to go into the debt problem at this time.

Mr. LONG. I simply wanted to state that the facts are that when the debts are deducted from the wealth of the 76 per cent, they have not anything today on the basis of all fair computations. The 76 percent do not own a thing—not anything at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator has gone far enough. The 76 percent would all represent minus quantities.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. They would have less than nothing. They would all be in debt.

Mr. LONG. Every one of them has not a thing on earth.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I should like to have the Senator indicate when he is through with his remarks. I simply desire to make one observation about the matter he is discussing for the purpose of the record, because I think it will follow up very beautifully what he has said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so now, if he desires.

Mr. BONE. I do not desire to interrupt the chain of thought of the Senator. If he will be kind enough to indicate when he is through, I shall appreciate it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I know there are people in this country—and I do not question the sincerity of their motives—who argue that it is a good thing, from the point of view of the country as a whole, that we should permit these enormous fortunes and these enormous incomes to concentrate in the hands of a relatively small portion of the population. Their argument is that these surplus incomes are wisely expended by this small group of individuals, and that the expenditure produces employment. Mr. President, that argument does not stand analysis. It certainly does not stand analysis in an era of mass production and scientific agriculture.

The difficulty is that after a certain amount of income and of wealth have been accumulated, these individuals have an excess income sometimes called unexpendable income. It is unexpendable insofar as the purchase of the ordinary commodities produced on the farm or in the factory is concerned. After all, if a man has 12 or 13 suits of clothes, if he has 9 or 10 pairs of shoes, 35 or 40 suits of silk underwear, 100 pairs of socks, 200 shirts, 350 neckties, 8 or 9 top or overcoats, and 7 hats, we do not expect that individual to buy any more clothing or haberdashery in the near future. After a man has 3 or 4 houses—1 at Newport, R.I., let us say; 1 in Westchester County, N.Y., or on Long Island; 1 at Pinehurst, N.C., and another at Palm Beach, Fla.—we do not expect to see him in the office of an architect or a contractor getting plans and specifications for any more houses. After he has 5 or 6 high-priced, long-nosed automobiles, he finally discovers that he can ride in only one at a time; and, figuratively speaking, we no longer find him standing at the end of a belt-conveyor assembly line taking any more mass-production automobiles off the market. In other words, Mr. President, after the most exaggerated human desires for both the necessities and the so-called "luxuries" of life have been satisfied, there is, over and above that, a huge surplus income which the economists call unexpendable income.

I am perfectly willing to admit, for the sake of the argument, that some individuals enjoying these huge surplus incomes sit up all night trying to find ways and means of making a social and legitimate expenditure of that surplus income; but they are the rare exceptions. They are not the rule. Usually this surplus income is looking for a safe hiding place, and all too often it is invested in tax-exempt securities, where it escapes its fair share of the cost of government and the staggering cost of war under a graduated income tax.

From the beginning of this depression I have been convinced that we could not cure the economic ills afflicting this country by increasing the holdings of the individual in the illustration I gave a few minutes ago who has the $59. I have been as certain as a man can be of anything in this life that if we want to start the wheels of industry, if we want to see the wage earners of this country get a decent living wage, if we want to see the farmer and his family get a fair return upon their capital investment and their long hours of labor, if we want in the last analysis to see the business and professional man receive a fair return for the services he renders under our system, there is just one way to do it, and that is to restore the purchasing power of the group of 76 people in the illustration who have less than 7 cents apiece.

We do not need to worry about what these people will do with a restored purchasing power if and when they get it. We do not need to be concerned that they will invest it in tax-exempt securities. We do not need to be alarmed that they will be investing in foreign exchange or exporting their capital abroad. We know what they will do with it if and when they get it. We know that the next day they will be in the stores buying the things which they and their families so tragically need. We know that if they have not permanently lost their homes they will start payments on them again. They will start paying taxes again; and if they start soon enough perhaps they will save some of the cities—yes; some of the counties—yes; some of the States of this Union—from bankruptcy and a collapse of local government.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. Did not the Senator from Wisconsin hear it said when the C.W.A. started, and was it not generally reported, that this was the beginning of a decentralization of wealth, of a spreading of wealth among the masses?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not see such a statement in the press.

Mr. LONG. It was generally reported and generally commented upon editorially. I have, for instance, an article written by a gentleman named Durno, in what I believe they call the "Washington Whirligig" in some of the papers, that this was intended as the administration's beginning of the decentralizing of wealth, as reported in a speech made by our President in Chester, Pa., that this would have to be done in order to save the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a small group of Senators in this Chamber started a fight early in the depression for a program to restore the purchasing power of the people. If I may be permitted to say so, it always seemed to me that we had the best of the argument in support of that program. In spite of the evidence we presented to show the alarming depths of the depression, regardless of our efforts to adequately describe the suffering on the farms and in the cities, a majority of the Senate turned a deaf ear. We were always confronted with the statement that the depression would soon be over.

Perhaps it was not surprising that a majority of the Members of this body should reflect the point of view and the opinion of most of the industrialists and financiers of this country. I always felt that most of that group, Mr. President, were what might be called "round-the-corner" boys. They reminded me of a group of people on a toboggan going downhill about 60 miles an hour. Every time the toboggan would level out a little bit, or even poke its nose in the air before it started over the next slide these "round-the-corner" boys would say, "Ah, it's all over now", and—whoops, down would go the toboggan again.

They refused to recognize, Mr. President, that certain basic, fundamental, economic changes have taken place in this country since the last serious depression. Their eyes were closed to facts and to arguments. They had absolute faith that we would get out of the depression after we had been in it for a certain length of time.

One of the most fundamental changes that has taken place in this country is the fact that our frontier is closed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator leaves that subject he ought to add, it seems to me, that every time the people got out of a depression and when, as it is said, the level has been found again, it was true, as it always has been true throughout the history of the world, that fewer people owned the wealth of the country than owned it before.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for his observation.

Mr. President, the ever expanding frontier of this country has been in the depressions of the past the economic safety valve on the capitalistic system. Individuals wiped out in depressions of the past have always been able to move westward, take up more land, and make a new start on that frontier.

Furthermore, it was the expansion of the frontier which furnished the incentive to private capital to reinvest for capital-expenditure purposes. It was the expansion of the frontier which furnished the incentive for the investment of private capital for the construction of transcontinental railroads, to finance the building of the new agricultural communities growing up on the frontier, to finance the development and the building of cities.

Today, Mr. President, the frontier is closed. Some one has facetiously said, Any young man in this depression who took the advice of Horace Greeley to go West, in the first place would have to ride the brakebeams or thumb his way across the United States, and when he got to the edge of the frontier he would be very lucky if he got a job carrying a spear in the moving pictures in Hollywood.

The closing of the frontier in this country, together with the closing of frontiers in other countries, due to the rising tide of economic nationalism, is the most significant economic factor that confronts us today. There is no longer any substantial inducement for private capital to reinvest for capital-expenditure purposes. Oh, do not rise and tell me of a hotel or a railroad that can be bought for 20 cents on the dollar. I am not talking about that kind of reinvestment. I am discussing reinvestment of private capital for capital-expenditure purposes, and I say that with a few exceptions there is no inducement today for the reinvestment of private capital for capital-expenditure purposes.

If we had $10,000,000,000 on the table here this afternoon, I would challenge Senators to say where it could be reinvested by private investors for capital-expenditure purposes with the hope of getting a return upon the investment. Certainly they would not build any more transcontinental railroads. Certainly they would not finance the building of any more agricultural communities. Certainly they would not build any more steel plants. They would not build any more automobile factories. They would not build any more rubber plants. They would not put up any more textile mills.

I am convinced that it was the reinvestment of private capital for capital-expenditure purposes that pulled us out of the depressions of the past. I am convinced that the inducement to private capital to reinvest for capital-expenditure purposes has practically disappeared, due to the closing of the frontier of this country, and the closing of frontiers elsewhere. I have believed from the beginning of this depression that there was only one way we could break its back, and that was for the Federal Government, in conjunction with the municipalities, counties, and States, to provide the capital for capital-expenditure purposes, and to provide it upon a scale large enough to lift the level of economic activity in this country to the point where we would have a breathing space in which we might work out the absolutely essential, long-time program to remedy the situation confronting us in industry, in finance, and in agriculture.

I started to say a few moments ago, Mr. President, that a small group in this Chamber began fighting for such a program early in the depression. But we were defeated again and again. We were defeated by the sentiments to which I have referred, an adherence to the fetish that recovery would come of its own accord. We could not convince a majority of the Members of this body that we were turning in on our continental economy, and that we had to learn to run the greatest mechanism of production and distribution the world has ever seen if it was not to wreck civilization.

If I may be pardoned for saying so, people who hold this point of view in a highly integrated industrial and agricultural society, such as we have today, remind me of the story about the mother who did not want her son to go into the Aviation Service during the war. When he left her he promised that he would not, but after he got into the service he was very anxious to get into aviation, and he pulled all the wires he could and finally was assigned to an aviation training school. He wrote his mother about it. She was terribly hurt. She wrote back protesting, but she said, "Willie, since you have violated my request that you should not go into aviation, I have just two more requests to make of you, and I hope that you will not violate those. One is that when you get to flying you will fly very close to the ground, and the other is that you will fly very slowly." [Laughter.]

I am convinced that we cannot take the highly integrated mechanism of production and distribution in this country and fly it slowly and close to the ground without getting exactly the same results that young man would have gotten had he taken his mother's advice about flying the airplane. In other words, I do not believe that we can turn back the hands of the clock of industrial and agricultural progress 15 or 20 years without breaking the mainspring and stopping the clock.

Mr. President, those who believed that we could remedy a major economic crisis by letting it run its course had a chance to try out their theories in this country. They were in control from 1929 to 1933. While they were trying their theory of letting the depression cure itself, 15,000,000 unemployed had their purchasing power altogether taken away from them. Three and one half million families in that group went through the demoralizing, cruel, and inhumane process of pauperization, for under the relief system that prevailed until recently no individual in the United States could obtain relief for himself or for his family until he had demonstrated—indeed, until he had proved and his statements had been investigated—that he had lost his home, that he had given up his life insurance, that he had exhausted his savings in the bank, that he owed the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker and everybody else in town, that he had moved from one place to another until he was about to be evicted from the hovel which then sheltered him and his family. Then all he could get, until recently, was a grocery order to keep the bodies and souls of himself and his family together.

Mr. President, we shall be paying a staggering bill in an attempt to rehabilitate the adults in this group who have had their moral fiber torn asunder. In the future there will be a heavy burden for hospitalization and institutional care for the descendants of the undernourished children in this group—more than 3,000,000 of them—who have been warped in body if not in mind. While the theory was being tried of letting the depression run its course, 6,000,000 farmers and their dependents had their purchasing power greatly reduced or completely taken away from them, and hundreds of thousands in that group lost their farms and their homes—farms and homes which, in many instances, their parents or their grandparents had carved out of the wilderness almost with their bare hands.

Industrial production fell off 50 percent; credit was contracted $15,000,000,000 through bank failures; the annual income of the people was more than cut in half while the theory of letting the depression run its course was in vogue. The reinvestment of capital fell from $10,000,000,000 in 1929 to less than $600,000,000 in 1932.

Mr. President, with that experience staring in the face Senators who are responsible to their constituents and to the Nation as a whole, will they turn back now upon this program of attempting to restore purchasing power in this Nation? Are we to have another collapse because we refuse to learn the lesson of the years from 1929 to 1933?

Oh, I know some Senators will say, "We are going to be here until the 1st of next May; we can decide then whether or not we are going to need this additional sum." Do those Senators realize that, beginning tomorrow, 250,000 men who are now employed on civil works will be laid off every week until the 4,000,000 who are now engaged on such works will have been discharged, by the 1st of May? If Senators cannot be aroused by the human tragedies involved in pushing 4,000,000 men back onto relief, can I not appeal to them upon the basis of the disastrous effect on business if Civil Works are abandoned? What do Senators think will happen to the level of economic activity in the United States if we withdraw the expenditure of $70,000,000 a week?

Mr. President, Senators are once more beginning to talk as the "around-the-corner boys" talked from 1929 to 1933. What do they base that assumption on? Have they any statistics; have they any substantial proof? They have not produced a shred of evidence to support their argument for throwing 4,000,000 men out of work between now and the 1st of May. There is no basis for prediction that there will be such a sharp rise in industrial, agricultural, and public-works activity that 4,000,000 men, who are now employed upon civil works, may be absorbed into industry, into agriculture, and into public works.

The accepted statistical indices upon which the level of economic activity is judged do not indicate any such recovery as has been predicted by those who advocate the abandonment of civil works. I have before me the indexes of the Federal Reserve Board between July and December of 1933.

Industrial production reached the low of 1933 in March at 60. In July it was 100, in August 91, in September 84, in October 77, in November 73, and December 74.

The value of construction contracts awarded reached its low for 1933 in March and April, when it was at 13; in July it reached 21; in August, 24; in September, 30; in October, 37; in November, 48; and in December, 58.

Factory employment reached its low for 1933 in March at 57. It was 70 in July, 73 in August, 74 in September, 74 in October, 72 in November, and 72 in December.

Factory pay rolls were low for 1933 in March at 37. In July they were at 50; in August, 56; in September, 58; in October, 57; in November, 54; and in December, 53.

Freight-car loadings reached the low of 1933 in March at 50. In July they were 65; in August, 61; in September, 60; in October, 58; in November, 60; and in December, 62.

Department-store sales reached their low for 1933 in March at 57. In July they were 70; in August, 77; in September, 70; in October, 70; in November, 65; and in December, 69.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to insert this table in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOLIDGE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Federal Reserve Board indexes (adjusted, except factory pay rolls and commodity prices, for seasonal variation)

Annual averages				Index	1933
1929	1930	1931	1932		July	August	September	October	November	December	Low, 1933
119	96	81	64	Industrial production	100	91	84	77	73	74	[3] 60
119	95	80	63	Manufactures	101	91	84	76	71	73	[3] 56
115	99	84	71	Minerals	90	91	87	81	81	85	[4] 72
117	92	63	28	Value of construction contracts awarded	21	24	30	37	48	58	[3] [4] 14
101	88	74	62	Factory employment	70	73	74	74	72	72	[3] 57
108	87	66	45	Factory pay rolls	50	56	58	57	54	53	[3] 37
106	92	75	56	Freight-car loadings	65	61	60	58	60	[1] 62	[3] 50
----	----	----	69	Department-store sales	70	77	70	70	65	69	[3] 57
95	86	73	65	Commodity wholesale prices [2]	69	70	71	71	71	71	[3] [4] 60

[1] December decrease in freight-car loadings less than seasonal.
[2] Bureau of Labor Statistics: 1934, Jan. 6, 71.0; Jan. 13, 71.7; Jan. 20, 72.3; Jan. 27 72.4.
[3] March.
[4] April.
[5] February.
Base period: 1923–25, except for commodity prices (1926).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A casual perusal of these figures will demonstrate to any person that, generally speaking, all we have been able to do since this program of the administration got into operation in July, so far as these indices reflect economic activity, is to hold our own.

When the first legislation for unemployment relief was taken up in this body I pointed out at that time, and in each succeeding session, that the amount of money provided would prove to be inadequate. When the Public Works appropriation of $3,300,000,000 was under consideration, I endeavored to demonstrate that the sum was entirely inadequate to achieve the results which its advocates claimed. Unless the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico is adopted we shall run the risk of a most serious recession in economic and business activity in this country.

All that Civil Works has done thus far is to demonstrate the soundness of the theory of those who have been advocating a huge employment program.

Civil Works has proven that money pumped out at the bottom produces velocity and forces spending. Reports have come to me from many sections of the country indicating that the Civil Works program has practically arrested retail bankruptcies. In my opinion, it has been the chief prop which has supported the level of business activity during the winter months. I am convinced that if it is withdrawn at this time it will produce unfortunate results.

Senators must decide by their votes upon this amendment the question of whether or not we are to continue to hold the ground which has already been won in the struggle against the depression. From my point of view, we have taken altogether too little territory from the enemy; but I think every Senator is under a heavy responsibility when he casts his vote in favor of checking the offensive which has already been commenced against the depression.

I made a trip over this country in October and November. I visited some 12 States; and I assert that if it had not been for the inauguration of Civil Works the winter of 1933–34 would have been the worst winter this country has ever experienced.

Mr. President, in my opinion the Senator from New Mexico has very effectively disposed of the statements made by Mr. Hopkins in justification for a curtailment of this program. Any prediction that a million of the 4,000,000 men employed on civil works will be absorbed into agriculture this spring is based upon a refusal to face the facts insofar as the economic condition of that industry is concerned.

In the first place, there has been inaugurated a program for the curtailment of production and acreage under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Insofar as that program is successful, it will require less man power to plant, cultivate, and harvest the crops in those areas than it did last season. Insofar as the great dairy regions of this country are concerned, those farmers are in the worst economic plight of their entire existence. In my own State, which is a foremost dairy State, farmers who have fine farms and splendid herds are in such desperate straits that a very small number of persons will be employed upon those farms this spring and summer. The dairy farmers in my State, generally speaking, will plant, cultivate, and harvest the crops which they are able to handle with the labor of the family, because they are not in a position to pay out cash in the form of wages for agricultural labor.

Any prediction that there will be such a sharp increase in the activity of private business in the United States as to absorb a substantial number of those who are now employed on civil works is not predicated upon anything except hope. I should like to remind the Senate that those in positions of economic power and responsibility in the United States have been predicting in advance of every normal seasonal rise at 6 months' intervals since the depression began that there would be a large increase of activity, and each and every time we have been bitterly disappointed.

Senators have suggested that through the Public Works Administration, the commencement of activity upon projects already allocated, would absorb a large proportion of those who are now on civil works. However, the most optimistic estimates I have seen are that the Public Works projects would pick up about 500,000 men between now and the 1st of July.

These calculations take no account, however, of the six to seven million persons who have registered for Civil Works, and who have been unable to find jobs. For some unknown reason, many Senators in considering this problem apparently hold that only the 4,000,000 men who are now upon civil works are to be given any consideration. In the county in which I live in Wisconsin, before demobilization of Civil Works began, there were approximately 6,500 persons upon civil works; and at the same time there were approximately 18,500 persons who had registered for and were clamoring to be employed upon civil works.

In the States stretching across the United States from West Virginia to Wisconsin for every person employed upon civil works there are on the average three persons registered and unable to obtain employment.

Mr. President, if I could have my way about it, I would expand civil and public works until every person in the United States who wanted a job would be employed either upon civil and public works or in private industry due to the stimulus of public and civil works expenditures.

I know that some Senators may say, "Oh, but that would unbalance the Budget!" I am convinced that a budget cannot be balanced while the level of economic activity is sliding lower and lower. I sat up night after night for 10 days on the Finance Committee in 1932. The committee was looking around for taxes to balance the Budget. After strenuous labors a bill was reported to the Senate which was alleged to balance the Budget, and upon the estimates made by the Treasury as to the yield of those taxes it would have balanced the Budget; but the Budget was out of balance in September. Why? Because the level of economic activity had so rapidly declined that the estimates of the Treasury were proved to be exaggerated.

I agree with some of the great economists who contend that the only way in which a budget may be balanced during a slide is when we reach the theoretical zeros. At that point there is no more income, and therefore there is no more expenditure.

This crisis confronting our country is more serious than any war in all its history, and the economic, social, and political consequences of losing the war against the depression will be more devastating than the loss of any war, or of all the wars in which this country has been engaged since its establishment.

In 1917, Mr. President, what Senator would have dared to rise on the floor of the Senate and suggest that we could not fight the war against Germany and her allies because it would unbalance the Budget? The first thing we did during the war, Mr. President, was to unbalance the Budget $7,000,000,000 in the first few weeks.

It is unthinkable; but if war should be declared tomorrow by some country against the United States, would any Senator rise in his place in the Senate Chamber and say, "We cannot fight the war because it would unbalance the Budget"? If that unfortunate and unthinkable situation should develop, would anyone suggest that the Chief Executive should call in the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Budget to ascertain how much money could be had for the purpose of conducting the war which had been declared upon us? Of course not. The Chief Executive would call in the Chief of Staff and the Chief of Naval Operations, and he would ask them how much money was necessary in order to defend our country against the enemy; and when he had obtained that statement, he would turn to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Budget and say, "Gentlemen, here is a job in your technical field. Get the money, and get it quickly."

Mr. President, I think that we have been trying to balance the wrong budget in this country. The budget that I should like to see set up would list upon the asset side 125,000,000 people; it would list our natural resources, our oil, our coal, our lumber, our minerals; it would list our transportation system; it would list the great industrial mechanism that has been built up in this country, the greatest industrial mechanism that the world has ever seen; it would list our great agricultural resources.

On the other side of the ledger would be listed the obligation of any society and of any government worthy of the name to assure to every man, woman, and child a decent and a full life. If we will discharge that obligation, if we will balance this greater budget, we will put the operating budget into balance almost at once. Fail to balance it and we can go on with your cheese-paring methods on the regular Budget, but we will never balance it so long as the level of economic activity remains at its present point or goes lower.

This program of necessity requires a tax system which will produce sufficient revenue not to balance the Budget but to maintain Government credit. The tax issue has not been faced yet, but it must be faced, and I hope it will be faced by the Senate at this session of Congress.

We have reached the point, Mr. President, where we must ascertain whether those who give lip service to our present system are willing to pay the price to save it. We must ascertain whether those who have the biggest stake in saving this system are willing to contribute to the Government through graduated income and estate taxes a sufficient revenue to make it possible to carry on these collective expenditures until the war against depression has been won.

To vote down this amendment will bring despair to 4,000,000 men and their dependents who have been lifted up out of the slough of despond and given the chance to resume their places as respected citizens. The defeat of this amendment and the rapid abandonment of civil works which must follow will mean the end of an activity chiefly responsible for averting another collapse.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS—WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN ET AL.

During the delivery of Mr. LA FOLLETTE's speech,

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama for the purpose of enabling him to present an order prescribing the procedure tomorrow?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; I gladly yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, from the Special Committee to Investigate Air and Ocean Mail Contracts, I report the order which I send to the desk and which I ask the Senate to adopt. It has reference to the proceedings tomorrow in connection with the citations for contempt. I desire to state that the order has been carefully gone over by each individual member of the special committee, and has been unanimously approved by the committee. I request that the order be read, and I ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the order submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That in the matter of William P. MacCracken, Jr., L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, and Harris M. Hanshue, on an order to show cause, the mode of procedure and rules shall be as follows:

When the respondents shall present themselves at the bar of the Senate in obedience to the order of February 5, 1934, the Presiding Officer shall address them as follows:

"---------- ----------
"---------- ----------
"---------- ----------
"---------- ----------

"You have been brought before the Senate, by its order, to show cause why you should not be punished for contempt of the Senate on account of the destruction and removal of certain papers, files, and memoranda from the files of William P. MacCracken, Jr., after a subpena requiring the production of such papers, files, and memoranda had been served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown by the report of the Special Committee on Investigation of Air Mail and Ocean Mail Contracts."

The clerk shall then read Senate Report 254, Seventy-third Congress, second session, parts 1 and 2, submitted February 2 and 5, 1934, respectively, and Senate Resolution 172, agreed to February 5, 1934; after which the Presiding Officer shall address to each of the respondents the following question:

"Have you anything to say in excuse or extenuation of your connection with or participation in the matters described in such report and resolution?"

If the respondent shall answer, or fail to answer, they shall continue at the bar of the Senate until all the testimony in the proceedings (if any be adduced) shall be closed and then they shall retire while the Senate in closed executive session deliberates on the case; and when a decision is agreed upon the respondents shall, being previously notified of the time by the Sergeant at Arms or by a written notice left at their office or residence, appear at the bar of the Senate, in open session, and the Presiding Officer shall pronounce to them the decision.

The respondents shall be allowed the assistance of counsel while personally attending at the bar of the Senate, who, subject to the limitations hereinafter set forth, may be heard with respect to any matters charged against said respondents.

Counsel shall be limited to examination of respondents and other witnesses and to argument.

The respondents shall be permitted to summon such witnesses to testify to matters pertinent to the issue as the Senate may think proper.

Counsel for the respondents and members of the Special Committee on Investigation of Air Mail and Ocean Mail Contracts shall be permitted to question respondents and witnesses orally; but no question shall be put by or at the request of any Senator not a member of the committee until completion of the examination by counsel and members of the committee, or by counsel if a witness is called by the Senate, until completion of the examination by the members of the committee.

After the completion of such examination by counsel and the members of the committee, if a Senator other than a member of the committee wishes a question to be put to a respondent or witness the question shall be reduced to writing and put by the Presiding Officer, but if any question put or any testimony offered shall be objected to by any member of the committee or by counsel, the member of the committee or counsel so objecting shall be heard briefly thereon and counsel or any member of the committee shall be heard briefly in reply thereto, after which the matter shall be decided by the Presiding Officer without further debate, unless a Senator or counsel shall ask that a formal vote be taken thereon, in which case it shall be submitted to the Senate for decision; or the Presiding Officer may at his option in the first instance submit any such question to a vote of the Senate.

Counsel for the respondents and Members of the Senate shall, subject to the foregoing limitations, have full opportunity to examine, cross-examine, and reexamine any respondent or witness with respect to any matter raised by any question.

All testimony shall be taken on oath or affirmation.

In all particulars not covered by the foregoing, the proceedings shall be governed by the Standing Rules of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Alabama. At the beginning of the resolution, I observe that a portion of the proceedings are to be had in closed executive session. Would the Senator mind stating the reason for that procedure?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the evidence is to be taken in open session; the arguments are to be made in open session. The closed session to which the Senator refers is with reference to the deliberations of the Senate after the evidence has been given and the arguments have been heard.

The Senator will recall that this was the method which was followed in connection with the recent impeachment case, and, so far as I know, is the method that has been followed with reference to the deliberations of the Senate in connection with reaching a decision in such cases. That is the reason why it is suggested that this particular portion of the proceedings be held in closed session.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am not seeking to make any captious objection to the procedure that is suggested, but I did not understand the theory upon which a closed executive session was to be held. I take it, however, now, from what the Senator says, that it is merely for the deliberations subsequently of the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. It is exactly in line with the ordinary proceeding of a jury after the evidence has been given and the argument has been heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not going to object or even vote against the proposal. The question I wanted to ask the Senator from Alabama has already been asked by the Senator from California. I only had that in view.

I believe a mistake is being made. I think the deliberations of the Senate ought to be in the open. I think it will demand more respect and more consideration from the people of the country if all our deliberations are in the open. Unless there is some very good reason to the contrary, I hope the Senator from Alabama will change the order in that respect, although if he does not feel authorized to do so by reason of the action of the committee I shall make no further objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, taking note of what has just been said by the Senator from Nebraska, I desire to express my opinion that the Senate special committee has acted wisely in incorporating in its order of procedure the provision referred to. If, after the evidence has been submitted and the arguments have been heard, 96 Senators proceed in open session to deliberate upon a decision, there will result, in my judgment, such confusion as will occasion delay and embarrassment and tend to prevent the successful conclusion of the deliberations of the Senate.

It is not contemplated that there shall be any proceedings in closed executive session, except insofar as they relate to the efforts of the Senators, 96 in number, to agree upon a conclusion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask whether the Senator contemplates that after deliberation in executive session the Senate would then go into open session for the purpose of registering its decision?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, certainly. That is the provision in the order.

Mr. JOHNSON rose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The only proceedings in closed session, as contemplated by the arrangement, have reference to the deliberations of the Senate. If a jury, or, for that matter, a board of arbitration, in attempting to reach a conclusion, should hold their proceedings in open session, there would undoubtedly be influences brought to bear to stimulate obstructions which might prevent agreement.

I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was merely going to ask the Senator—and he answered it in the latter part of his statement—if he likened the proceedings to one of trial by jury, where the jury retire and in executive session determine their verdict.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, exactly; and that is the sole effect of the provision in the order to be entered relating to the proceedings of the Senate. All other proceedings are in the open, and properly so. Full opportunity is given not only to representatives of the respondents to ask any questions they desire but also to Senators generally after the members of the committee have had the opportunity of submitting their questions. The reason for that provision suggests itself. It is to avoid the confusion which inevitably arises when a large number of Senators seek to obtain the floor at the same time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the entering of the order?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to be heard briefly, not with the intention of trying to change any votes, but for the purpose of leaving the record——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if this is going to lead to any extended debate, I would prefer that the Senator from Alabama should take up the matter when I shall have concluded my remarks.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not understand that the Senator from Nebraska expects to prolong the debate.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be very happy to hear the Senator on the subject, but I would like to conclude my remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. I will simply say, then, that I am still not convinced—and I believe I can convince any honest man if I had the opportunity to do so—that the proceedings ought to be in the open all the way through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

PRICES AND MARKETING OF SUGAR (H.DOC. NO. 246)

After the conclusion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S speech,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress:

Steadily increasing sugar production in the continental United States and in insular regions has created a price and marketing situation prejudicial to virtually everyone interested. Farmers in many areas are threatened with low prices for their beets and cane, and Cuban purchases of our goods have dwindled steadily as her shipments of sugar to this country have declined.

There is a school of thought which believes that sugar ought to be on the free list. This belief is based on the high cost of sugar to the American consuming public.

The annual gross value of the sugar crop to American beet and cane growers is approximately $60,000,000. Those who believe in the free importation of sugar say that the 2 cents a pound tariff is levied mostly to protect this $60,000,000 crop and that it costs our consuming public every year more than $200,000,000 to afford this protection.

I do not at this time recommend placing sugar on the free list. I feel that we ought first to try out a system of quotas with the threefold object of keeping down the price of sugar to consumers, of providing for the retention of beet and cane farming within our continental limits, and also to provide against further expansion of this necessarily expensive industry.

Consumers have not benefited from the disorganized state of sugar production here and in the insular regions. Both the import tariff and cost of distribution, which together account for the major portion of the consumers' price for sugar, have remained relatively constant during the past 3 years.

This situation clearly calls for remedial action. I believe that we can increase the returns to our own farmers, contribute to the economic rehabilitation of Cuba, provide adequate quotas for the Philippines, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and at the same time prevent higher prices to our own consumers.

The problem is difficult but can be solved if it is met squarely and if small temporary gains are sacrificed to ultimate general advantage.

The objective may be attained most readily through amendment of existing legislation. The Agricultural Adjustment Act should be amended to make sugar beets and sugar cane basic agricultural commodities. It then will be possible to collect a processing tax on sugar, the proceeds of which will be used to compensate farmers for holding their production to the quota level. A tax of less than one-half cent per pound would provide sufficient funds.

Consumers need not and should not bear this tax. It is already within the Executive power to reduce the sugar tariff by an amount equal to the tax. In order to make certain that American consumers shall not bear an increased price due to this tax, Congress should provide that the rate of the processing tax shall in no event exceed the amount by which the tariff on sugar is reduced below the present rate of import duty.

By further amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Secretary of Agriculture should be given authority to license refiners, importers, and handlers to buy and sell sugar from the various producing areas only in the proportion which recent marketings of such areas bear to total United States consumption. The average marketings of the past 3 years provide on the whole an equitable base, but the base period should be flexible enough to allow slight adjustments as between certain producing areas.

The use of such a base would allow approximately the following preliminary and temporary quotas:

	Short tons
Continental beets	1,450,000
Louisiana and Florida	260,000
Hawaii	935,000
Puerto Rico	821,000
Philippine Islands	1,037,000
Cuba	1,944,000
Virgin Islands	5,000
	6,452,000

The application of such quotas would immediately adjust market supplies to consumption, and would provide a basis for reduction of production to the needs of the United States market.

Furthermore, in the negotiations for a new treaty between the United States and Cuba to replace the existing commercial convention, which negotiations are to be resumed immediately, favorable consideration will be given to an increase in the existing preferential on Cuban sugars, to an extent compatible with the joint interests of the two countries.

In addition to action made possible by such legislative and treaty changes, the Secretary of Agriculture already has authority to enter into codes and marketing agreements with manufacturers which would permit savings in manufacturing and distributing costs. If any agreements or codes are entered into, they should be in such form as to assure that producers and consumers share in the resulting savings.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Chair that when the bill referred to in the President's message was before the Senate, on my motion sugar was put into the bill, and on the motion of the administration's spokesman it was taken out. I want to congratulate the administration on its wisdom in following my suggestion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in order that the record may be kept straight, I would like to call attention to the fact that sugar was put in the bill on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN].

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I made that motion. Then I still congratulate the President of the United States in adopting the wise course suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Washington desire me to yield to him?

Mr. BONE. If he will, Mr. President.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator wish to ask me a question?

Mr. BONE. I do not wish to ask the Senator a question. I desire to occupy the floor for a moment.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will yield.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I shall endeavor to be very brief. I presume to take this time because of the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin, who has touched upon some matters that have engaged my attention during the last few days. His ability and his eloquence and his willingness to realistically face and offer some sane and wholesome remedies for the somber and tragic problems that confront the American people today excites my liveliest admiration.

The American Federation of Labor, various Government agencies, Standard Statistics, and other organizations which make it their business to provide accurate information have given us some figures on real wages and the economic conditions confronting the American people which have led to this plunge into the miserable economic abyss the Senator has so vividly described. I want to add these figures to what the Senator has said—not because I believe that they are of necessity a contribution, but to those who read the remarks of Senator LA FOLLETTE I am sure these figures will be illuminating.

Real wages from 1921 to 1929 increased 13 percent. Returns to industry in this period increased 72 percent. Dividends to stockholders increased 265 percent.

In 1922 all corporations in this country paid $930,648,000 in dividends. In 1929 they paid $3,478,000,000 in dividends.

In 1922 they paid in interest $2,469,000,000. In 1929 they paid in interest $7,588,000,000.

In 1923 the value of manufactured products was over $60,500,000,000. In 1925 the value of the same products had risen to $62,700,000,000. In 1929 the value of manufactured products had risen to $69,400,000,000.

The interesting thing is that during this period there was no equivalent increase in the total volume of wages paid.

In 1928, the peak year for the production of wealth, $32,235,000,000 was paid in wages. This was $649,000,000 less than in the year 1927.

The number of employees in manufacturing establishments has been steadily lowering, while the annual production of wealth has been enormously increasing, in the manner indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin. Some of the figures I have supplied are from Government departments.

In 1922 the total income of people of the United States was computed at $65,925,000,000. In 1928 it was computed at $89,419,000,000. Those figures are a rough approximation from Government sources.

In 1922 the total volume of wages was $24,553,000,000. In 1928 it was $32,235,000,000.

In this period the total annual income had increased $23,494,000,000, while the total volume of wages had increased $7,682,000,000.

The spread between national income and total wages reveals starkly one of the major causes of this depression.

In 1929 the net income of 504 men in this country was more than the total gross income of 2,332,000 farmers, who raised all of the wheat and cotton of the Nation. Those figures were referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in a speech which he made shortly after the figures were made available. They are a challenge to every citizen of the Republic.

In 1921 wage earners and salaried workers received 55.02 percent of the national income. By 1928 this had shrunk to 36.01 percent of the national income.

From 1923 to 1929 industrial production increased about $9,000,000,000. During this period wages increased $421,000,000, while, as I have said, industrial production had increased $9,000,000,000. For every additional $18 that industry received, this industrial machine graciously allowed labor to keep one additional dollar. The Departments of Commerce and Labor gave out these remarkable figures.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to repeat the last statement.

Mr. BONE. From 1923 to 1929 industrial production increased about $9,000,000,000. During this period wages increased $421,000,000. For every additional $18 that industry received during that period, our industrial machine, as I indicated, graciously allowed labor to receive one additional dollar out of the $18.

Five hundred and fifty corporations, as appears from some figures made public a couple of years ago, do approximately 80 percent of the Nation's business in dollars and cents turnover. In 1929 they paid to security holders the sum of $2,368,000,000, and in 1930 they paid to security holders $1,886,000,000, or a loss from 1929 of $482,000,000. This was an 18 percent loss to the security holders. In the same period, however, we find wage workers and salaried workers receiving $51,000,000,000 in 1929 and only $34,000,000,000 in 1930, a loss of 33 percent. The loss to labor was $17,000,000,000, against less than half a billion dollars to industry.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has made a remarkable comparison to which I want to refer for a moment. The Senator pointed out that the wealth of this Nation might be likened to five apples and the population of this great country of ours to 100 people. As presently distributed, 4 very rich people have 1 apple apiece, while the remaining 96 people have 1 apple amongst the 96. Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, used a similar comparison.

I contribute these figures to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin because I think it is time that the American people comprehend not only the condition that confronts them but how swift has been the descent into the economic abyss of national poverty. Yet there is no occasion for it. Had we taken an inventory of all the wealth in this country in 1928 and 1929, and counted the miles of railroad lines, the number of factories, and everything else that labor and man's genius can create, we would find the same wealth here now, the same factories, the same potentialities for the production of all the things that make life sweet and happy—rugs, radios, automobiles, food, clothing, shelter. There is something terribly wrong with an economic system that dooms millions to poverty in the midst of plenty. The thing that the Senator from Wisconsin pointed out, the terrifically rapid concentration of national wealth into the hands of a few, tells the story. There is no other answer to this terrifying riddle. Senator after Senator has called attention to this trend, which spells national disaster if not checked. With a little of that spirit which animated our sires when they went out to conquer the wilderness, when they bared their breasts to the bullets of the enemies of the infant Republic, we should meet this frightful challenge to the firesides of America.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment now pending, but principally for this reason: If the administration desires to hold out the hope that $950,000,000 will be sufficient, and that when that sum shall have been exhausted there will be such an economic recovery in this land that it will not be required to appropriate additional money, I think we ought not to destroy that hope by adding to the sum the large amount suggested by the Senator from New Mexico. I have no doubt, however, that if the present session of Congress shall last until the first of May an additional appropriation will be suggested to the Congress, and I should not be surprised if it should not reach the figure suggested by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, I am only going to occupy a few moments, and I am not going to discuss this question in detail. I was interested in the first amendment that was adopted today, which was proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, who has the pending bill in charge. My remarks about this bill yesterday were a mere incident in the effort to show that the Congress had made a mistake in turning this kind of an undertaking over to the Executive. I insisted then, and I insist now, that it is a work for the Congress, and I expressed the hope that if Congress would seriously consider it, it would be able to find a remedy that would be more effective and one that would not last throughout the coming years.

I particularly criticized some of the projects which I knew had been approved in connection with the expenditure of this fund. The Senator from Tennessee objected to the amendment to which I have referred because, he said:

> The committee thought under the circumstances, and inasmuch as this work is being furnished purely for the benefit of the recipients, that it was not right to saddle upon the Government a large and perhaps perpetual compensation allowance.

The point I undertook to make yesterday was that what we were doing was purely for the benefit of the recipients and it was not a constructive work that would be helpful to the Government in the future.

Later the Senator showed that:

> About $14,000,000 have been paid out for compensation to persons who were injured. Mr. Hopkins thought this should be continued, but the committee did not agree with him. The committee thought that the furnishing of employment under the circumstances ought to be sufficient, and that otherwise a large pension roll would be built up. It was thought that $21,000,000 would be required to pay for those injured, and if that sum was set aside it would not be spent for unemployment purposes.

To my mind there can be no good reason why those persons who are compelled to go to a particular job in order to get a particular check from the Government at the end of the week should be deprived of some compensation if they should get their legs cut off while going to that job. Having that point in mind, I propose to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks a suggested amendment, which I ask the Senator in charge of the bill seriously to consider.

I may add that it may not be very carefully drawn, but I shall endeavor to make plain the purpose I have in presenting it.

After the word "designated", in line 9, add the following:

> Provided further, That no direct payments shall be made to any employees by the Federal Government unless such employee be engaged on a Federal project.

The Senator from Tennessee called our attention yesterday to the fact that out of the 4,000,000 men put to work 2,600,000 are working on Federal projects, leaving 1,400,000 on other projects. What I particularly complain about is that the Federal Government is paying out its own money by its own checks to persons who are not engaged on Federal projects.

I propose to follow the amendment I have just indicated by this additional paragraph:

> Provided further, That any and all moneys paid to the States or municipalities under this act shall be free of any Federal regulation with respect to the rate of pay or the particular use to which such money may be applied by such States or municipalities.

I hope the Senator from Tennessee in particular will believe me when I say that I am suggesting the amendment in an effort to help in the situation which confronts us, because I realize, as I said yesterday, that the Federal Government cannot permit people to go hungry and cold, and something must be done about that.

It seems to me, however, if we will undertake to let the Government itself control Federal projects, finding as many such projects as it can and putting as many people to work on them as can be thus put to work in any aspect that might be called economical—in other words, there may be similar projects which under normal conditions one would not think of spending Federal money on; but in order that we might find jobs for the unemployed, I should be perfectly willing to see the Federal Government enter upon Federal projects which otherwise it would not think of undertaking—when we have found as many as we can, let us stop there; and if additional money is necessary, as it is, let us turn that additional money over to the States and let the States be entirely responsible for what they do with it. If they can find jobs within their own States or municipalities, let them find them and use the money for that purpose, because the unemployed of this land would rather work for their pay than to be on a dole. Let us put it up to the municipality or the State to find jobs for their people. Then if they want to employ manicurists, as I pointed out yesterday, or if they want to do what the Herald Tribune called to our attention today that is taking place in Baltimore—300 people having been employed with 50,000 traps to catch rats in the city of Baltimore—let them go ahead and do it. But I say the psychology of the Government being engaged in that kind of business, employing people for that kind of work, is not good psychology. However, if Baltimore City wants to get rid of its rats, they might take the Government money and use it for that purpose without the same kind of complaint resulting.

The same principle applies as to many of these projects. For instance, it applies to the project suggested yesterday by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. If the school teachers of the country are to receive Federal pay, who in this Chamber doubts that the States who control the educational institutions ought to say who shall be employed, how much money shall be paid to them, and to what extent they shall use Federal money for that purpose?

Another thing that would be cured by the amendment is this. In some of the States, particularly in the South—and I was there during the holidays and heard the experiences of many people there—there are being employed on C.W.A. jobs men at 40 cents an hour who are being taken away from the farmers, because the farmers cannot afford to pay 40 cents an hour. If we take the situation in South Carolina and leave to South Carolina the wage scale to be fixed, and let the money which goes from the Federal Government to that State go as far as it will, we will not be responsible for whether they pay 40 cents an hour or 30 cents an hour.

What business is it of the Federal Government to undertake to control the pay on an individual job that is for the benefit of the State or one of its municipalities? If they have to have Federal help, let us give it to them by turning the money over to them. If there is to be a scandal with reference to that money, it would be a State scandal or a municipal scandal, and not a Federal scandal. That is what I think we ought to do. I think this simple amendment will cure a lot of complaints about the bill.

I hope, if I have made myself clear, that the Senator in charge of the bill will seriously consider the proposal, because it is offered seriously.

Mr. McKELLAR. The adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] this morning will put all of that matter in conference. I am sure the conferees will be glad to give it serious consideration.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I be permitted just a further word? The opposition which the Senator from Tennessee offers—and there is some reason in the opposition—is because these jobs are not Federal jobs. When we come to consider that and find that a person has been sent out to do some trivial thing in order to give him employment which is for the benefit of some city or county and in no sense is a Federal project, we are inclined to think that that particular person, if injured while doing that particular work, ought not to be permitted to make a claim against the Federal Government for compensation—that that burden ought not to be loaded upon the Federal Government. If that may be separated, as I have suggested, and let the Federal projects stand upon their own base, and then turn over to the States and municipalities the money which it is necessary for us to give them, I think we will have a very orderly distribution of the fund.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HASTINGS to the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, is as follows:

> After the word "designate", in line 9, add the following:
> "Provided further, That no direct payments shall be made to any employee by the Federal Government unless such employee be engaged on a Federal project:

"Provided further, That any and all moneys paid to the States or municipalities under this act shall be free of any Federal regulation with respect to the rate of pay or the particular use to which such money may be applied by such States or muncipalities."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I propose to support the amendment which seeks to increase the amount to be appropriated by the bill. I propose, as briefly as possible, to give my reasons for supporting the amendment attempting to increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. President, since the advent of the present administration we have been realistic and resourceful and generous in the face of depression. Are we going to fall short when victory is within our grasp? Are we going to suffer a relapse because of the very failure to face the facts, which was our greatest handicap during the first years of our economic calamity?

What are these facts? What bearing do they have upon the adequacy of the $950,000,000 appropriation for the Civil Works and Emergency Relief Administrations which is now being considered by the Senate? I propose to review the accomplishments of these agencies and to explain my conviction that they should receive far greater additional support than is provided in the present bill. They ought to receive an additional appropriation as incorporated in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

The very first task that we faced in March was to provide food and shelter for the idle who could not secure jobs. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration, invested with half a billion dollars, has been spending $60,000,000 a month to protect the desolate from complete annihilation. The 21,000,000 people dependent upon relief rolls in March were reduced to 15,000,000 even before the inauguration of the Civil Works plan. Thus, in addition to those still on the rolls, several million people who otherwise might have perished were sustained and encouraged until they secured employment.

The Relief Administration has done more than merely to ferret out the neediest cases with an eagle eye and to extend aid with the minimum of delay and waste. It has displayed incessant ingenuity in raising standards of service above the level of the dole. One example has been the promotion and support of adult education to restore the shaken morale of the idle until the day of revival. Another example has been the marked attention shown to classes who were in greatest danger of neglect. Innumerable transients whose very efforts in search of work had branded them with the stigma of the shiftless have been transported to home localities where there are no preferences operating against them. Key cities all over the country have been designated to assist in this work.

A matching policy has been developed which forces the States to bear their fair share of responsibilty, but it has not neglected to deal charitably with the States that have suffered too much to help themselves.

The Federal Surplus Relief Corporation has been the medium for a doubly useful expenditure of relief funds. The purchase of supplies direct from producers has relieved centers of overproduction, while effecting great economies in securing goods for the needy. The shipments of foodstuffs alone aggregated over 114,000,000 pounds by the end of December, including salt pork, smoked pork, butter, flour, dried apples, and beans. Quantities of surplus coal have been absorbed in similar fashion.

Despite the irreproachable handling of the money at its command, it became obvious by last November that the Relief Administration could not meet the needs of the times. With 15,000,000 people still depending upon it for aid, its resources had become so depleted that only $7 per person remained, with the long winter approaching; and there was the certainty of additional applications. Despite 5,000,000 workers reengaged under the Public Works and Recovery Act programs, there were still 10,000,000 unemployed, representing, with their families, 40 percent of our population.

For these reasons, the Civil Works program was inaugurated. The best cure for unemployment is employment. Utilizing $400,000,000 drawn from the Public Works fund and $100,000,000 from emergency relief, a tremendous volume of useful projects is being pushed forward, and resulted in the reemployment of 4,150,000 people before the new year.

These Civil Works enterprises throw into bold relief the tragic social waste that was involved in permitting large masses of people to remain needlessly idle. Most of the present activity is in the field of small-scale improvements which do not require the elaborate planning of the larger projects under the Public Works Administration. These include the repair of public buildings, town halls, and schools, the construction of feeder roads and bridges, and the paving of streets. Sanitation plays a large part, especially water works, sewers, and power plants. Experience has shown that even in normal times private industry cannot be relied upon to promote outdoor recreational facilities for people of moderate means; and the present opportunity is being seized to develop parks and playgrounds, swimming pools, band stands, and boathouses.

One of the prime defects in our earlier efforts to provide relief was the neglect of the millions of white-collar workers who have suffered as much as any other group during the past 4 years. In addition to the hardships thus imposed upon these people, the whole Nation lost because of the failure to capitalize their capacity for a wide range of useful services. I desire to relate the progress which the Civil Works program has made in promoting projects to remedy this oversight.

To improve our transportation facilities, a Nation-wide body of aeronautic advisers has been appointed to plan and approve a network of airports as a Civil Works project.

Scientific work and the conservation of natural resources are being extended. The Department of the Interior is undertaking a photo-mapping survey of 40,000 square miles in the South. The Department of Agriculture is conducting one study of land utilization and another of gypsy-moth extermination. Dairy experimental stations are receiving assistance. Mine fires are being extinguished, and abandoned coal mines are being sealed.

It would be a grievous oversight if this depression were allowed to pass without our making careful studies of its economic characteristics in order that we may be better prepared for coping with the hazards of the future. With the aid of Civil Works funds the Federal Coordinator of Railroads is commencing a study of employment and earnings of 300,000 railway employees on class A roads. The results will be of incalculable value to the Congress in connection with pension and unemployment insurance legislation.

Again, with the aid of C.W.A. funds, the Bureau of Labor Statistics is conducting a study of the effects of the Public Works program and other recent legislation upon employment and economic conditions generally. In addition, it is improving its surveys of nonmanufacturing industries. The Bureau of the Census is conducting a careful analysis of the problem of tax delinquencies. The Department of Agriculture is making a study of farm housing in order to determine rural needs and to investigate the feasibility of promoting farm-home financing.

Clerical, academic, and artistic positions are being created for sorely neglected groups. Some funds are devoted to the employment of teachers and the cataloging and classifying of the treasures of our public libraries. Two thousand five hundred artists have been engaged to embellish public buildings and to preserve on canvas and in stone the record of one of the most dramatic periods in our history. Records are being made of the historic buildings in all the States, involving the employment of architects, draftsmen, clerks, and stenographers.

For the first time the unemployed woman is receiving proper attention. By the end of 1933, 150,000 women had been engaged for Civil Works projects, including library work, indexing, social surveys, nursing, and clerical tasks.

A national safety campaign in cooperation with State agencies has been inaugurated to promote the safety of inexperienced men engaged in new kinds of industrial activity, and to study traffic accidents and the various proposals for safeguarding human life.

Of course, there have been some wastes involved in the Civil Works program; but these are not the fault of the program. They are the result of our failure to plan during times of prosperity. The Civil Works idea is directly in line with the Public Works remedy that I have advanced for years; namely, that governmental activity should be expanded in times of stress to take up the slack in private industry. Such expansion can move along smoothly only if a completed list of worthwhile projects have been prepared in advance. In this way alone can human values be preserved and the productive capacities of the Nation be utilized without interruption.

The Civil Works Administration is profiting by experience. It is making every effort to adapt its policies to national needs. I desire to quote from the testimony of Mr. Hopkins before the House subcommittee. He said:

> It had been a job which we have tried to do with integrity. It has been a job which we have tried to do with intelligence. We have tried to do it realistically. We have tried to do it in the interest of the unemployed. And when we think of our rules and regulations and administrative policies, we think of almost 7,000,000 families that will get benefits either through the Relief Administration or through the Civil Works. That represents twenty-five or thirty million people in America. These people are important. We are their servants. This thing is a public trust which we take very, very seriously. We know we have made mistakes, but these mistakes have been made as honest mistakes of judgment.

This variegated Civil Works program has been subjected to criticism on the ground that its high standards have a dislocating effect upon private industry. Most of this criticism is voiced by those who regard the program as a dole to the unemployed. As a matter of fact, the administration has tried to apply every canon of economic efficiency, both as to the types of projects which it sanctions and the qualifications of the people whom it employs. Furthermore, the undertakings for the most part are not of the type which compete with private industry. They are public-service enterprises, which have always had to await the interest of public bodies, for they have a low capacity for yielding private profit and a high social value to the community as a whole. I do not understand how four and a half million people who are building up the wealth of the Nation by productive effort and spending half a billion dollars in a quarter of a year for consumer goods can be as great a strain upon our economic revival as four and a half million people suffering from enforced idleness, decaying physically and temperamentally, and with almost no wage receipts to pour into the channels of trade.

At the present time there is wide-spread acceptance of the need for continuing the Civil Works and the Emergency Relief programs. The former is necessary to provide jobs for those who want to work. The latter must be used to care for those who have become disabled by destitution or who suffer from irremediable handicaps. The only real question is, How much additional funds need to be appropriated?

Let us begin by considering the employment situation. In March 1933, 15,000,000 people were without jobs. No one could claim that more than 4,000,000 of these have been directed since then into the normal channels of industry, commerce, and agriculture. About 1,000,000 men are engaged in the Public Works program. This means that today there are at least 10,000,000 workers who must be cared for either by charity or by work financed through the use of public funds.

Private industry cannot make room for these people as fast as it has made room for others during the past 8 months. A large part of reemployment has been due to the shortening of hours. Obviously, there are limits to the amount of relief that can be afforded by this device; though I believe that hours should be even shorter than they are. In addition, simple common sense tells us that the closer industry gets to normal running speed, the harder it will be to take on additional men. It is much easier to raise employment in industry from 60 to 70 percent of normal than it is to raise it from 70 to 80 percent of normal.

These hypotheses are confirmed by statistics. The index of employment in manufacturing rose from 55 in March to 70 in December, a gain of almost 30 percent. But during the last 3 months there has been no appreciable gain, and the most reliable estimates seem to indicate a slight recession. This recession, of course, is seasonal, and we may expect a considerable pick-up with the coming of spring. But almost no one would claim that more than 3,000,000 people are likely to be reemployed in industry between now and the beginning of 1935. According to liberal estimates, another million may be added through the operation of the Public Works program.

If these sanguine predictions are justified, there will be 6,000,000 workers dependent upon public relief or public employment at the end of the year, compared with 10,000,000 today.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I did not catch those figures. There were 6,000,000 unemployed at what time?

Mr. WAGNER. During the year; at the present time. That is, there would be 10,000,000 unemployed except for the Civil Works program, which has absorbed 4,000,000 people. If we abandon the Public Works program and demobilize, we will have 10,000,000 unemployed. If industry, during the next short period of time, out of that 10,000,000 absorbs 3,000,000 and public works 1,000,000, there will still be 6,000,000 people unemployed, and to be cared for by some sort of relief.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course not.

Mr. BORAH. I am at a loss to understand, under the circumstances, considering the facts and the figures the Senator has given, and others which we have had given us today, why the able Administrator of the C.W.A. is satisfied with $950,000,000. I have been reading his statement, and I hesitate to vote to give a man more money than he wants, and he says that that is all he needs.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am trying to convince the Senator that, whether he wants more or not, he needs more, if we are to take care of the unemployed, and if we are to avoid another recession and a possible economic catastrophe.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is presenting a very strong argument, but it is puzzling to me why so able an Administrator as Mr. Hopkins, who certainly must be more familiar with this matter than most of us can possibly be, is presenting a bill here in the amount represented by the figures in the measure before us. I am disposed to vote with Mr. Hopkins, because of the fact that I believe in his ability. I know he is familiar with the subject, and I do not want to crowd upon a man more money than he thinks he needs to take care of the job. The Senator is presenting figures which tend to make one doubt that Mr. Hopkins knows his job.

Mr. WAGNER. I would not say that. I regard these figures as inexorable. They are there.

Mr. BORAH. What could be the object of presenting a bill here for this amount if it is not going to meet the task? Certainly Mr. Hopkins must know what the task is.

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot speak for Mr. Hopkins on that score. It may be that he is more optimistic than some of the rest of us as to the number who will be absorbed by the revival of private industry or in the prosecution of the Public Works program or through employment upon the farms. I cannot see any other answer to it except that he indulges in an optimism which I cannot share with him.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. If we average these figures which I have just mentioned over the entire period, we will get a mean figure during the year of 8,000,000 people to be cared for from public funds. What portion of these people will be dependent upon Federal aid? Mr. Hopkins, on the basis of an experience that cannot be questioned, has testified that about 62 percent of all public relief and employment must be furnished by the Federal Government.

I would like to have the Senator from Idaho listen to this testimony given by Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. Hopkins said that, on the basis of his own experience, about 62 percent of all public relief must be furnished by the Federal Government. He shows that, while the State appropriations are increasing slightly, those of the municipalities are falling off to an equal extent. Thus almost 5,000,000 working people must rely for some period of time upon Federal action. These constitute with their families, almost 25,000,000 people, or one fifth of our total population.

Mr. BORAH. Does that statement appear in the hearings?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; it appears in the hearings. To continue:

What funds are available to provide these 25,000,000 people with a livelihood? The Federal Emergency Relief Administration has less than $50,000,000 left, and the Civil Works Administration less than $150,000,000. If we add to these sums the appropriation proposed by the present bill, we get a total of $1,100,000,000. Is this sufficient even for the 10 months that must elapse before the next opening of Congress? It amounts to $110,000,000 per month. It means $22 per month for each of the 5,000,000 workers to whom I have referred. It means about $5 per week for each family of five persons. It means $1 a week for each individual. How much food, clothing, shelter, and medical care can this sum provide?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. If we follow the logic of the Senator, how long would this $2,500,000,000 last. It would not last until Congress reconvenes next year, would it?

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I believe it would. Those of us who have been making the estimate believe that it would last until about the end of November of this year, and allowing for some tapering off, and taking the view that we are a little too pessimistic, and that those on the other side are a little too optimistic, we will get a mean that will take care of this work to the end of the year by appropriating $2,500,000,000.

This question I have just propounded must bring a deep sadness to every listener with average powers of imagination and normal tenderness of feeling. To those of us who have the power not only to feel and to think, but also to act and relieve, there must come a determination not to be satisfied with the present proposals.

Whatever qualms we might feel about more extensive action will be removed by a survey of those who need our aid.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. As the Congress will not be able to return here until January, why is a sum provided for that will run the work only until November?

Mr. WAGNER. As I said before, taking our pessimistic view as the rock bottom, and the other side's optimistic view as the top, we get an average, and based on that average I think I can say that the Civil Works program may be prosecuted to the first of the year and reasonably take care of those in need of our aid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has not the Senator confidence in Mr. Hopkins and his management of the proposed plan?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. That is the reason I am willing to give him this additional fund, and I know that he will not spend it unless it is needed to aid the unemployed and to feed and shelter the destitute.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Hopkins does not ask for it, and he proposes a plan. I think inasmuch as it has been intrusted to Mr. Hopkins, and he has made a splendid job of it, that the rest of us might have some confidence in his views on the subject.

Mr. WAGNER. But I also have confidence in my own analysis of the situation, and the cold facts and figures cannot be ignored, and they compel the conclusion that a larger appropriation is needed if we are to take care of these unfortunate people.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, does the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator spoke a moment ago about 6,000,000 people that will still be unemployed. Does the Senator have the facts that there are only 6,000,000 people out of employment now?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. Those are the estimates at the present time, that there are 6,000,000 people out of employment.

Mr. FESS. I had understood from Mr. Green that there were something like 10,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. No; I think that what Mr. Green stated was that if the Civil Works program is demobilized, thus throwing back upon relief, and putting out of employment the 4,000,000 working on the Civil Works projects, added to the 6,000,000 now unemployed, it will make the figure 10,000,000. Of course, I look to industry reviving sufficiently between now and next year to absorb between two and a half and three million people. The Public Works I expect will absorb another million. Thus if we demobilize the Civil Works program we are back to where we were before. We would still have the 6,000,000 which will eventually mean a recession.

Mr. FESS. So that the Senator really believes that unemployment is decreasing?

Mr. WAGNER. Undoubtedly. We are gradually emerging out of this tragic depression that we have been going through.

Mr. FESS. Is that emergence due to anything except the Government's spending public money?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. It is due to the fact that approximately about 4,000,000 men have been reemployed in industry as the result of the shorter hours, the abolition of child labor and the raising of the minimum standard of wages. That has contributed about 4,000,000. But I call to the Senator's attention the fact that when the present administration took hold we had 15,000,000 people out of employment.

Mr. FESS. The Senator then really has confidence that there is a decrease in unemployment by the taking up by private industry of the unemployment, that is aside from supplying the need of the Federal Government expenditure?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not quite get the point of the question.

Mr. FESS. What I mean is this, and my question is quite a significant one. If there is an increase of employment in private industry—that is, outside of supplying the needs of the Government's program—that is very promising.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is there such an increase?

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure there is. But we must not forget that the expenditure of public funds has aided private industry a great deal.

Mr. FESS. Of course. I understand that.

Mr. WAGNER. We are talking here as if this were something that had no relationship to private industry. We are talking about Government expenditure. Where does the money go that is expended. It goes into private industry. It goes for shoes and hats and other capital goods, which to that extent aids private industry.

Mr. FESS. I know that the Senator's theory and the theory of the President is that by public expenditure we will ultimately sufficiently stimulate private industry to take up the unemployment.

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly. And that will decrease our own public-works program.

Mr. FESS. I hope that is true, but it does not look promising.

Mr. WAGNER. We are all looking for that to happen.

Mr. FESS. I hope it will come, but it does not look promising to me.

Mr. WAGNER. We are going upward all the time due to a very inspiring leadership which the Nation fortunately has had since March 4.

Mr. FESS. A very adventurous leadership.

Mr. WAGNER. I should say inspiring. The people of the United States agree with me.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator is right about that. Sometimes even the people are mistaken.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. In view of the questions asked a moment ago by the Senator from Idaho it has occurred to me in reading Mr. Hopkins' testimony that he nowhere is emphatic as to the undesirability of having further funds to spend.

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly. If I may interrupt the Senator, I wish to call his attention to the fact that he said he thought——

Mr. CUTTING. He said he thought "these were the reasons which impelled us to recommend the cessation of this work."

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. CUTTING. I do not want to embarrass Mr. Hopkins or anyone else, but does not the Senator think that it is a position somewhat analogous to that of a Cabinet member who might wish to pursue a certain line of activity which the Director of the Budget had refused to approve? He is not in a position to recommend the carrying on of that work, and will have to give what reasons he can find to justify retrenchment, and yet he is in a position where it is unfair to press either him or his superiors for the reticence in expression which naturally goes with such a position.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I cannot answer that question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it must be remembered that these expenditures are matters over which the President is reported to have worked for days, and this whole question is one of the most difficult problems with which he has had to deal, and he came to the conclusion, if the press reports are correct, that we ought to hold the appropriation down to the amount asked in the pending bill. I want to hold down expenditures, for the taxpayer ought not to be forgotten.

It seems to me that Mr. Hopkins is carrying out a policy of the administration. I certainly do not want to put upon the administration a larger sum of money than the administration thinks it needs in view of the fact that it has to spend billions and billions of dollars, at best. It is a safe rule to allow less rather than more than a department asks.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator's independent attitude upon all questions is so well known that I know he is not going to vote upon this question because of what someone recommends unless his own convictions are in accord with that particular recommendation. I hope the Senator will carefully examine these inexorable figures, and I am sure he will reach the conclusion that he ought to support the amendment.

I have been moved greatly by the testimony of Mr. Hopkins before the House subcommittee. In speaking of the applicants for relief and civil work, he said:

> We know, from a careful study of their records, that they are made up of the finest people in America. You cannot get 4,000,000 families or four and one half million families on the relief rolls without getting from one end of the country to the other, the whole backbone of America's industrial and farm life.

The people for whom I plead are at the end of their rope. They have exhausted their savings. They have taxed to the limit the generosity of their friends and relatives. They have dried up the sources of private charity. Their physical and moral stamina cannot stand further strain. In our joy over partial recovery, we must not allow them to be pushed to the stage where recovery for them would be impossible. Nor can we recover under such circumstances.

This is particularly true of young children. Studies in almost every State have revealed the fact that about one fifth of all the beneficiaries of relief are between 6 and 13 years of age, although this age group comprises only one ninth of the total population. We would have to possess the foresight of sages to envisage the sickness and suffering that will crop up in the next generation as a result of undernourishment and neglect at the present time.

In addition to the tremendous humanitarian urge for more adequate relief there is the purely economic reason. With the country on the upgrade, it is absolutely essential that purchasing power should be stimulated and maintained until industry can really regain its footing. During the months of July and August, in the first wild spurt of restored confidence, production in private industry shot far ahead of employment and pay rolls. The only thing that prevented a complete collapse was the steady flow of Federal funds which went into the pockets of consumers without placing additional competitive goods upon the market. Even today the index of production in industry is far ahead of the index of pay rolls, and it is imperative that public expenditures should continue to serve as a balance wheel. This is the only safeguard against a relapse.

In the beginning of 1933 the monthly volume of wages was one and two-thirds billion dollars less than in 1929. Due to the various relief measures and the operation of the Recovery Act, the monthly volume of wages has risen by almost $600,000,000. But this leaves a gap of over a billion dollars per month which has to be filled in before we can begin to feel safe. Even then we shall need to take steps to prevent the disparity between wages and profits that foreshadows catastrophe. Compared with a gap of this magnitude, any assistance that the Federal Government might give is a mere drop in the bucket. But although the Federal Government cannot do everything, it should do as much as it can. I believe a Federal appropriation of $950,000,000 at this time is a great deal less than we can do and a great deal less than is dictated by the minimum requirements of sound public policy.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I regret the lateness of the hour; but I feel it my duty to say a few words upon the pending bill in view of the trend that the discussion has taken.

I supported Public Works appropriations last spring. I thought 3 years ago that a Public Works program would be beneficial. The C.W.A. has undoubtedly staved off a very serious situation this winter; but I have never thought there was any hope of the least shadow of a permanent remedy for the present situation in the expenditure of public funds. I have looked upon these expenditures as merely a temporary palliative to give us a breathing spell in which to inaugurate policies that will give us some hope of permanent restoration of purchasing power and of prosperity.

I cannot believe that public expenditures will restore purchasing power. They will increase temporary purchasing power, and I believe they have done so; and the effect has been beneficial.

We cannot hope to balance the Budget in that way, however. We cannot hope to balance the Budget by increasing taxes. The Federal Treasury can be filled only from the treasuries of its citizens and its business houses.

We have had a Government deficit for several years because of the deficit in the pockets and the tills and treasuries of our citizens. Those tills have been empty. The only source of revenue to the Government comes from the pockets of its people. If there is no money in the pockets of the people, no money flows to the Federal Treasury. Raise taxes where there is no income and you do not increase income from taxes. Raise taxes five times, still five times nothing is nothing.

So I believe if we are ever going to balance the Budget we shall have first to balance the budgets of the American people, our private citizens, our corporations, and houses engaged in commerce. The question before the Congress is, or should be, How can that best be done?

The private credit system of the United States—the foundation of our commercial life, the foundation of our banking life—is not functioning. The only credit that is functioning now is the credit of the Government of the United States. We do not know how long it is going to last.

I am not so much concerned at present about the present Federal Government debt, and I am not so much concerned about spending some public funds now, provided in the meantime we will inaugurate policies that will restore a healthy commercial life, a healthy economic life of our people, and balance the budgets of our private citizens.

Our per capita debt in this country is about $254 for every man, woman, and child. Great Britain has a per capita debt of something like $540 for every man, woman, and child. France has a per capita debt of something like $854 for every man, woman, and child. So our Federal Government debt, as compared to that of Great Britain and as compared to that of France, is very small.

The Federal Government debt is not the debt we need to worry about. That is not the debt that has crushed the credit system of the United States. That is not the debt that has closed the banks. Our Federal debt is not the debt that has emptied the treasuries of our private citizens and our corporations who pay taxes to the Federal Treasury. We have another debt to which no debt in any country on the Continent of Europe can compare, and that is our private, municipal, and corporate debt.

Until we realize the fact of the bankruptcy facing this country on behalf of that debt, we shall continue to spend public funds in the vain hope of restoring prosperity. The Biblical manna fell gently from heaven, but it could not fall forever. The spending of Government funds cannot last forever. The public and private indebtedness of this country is given out as about $250,000,000,000, the fixed charges of which are working night and day upon the income of the American people. There is only so much income produced in the country. If capital were to take its fixed charges upon an indebtedness of $250,000,000,000 out of the national income, there would be so little left for the producers of wealth that it is quite likely they would have to go back to a standard of living such as that we had at the time of the Civil War.

There is not enough income produced in the United States to pay the fixed charges of interest and taxes, rents and leaseholds, and leave a decent standard of living for the great mass of the people.

The railroads have a total capitalization of $25,000,000,000. The traffic will not bear the charges necessary to pay the interest on that debt structure, as old as the railroad history of the United States. What is true of the railroads is true of almost every other large industry.

The steel industry, overcapitalized, with its obsolete structures, with its fictitious capitalization, is a fair illustration, and, in order to maintain and collect from the producers of this country upon this tremendous fictitious capitalization and dead structure, what do we find is being done now? I do not intend to discuss at length some of the codes adopted under the N.R.A., but I want to refer to this particular industry. Because of the lateness of the hour I do not want to go into any extended discussion to illustrate what is taking place.

We were told that the N.R.A. was a program to redistribute wealth, to furnish employment. If we are to redistribute the wealth of this country it will have to be done by reducing the prices to the consumer, and by raising the wages of the workers in industry. If we are to redistribute wealth in this country we will have to put the 30,000,000 engaged in agriculture on a scale where they can at least get cost of production. The workers of industry, 40,000,000, working for wages, and the 30,000,000 working in agriculture, a total of 70,000,000, are the foundation of the purchasing power in this country. They furnish the greatest market in the world, if they have the purchasing power.

Under the steel code we are not restoring the purchasing power. Under the steel code, the steel industry has revived the Pittsburgh-plus system of price fixing, which was condemned by the Federal Trade Commission after an exhaustive examination and hearing in 1924. That system of price fixing was pronounced, in a decision of the Federal Trade Commission, as a price-fixing scheme for the purpose of enabling those responsible to engage in monopolistic practices, fix prices, and to establish monopoly.

The Steel Corporation was organized in 1900. Not before 10 years had elapsed was a suit brought for its dissolution in the courts of the United States. Not for 9 years did that case come to the Supreme Court for final decision. The Supreme Court rendered a decision in favor of the Steel Corporation. Justice McKenna noted the fact that of 30,000 purchasers of steel, not one appeared to testify against the Steel Corporation in that suit, and he remarked from the bench that it was reasonable to assume that they did not want to testify; the facts are they did not dare to testify.

The investigation inaugurated and pursued by the Federal Trade Commission showed that whenever the Steel Corporation fixed the price based on the Pittsburgh-plus plan the independents followed suit. The Gary dinners were held for the purpose of fixing prices on the basis of Pittsburgh-plus. A venerable old gentleman who attended those dinners told me that there never was any agreement made at those dinners as to what was to be charged for steel, but, he said, "we always knew what the price of steel would be for the next 30 or 60 days"—avoiding the Sherman Antitrust Act.

This system has been revived under the code, and it gives me concern, because it lays the foundation for the suspicion that if the administration of that code continues, that steel code is not a code for the distribution of wealth or to prevent the concentration of wealth into the hands of fewer and fewer people. On the contrary, if permitted to continue to operate, it is going back to the time prior to the decision of the Federal Trade Commission, when they issued an order to cease and desist the practices of price fixing and monopoly practices prior to 1924.

What does it mean to restore the Pittsburgh-plus plan? I have here a statement showing the effect on the price of steel in the United States of the Federal Trade Commission's order of 1924. There was an overnight drop in the price of steel as the result of that order to cease and desist. In the territory of Spokane, Butte, Helena, Salt Lake, Ogden, Pueblo, and Denver the drop in steel was $2 a ton overnight. At Fargo, N.Dak., there was an overnight drop in the price of steel from $18 to $10 a ton. At Omaha there was an overnight drop from $14.50 to $10. That refers to wire and wire nails. At Duluth there was a drop from $12 a ton to $2. This is from an excellent book by Fetter, called the "Masquerade of Monopoly." With the restoration of the Pittsburgh-plus system on a diffused basis, I believe, there are three or four points of ratemaking for the fixing of a base rate under the new code, but in our territory the base rate is fixed at Chicago.

There is a big steel plant at Duluth. Buying steel bars at Duluth, the consumer in that territory will pay the price fixed at Chicago, plus $6.60 freight from Chicago, and the steel is not hauled from Chicago, the railroads are not paid to haul it from Chicago to Duluth; the money is paid to the steel industry, a freight charge of $6.60 a ton is paid to that industry for steel made in Duluth, and the rate falls upon the consumer for the benefit of the steel industry, based on the freight rate from Chicago to Duluth, when it is not hauled on any railroad; it is produced at Duluth.

Mr. President, such practices are engaged in to maintain the fictitious capitalization of mortgages and bonds and stocks, the fixed charges of which became so overwhelming that they had, in my opinion, more to do with bringing on the depression than any other one thing. Hanging like a dead corpse over business, with our national income reduced to $40,000,000,000, with fixed charges, including taxes and interest, leaseholds and rents, to almost cover the $40,000,000,000 of national income, what will be left if that capital-structure debt of $250,000,000,000 shall be collected according to what is printed on the certificates of debt, $70,000,000,000 of which was issued from 1920 to 1930, payable in gold, and the only gold that can be collected is the gold that is already on the star or seal that is on the piece of paper, and they can be made for a cent apiece, but they were peddled about the country by investment and other classes of bankers.

Mr. President, because of that fact I believe we will not begin to lay the foundation for a permanent recovery until we face the inevitable consequence of that expansion of debt. No country in Europe has so debauched its credit as we have here; and until we face that fact, I do not believe we can restore any permanent prosperity or purchasing power by public expenditures of funds.

Because of my firm conviction that this is the key to the cause of the depression, I believe that when the day comes that we realize that, then will come the day of reckoning when we will understand we will have to pay for our mistakes. The President of the United States seems to have recognized that fact, as announced in a news article printed this morning in the Washington Herald and also in the Post. I consider it the most important announcement, if correctly quoted, that has come from the White House since the beginning of the depression. It is a recognition by the President of the United States of a condition existing, according to this newspaper item written by Charles Stevenson, "Administration Fears 'Capital Tie-Up' Will Jeopardize Benefit From C.W.A., P.W.A., Etc." Because of the importance of this announcement, I will read the article.

Under threats that the Government otherwise will enter the private banking business on a wholesale scale, the administration is launching a campaign designed to force a Nation-wide scaling of debts, easing of credit, and a sharp reduction of interest rates on all forms of borrowings.

Full confirmation of the Government's intentions came last night following revelation that President Roosevelt favors a broad reduction of interest rates, not only as they apply to mortgages, personal, industrial, State, and municipal borrowings but also as they affect holders of foreign bonds.

PRESIDENT IN EARNEST

The threat to enter the private banking business at present is regarded as mere propaganda to force banks, insurance companies, and all other financial institutions to open up their money chests by providing reasonable collateral requirements and interest rates which will invite borrowing. However, it was learned the President is prepared to take this step if no other method can be found which will ease the flow of credit. Meanwhile he is considering less drastic remedial legislation.

Behind the campaign, it was learned, is the administration fear that the private- and public-debt load is so great as to jeopardize the benefits expected from the Government's multibillion-dollar C.W.A., P.W.A., R.F.C., and A.A.A. primings of the economic pump.

Its economists, backed by the President, pointed out that borrowers in a multitude of cases have their noses held so close to the figurative grindstone by high interest rates that they cannot afford to retire the principal of their debts.

CAPITAL TIED UP

The condition, it was stressed, has caused a tie-up of capital which will virtually be impossible to break unless interest rates are lowered to enable borrowers to liquefy and to bring money within the reach of would-be borrowers.

However, it was pointed out, if the industry does not carry out this hope, it would be easy for the Government to step into the private banking business.

If the President is quoted correctly in this newspaper report, I want to congratulate him. I think it is the most sensible news that has come to the Capitol in several years.

These debts, with the interest charges, are hanging over the economic life of the Nation, having caused the crash of 1929 and still freezing our credit system so it cannot function. Pumping Government credit into the commercial life of the Nation without reducing the interest rates by a capital levy on interest rates is in my opinion like pumping oxygen into the lungs of a human being whose respiratory system is paralyzed and cannot function. Unless we can restore the functioning of the respiratory system, what are we going to do when the oxygen tank is empty?

Under these codes, as illustrated by the steel code, business is now prohibited by law from selling below cost of production, and in figuring cost of production is allowed to figure in all its debts, its obsolete plants, all so-called "cats and dogs", and prices are based upon cost of production in which the mistakes of the industry in the past are capitalized, where its vices are made virtues, where, if the public can be gouged to pay the price, it is not possible for the industry to lose money in the future even occasionally, but always to make profits. If that is to be the administration of the N.R.A., the original purpose for which Congress enacted the law will be frustrated and instead of having a reemployment program and redistribution-of-wealth program, we will have a price-gouging program, permitting monopolistic practices and going back to the practices that brought on the depression. I cannot believe President Roosevelt will tolerate the continuation of this code.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. NYE. The Senator, of course, will agree that there are a great many in industries that have not, by reason of their past practices, built up the so-called "fictitious capitalization", will he not?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. NYE. Does he recognize that under many of the codes those who have conducted themselves reasonably and fairly are required to charge such prices for their products as will represent a cost of production to the man who has the fictitious value?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes; I understand that.

Mr. NYE. And that by so doing the operator who has been on the square is deprived of the only weapon he has, by reason of lower overhead costs, to offer in competition with those bigger industrialists?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The industrialist who has an honest capitalization has not the honest advantage in competition that he ought to have and to which he is entitled under that code.

I am willing to vote public funds to the C.W.A. to keep people from going hungry. I am willing to vote funds to them for another reason, for it is going down to fertilize the grass roots instead of merely the top of the tree. It was hoped when we enacted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act that by loaning money to the banks and the large corporations some of that money would trickle down to the average man in the street and on the farm. That is fertilizing the tree at the top. It is an old saying that if we fertilize the top of the tree we kill the tree. If we want the tree to thrive, we fertilize the roots and the top will take care of itself.

How much we ought to spend I do not know. We have to spend enough so the people shall not go hungry. I hope that by the first of May the program, to which I have referred, of reducing the interest rates on the borrowings in the United States, which will be in effect a capital levy, will be effective. We have gone through a period of deflation here. These interest charges are the wages of capital. They have not been deflated. Capital must take its share of the depression. It has to pay its share for its mistakes, because it is more responsible than anything else for the mistakes that brought on the depression. There are 70,000,000 people producing wealth in the United States. Capital furnishes the leadership. It dominates our foreign and domestic affairs. It furnishes the leadership that dominated the national policies inaugurated and pursued by the Government. It furnished the leadership that inaugurated policies that took away from the 70,000,000 people producing the wealth at least half of their income from 1920 to 1930 and collected an increase in their income of more than 72 percent. Having done most of the dancing, it shall now have "to pay the fiddler", because no one else can pay him. If it will take its share of the loss by a reduction in its wage in the form of interest by accepting an interest rate of 2 or 2½ percent instead of 4, 5, or 6 percent, it may save its capitalistic system. It will release the frozen credits of the banks and start the credit system working again by relieving industry and the production activities of the country from the overwhelming burden of fixed charges that cannot be paid. It will make it possible for the farmer to pay the interest on his mortgage and, in time, pay an installment on his principal indebtedness. It will make it possible for the railroads to reduce their freight rates to such an extent that the people can afford to use the railroads. It will make it possible for the industrialist and for commercial enterprises to borrow money at a rate of interest that they may have some chance of earning enough to pay back the interest on their borrowings. It will make it possible for the home owner to pay the interest on the mortgage on his home out of his reduced earnings.

It is said that in the Middle Ages when a man committed a murder they tied the body of the murdered one to him and he had to drag it with him. The dead body of a ruined capital structure is hanging like a corpse upon all our industrial economic life. It is time that we face the facts.

Capital may object, but it is quite likely that if capital is wise it will take its share of the loss and reduce interest rates, as proposed by the President of the United States and set forth in this newspaper article, or the time may come when it may get nothing at all.

The Bourbons of France did not see far enough into the future to pay for their mistakes in time, before the price that they had to pay became so great that they paid with their existence. The pre-Soviet rulers of Russia did not see far enough into the future to be willing to pay a price for their mistakes that would not have been so great as to have wiped out their existence. If the capitalistic system desires to survive, it must pay the price for survival.

I do not believe that the American people will tolerate the economic slavery that will be forced upon them in order to pay the fixed charges upon the bonds and mortgages that the printing presses have been producing for the past 15 or 20 years, always keeping ahead of increased production. As production was increased, these pieces of paper were issued, mortgaging the future income of the people. They could not be paid under the dear gold dollar. Reducing the gold value of the dollar in foreign exchange is not affecting the purchasing power of the dollar domestically any more than the deflation of the pound in Great Britain to $3.20 changed the purchasing power of the pound in Great Britain domestically.

I do not care to go any more extensively into this subject now, owing to the lateness of the hour; but, because of the news report coming from the White House, I wanted to have a reference to the question in the RECORD and to discuss it briefly, for I think if we spend a little more time studying the effects of the proposed program, the more hope we will have that we shall come to an understanding of what it is necessary to do in order to restore to some extent what we have lost and give us a chance to begin over again.

The expenditure of public funds, as I said in the beginning, cannot result in a permanent restoration of purchasing power. It can only be a temporary palliative to give us a breathing spell, to give us a chance to inaugurate policies that will revive the commercial life of the Nation and enable a start to be made toward a redistribution of the national income to the great mass of the people, making it possible to liquidate debts, pay interest, restore the credit and banking systems, and revive the economic life of the Nation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I say to the Senate that this is an emergency measure? It has been before the Senate now for 2 or 3 days and has been long debated. On Saturday next the funds of the Civil Works Administration will be exhausted and money will not be available with which to carry on. We have a special order set for tomorrow which may consume all of Friday and also Saturday. I do not want to cut off anybody, and, of course, I could not cut off anybody if I wanted to do so; but I do want to appeal to those Senators who are going to speak from now on to bear in mind that it is necessary to pass this bill tonight if the C.W.A. work is to be carried on. As I understand, everybody is in favor of this bill; I do not know of any Senator who positively is going to vote against it. So, if Senators could be as brief as possible with their remarks, I certainly think it would be a very wise thing to do.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I hesitate to detain Senators at this late hour.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Tennessee. I am quite anxious that the bill shall become a law at the earliest possible date, of course. Would it not be quite as well if it were passed at noontime tomorrow as tonight?

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble about that is that it could not pass at noontime tomorrow, even if we wanted to pass it then, because we have a special order set for tomorrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am speaking of passing it at noontime, not afterward.

Mr. McKELLAR. We came very near to passing it last night; we were almost up to the point of voting on the passage of the bill last night; but we have been debating it all day long—debating the bill some, and, of course, debating other things some. So I hope we may go on and pass the measure tonight.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sympathetic with the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to know that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Because I am full of unfinished business myself. [Laughter.] What I was going to suggest is that the Senate take recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow, with a unanimous-consent agreement that we will vote upon any amendments and the bill, say, at 10 minutes to 12, quarter to 12, or 12 o'clock, as Senators see fit.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we could get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote tomorrow, say at quarter to 12, that might be well enough; but we have no assurance of any kind that we could obtain such an agreement, and it seems to me we should proceed with the bill. There is no reason in the world why we cannot pass it tonight. I do not know how long the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] will take. Are there any other speeches to be made, may I ask?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Ohio will not take much time, I imagine.

Mr. FESS. No; not over 5 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not take very long.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I shall not delay the Senate unnecessarily. I desire to assure Senators of that fact. If I could have the floor tomorrow morning and proceed, I think perhaps in half or three quarters of an hour I could conclude what I have to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then the Senator from Ohio would wish to follow the Senator, and by tomorrow there will be a dozen Senators who will want to speak.

Mr. ASHURST. Let us meet at 9 o'clock.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble is that we could not meet at 9 o'clock. Let us proceed tonight and see if we cannot pass the bill. It is the only thing we can do.

Mr. FESS. I assure the Senator that I shall not speak over 5 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then let the Senator from Rhode Island proceed now and conclude as soon as possible.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I have the attention of the Senator from Tennessee? I ask the following unanimous-consent agreement:

That the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning; that at 11:45—make it 11:50, because the Senator from Ohio says he wants but 5 minutes—that at 11:50 tomorrow morning the Senate shall proceed to vote upon any amendments that are pending; and upon the conclusion and determination of amendments that may be presented, the Senate then vote upon the bill without further debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before action on an agreement of that kind will the presence of a quorum be required? Will the roll have to be called?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that under the rule before any such agreement can be entered into the presence of a quorum is required.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I say to the Senator from California that we have a special order for 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that will take precedence, because it is a matter of the highest privilege.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will take precedence over any agreement we may make. The only way it could be done would be to have a definite hour fixed for the final passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator think that if the trial did not proceed until 12:05 we either would lose jurisdiction or anything would happen to any of us?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; that would not happen, but what would happen would be that some Senator would call for the regular order, and it would have to be carried out.

Mr. JOHNSON. But we are in charge, and we could proceed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator be willing to change his request to 10:45 and have a final vote on the bill at 11:45?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is, to meet at 10:45?

Mr. McKELLAR. To meet at 10: 45, and have a final vote on the bill at 11:45.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is perfectly satisfactory to me, because I am not going to occupy 15 seconds; but I am wondering if it is satisfactory to my brethren here.

Mr. HEBERT. That will be satisfactory to me, upon the understanding that I will be recognized at the opening of the session tomorrow morning and will be permitted to conclude what I have to say within the hour. I hope it may not take an hour.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would leave out the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. HEBERT. I will agree to cede 5 minutes' time to accommodate the Senator from Ohio if that becomes necessary.

Mr. FESS. That will satisfy me.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall offer an amendment to the pending bill, and I shall offer it either this afternoon or tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nevada that he cannot offer an amendment until the pending amendment shall have been disposed of.

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly not.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an amendment now pending, and the amendment of the Senator from Nevada cannot be offered until that shall have been disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the Senator from Nevada whether his is an amendment that will occupy any considerable time?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know how much time it may occupy, but I shall ask the privilege of addressing the Senate in furtherance of my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Under those circumstances I feel that I cannot proceed further with my request for a unanimous-consent agreement, because I have an inborn prejudice against cutting off any Senator who wants to address the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have, too.

Mr. JOHNSON. And I neither want to curtail the remarks of my brethren on this side, nor to curtail those of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. They have a right to be heard upon the propositions in which they are interested, and they ought to be heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely right. The Senator from Rhode Island says he can probably finish in three quarters of an hour. The Senator from Ohio wants only 5 minutes. I do not know how long the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] will take, but let us go ahead.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island has the floor.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I regret that we have been unable to reach any arrangement that would permit a recess until tomorrow morning, and that I am required to proceed tonight and detain Senators at this late hour. I should have preferred to proceed in the morning and allow Senators to attend to their several engagements this evening.

At any rate, I shall endeavor to curtail my remarks just as much as possible, and occupy the least possible time in saying what I have to say.

I intend to favor this bill as proposed by the administration—not, however, because I favor the principle involved in the bill. On the contrary, I have opposed all such legislation that has come before the Senate for consideration. I favor this proposal because I have reached the conclusion that there is no other source available at the present time from which to secure relief for those in need and for the unemployed.

One of the effects of the operation of the Civil Works Administration has been to break down all the agencies of relief in the several localities in the United States—in the municipalities, in the counties, and in the States themselves.

Mr. President, I would not have a single deserving citizen in need go without assistance, and I am prepared to vote any sum of money that may be necessary to that end; but I submit that the program outlined in the Civil Works Administration is an attack on the problem of unemployment from the wrong source.

My notion has always been that relief is a local question. It is a question which ought to be resolved and which ought to be attended to by the people in the neighborhood where the need of relief exists.

I realize that because of the protracted length of the depression through which we have passed and are now passing, the funds formerly available to the neighborhoods, and in fact to the municipalities, in many cases, are no longer available, and so it has become necessary to resort to State aid. That has been true in many States. It has been true in my own State, for when it was found that there were not sufficient funds available in the municipalities the State of Rhode Island appropriated funds for the relief of those in need and for the unemployed.

But all of those agencies, I repeat, have broken down. They are no longer in existence. The municipalities have simply stopped their relief; and I have reason to believe, as I read the public prints, that that is true in respect to the States. In other words, they have cast the burden upon the Federal Government, just as always happens in such cases.

I say that the problem of relief is essentially a local problem. There is no one better informed as to the needs of people in a given neighborhood than the neighbors themselves, and I venture to say that by and large there are none more willing to come to the aid of those in need than the neighbors themselves. That becoming impossible because of the burden to be assumed, then there is no one to take their place quite so well as the municipality. Failing there, then the States should come to the assistance of those in need. But as the result of the program advanced through the Civil Works Administration we have the anomalous situation of increased demands for relief, and at the same time, if we may rely upon the reports that come to us through administration sources, an increase in employment.

I shall refer to that condition and submit a table to sustain what I have just advanced.

I have said that States should assume the burden of providing relief for those in need within their bounds. To me that is only reasonable, and I cannot understand why representatives of the States should say to us that they have not the means whereby to take care of their unemployed. After all, States make up the Federal Government. The citizens of the several States are in a body the citizens of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government has no other source of income than from the States, from the individual citizens in the States. Whatever we provide out of the Federal Treasury must inevitably come from them. Therefore, being a local problem, I maintain that it should be solved locally; that the taxes necessary to take care of those in need should be levied in the several States, and that the several States should take care of that problem.

I have before me, Mr. President, excerpts from news articles that have appeared in various newspapers, with date lines from all sections of the country, setting out the operations of the Civil Works Administration, the evils that have crept into that Administration, the scandals that have been disclosed in the course of that Administration. These abuses are of two kinds. First, the diversion of funds to the benefit of some of those charged with their distribution among those in need; second, the use of those funds for the benefit of politicians and political organizations.

I desire to call attention to some of those articles. I have taken them at random. They relate to conditions in various parts of the country. I first desire to quote from an article appearing in the New York Times of January 21, 1934, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Jan. 21, 1934]

C.W.A. SEEN AS POLITICIANS' PARADISE, JOB-GIVING BUREAU STIRS CRITICISM—FAVORITISM IS CHARGED—FORMAL COMPLAINT MADE AGAINST METHODS USED IN CALIFORNIA—FEE COLLECTION ALLEGED—LACK OF ACCOMPLISHMENT CONTRASTED WITH WORK OF C.C.C. ARMY

By Chapin Hall

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., January 18.—The Civil Works Administration is in the dog house so far as its operation in southern California is concerned. The task of providing 60,000 jobs on short notice proved too much for the sketchy organization to bear up under, and charges of political favoritism and malfeasant handling of the machinery have led to an investigation which promises startling revelations.

Newspaper exposés of the methods or lack of methods in distributing the work and of the manner in which it is performed were followed by formal charges laid on the doorstep of Federal Administrator Hopkins at Washington by John B. Elliott, local Democratic leader and possible candidate for Governor this year.

The 60,000 C.W.A. workers comprise about one third of the unemployed in Los Angeles County. Approximately 600 separate undertakings are under way, some of them requiring the purchase of large orders of equipment. The charges embrace alleged collection of fees for placing workers; incompetent oversight; an ineffective auditing system which requires the men to wait days for their pay, sometimes in line for hours at a time; paying too much for supplies and equipment; favoritism in allotting jobs; dictation by small-time politicians; placing men at work long distances from their homes; wasted work on unimportant projects; soldiering by the men so that the net result is only equal to about 25 percent of normal labor return.

There have been three local directors in quick order of succession. The buck is tossed from the C.W.A. to the Federal Unemployment Bureau, which theoretically hires and allocates the workers to the various projects, but the enterprise is still more or less of a mess, although now, under home-talent direction, improvement is expected.

RESULTS ARE CRITICIZED

Sixty thousand men working 5 hours per day equals 300,000 working hours per day, and the community feeling is that for this enormous manpower paid for by the Government some distinctly worth-while results should be achieved. They have not, and the public is plenty sore over the situation.

On the other hand, civilian concentration camps directed by Army and Navy officers and taking in about 50,000 young men in this section are proving highly satisfactory in accomplishing important results in the forests and back country; building fire breaks, fighting fires; road, bridge, trail construction, etc.

Much of the labor trouble just now disturbing southern California is directly traceable to the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union, which fomented and caused so much rioting and property destruction in the San Joaquin Valley during the cotton-picking season last fall. This organization, with headquarters at San Jose, is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and authorities claim to have abundant evidence that its roots are deep in communism.

In Imperial Valley, lying east of the Los Angeles metropolitan district and often called the bread basket of southern California, the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union is at present operating a strike of lettuce pickers, that being the current crop moving from the valley at a normal rate of about 150 cars a day.

Because of the widely scattered area and rural population, concerted efforts to keep the situation in check are difficult. Fifty members of the State police mounted on fast motorcycles, a dozen patrol cars under jurisdiction of the sheriff, and a large number of deputies sworn in for the occasion have so far prevented much property loss, although there have been some tear-bomb engagements and not a few cracked heads. A feature of this strike is the enthusiasm with which citizens of the towns directly involved offer themselves for police duty.

FOLLOW THE CROPS EAST

It is the plan of this group of disturbers to move with the crops, not being particularly concerned with the success or failure of any specific strike. Agitators already are at work in the California citrus districts and packing houses where the next big movement is just getting under way. Then come the cantaloupes again in the Imperial Valley.

Investigators in touch with the situation say that leaders openly admit that their orders from headquarters (Moscow) are to concentrate in California this winter; make as much trouble as possible, and move east as the season advances. These disturbances, aimed at the orderly handling of major crops, the life blood of southern California's agriculture, are sufficiently annoying and destructive to offset some of the improvement in general production and economic conditions.

A successful vintage of California wine grapes is making work for about 12,000 and bringing into the State somewhere around $100,000,000 of new money and business. The building of new wineries, rehabilitation of old ones, and extension of grape acreage involve large expenditures, and the rejuvenated wine industry is one of the most heartening signs.

I read another article from the New York Times of January 21, 1934, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Jan. 21, 1934]

DISCONTENT GROWS IN KENTUCKY C.W.A.—CHARGES OF NEPOTISM AND UNFAIR LOCATION OF PROJECTS ARE MADE—ADMINISTRATOR "DECEIVED"—CURTAILMENT OF WORK AND OF EMPLOYMENT NOW PUT INTO EFFECT

By J. Blanford Taylor

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 18.—Discontent in the Civil Works Administration in Kentucky is a recovery development here with charges of nepotism, failure to give veterans preference, and unfair location of projects being made.

Since the Kentucky Relief Commission was designated the Civil Works Administration for this State on November 7 last, with the same county committee members appointed to the new commission in most communities, there have been numerous charges of favoritism to relatives of the committeemen. So many complaints were received at State headquarters that the State C.W.A. committee felt it desirable to recommend that relatives of local relief, Civil Works, and reemployment committee members, of salaried public officeholders, and of other workers in the local relief and Civil Works offices be denied employment in the local relief and Civil Works offices. The State committee, however, left a loophole by adding that exceptions might be made to this policy in the interest of efficiency and by the approval of the entire local committee and the district supervisor.

Charges of favoritism and charges that veterans were not receiving preference in employment on C.W.A. work were made by Thomas Hayden, State adjutant of the American Legion. The committee action salved the veterans to some extent, but a careful eye is still on the employment committees and the Legion is getting its share of the jobs. Complaints of this nature in five counties were cited to the committee, and only after specific examples were given to State Director Thornton Wilcox did the committee act.

STATE DIRECTOR DECEIVED

That projects are being started in localities near members of the county committees has been reported on at least three occasions. All members of the Wolfe County committee reside in the same part of the county. If a line was drawn halving the county geographically, all committee members' homes and all projects would be found in the same half, the State committee was told. Also in Harlan and Bell Counties, in the eastern part of the State, similar reports are heard.

Work on a reservoir on property adjoining a distillery site near Stamping Ground was halted by Mr. Wilcox. The State director said he "had been deceived" in certain phases of the project.

Other complaints arise from the wage scale paid on various projects. On construction projects unskilled labor is paid 45 cents an hour and skilled labor $1.10 an hour. On road projects the rate is 30 cents for unskilled and 40 cents for skilled labor. Unskilled laborers on the road projects object to the wage on the basis their work is virtually the same as unskilled workers on construction projects. Several have left their jobs and returned to the ranks of the unemployed rather than accept the lesser wage.

Also, some workers on road projects were forced to spend 1 to 4 hours going to and from the job, receiving pay only for the time actually spent at work. Several left projects on this account.

A DISMAL OUTLOOK

When the C.W.A. plan was instituted it was broadcast to all unemployed that the idea was "to give work and not a dole." Regular employment on projects to permit the workers to make more than a bare existence, which would build up the morale of the Nation, was the prime purpose. Part-time employment, with the pay being barely large enough for bread and meat, would not be tolerated, officials of the C.W.A. said.

But the picture is changed now.

"We feel that it would be more just to allow the stagger system to be used in all areas of the State", Mr. Wilcox said after orders from Washington instructed him to "taper off" on employment and projects. Men normally dropping out of the service will not be reemployed and no new projects started until the number of men working is reduced to the original quota.

So, with the curtailment of work, a stagger system of employment, and a gradual reduction in the number of men on the jobs, the picture is rather dismal for the unemployed Kentuckian.

Another article appeared in the New York Times of January 21, 1934, bearing a date line Philadelphia, January 18, and reading as follows:

[From the New York Times, Jan. 21, 1934]

"PULL" IN PENNSYLVANIA—BUT OFFICIALS DENY IT AND SAY THEY WELCOME INQUIRY—PINCHOT'S HAND SEEN—INVESTIGATION BEGUN IN PITTSBURGH, AND WILKES-BARRE WANTS ONE, TOO

By Lawrence E. Davies

PHILADELPHIA, January 18.—The word has been going the rounds in Pennsylvania that the Civil Works projects are producing a politicians' paradise. Federal investigations have been demanded in several parts of the State. Nothing short of these probably will determine to what extent the "political favoritism" assertion is true and to what extent it is the fabrication of disgruntled political leaders who have been rebuffed in their quests for preferential jobs for their henchmen.

An inquiry already is under way in Pittsburgh. Another has been demanded in Wilkes-Barre, where the Democratic county chairman has assembled a hundred or so affidavits from jobless persons complaining of favoritism in work awards. A group in Venango County has wired its protest direct to President Roosevelt.

The chorus in Philadelphia has been rising to such an extent that some employment officials lately have had to work far into the night to catch up, their daytime tasks having been interrupted so frequently by newspapers requesting confirmation of tales about this politician's daughter being given a job as a census enumerator and that faithful follower being put to work at the end of a shovel.

PINCHOT'S HAND SEEN

There seems to be no unified complaint as to the party affiliations of so-called "favored workers." In various regions it is whispered that Governor Pinchot, despite his illness, is controlling the award of jobs. In others the Republican organization is named as the big, bad wolf. In Philadelphia the Independent Democratic chairman, John Kelly, has admitted sending endorsements to his former overseas comrade, Franklin G. Connor, director of the Federal-State employment office, but says good-naturedly that his political followers have a better chance of landing jobs if he keeps his own name out of it. He avers that Connor has given him "a kick in the shins" for every job applicant proposed, and he is ready and even eager now to abide by the demand of Eric H. Biddle, State C.W.A. chief, that politics must play no part in the job distribution.

Mr. Biddle is an appointee of Governor Pinchot, who named him first to the executive secretaryship of the State emergency relief board. In November he was appointed Civil Works administrator for Pennsylvania by Harry H. Hopkins, Federal Director of the Civil Works Administration. This caused some surprise, in view of reports that Joseph F. Guffey, the Roosevelt leader in Pennsylvania, had recommended that a board of Democrats supervise the work in this State. Mr. Pinchot and the Democrats no longer are regarded as having a working agreement.

Some effort has been made this week to read into the situation a misunderstanding between Mr. Biddle and the Governor. It became generally known a few days ago that David W. Charles, formerly assistant treasurer of the closed Merion Title & Trust Co., had been appointed acting assistant State C.W.A. controller. When Mr. Charles received a 3-year suspended sentence in connection with charges growing out of the bank's failure, Mr. Hopkins demanded his resignation. Mr. Biddle defended him as trustworthy and able, indicating a belief that his conviction was unjust. Before Mr. Charles resigned Governor Pinchot declared that Mr. Hopkins, in demanding the resignation, "did the right thing."

COOLNESS IS SEEN

This led observers to conclude that there had developed a pronounced coolness between the Governor and his appointee, and was commented on as significant in view of Mr. Biddle's apparent resistance against political influence, and more especially in view of the Governor's expected fight for the senatorship this year.

Hardly had the Charles incident been closed and the investigation into alleged political control of the C.W.A. work in Pittsburgh been started before William Storer, a Pinchot follower there, quit the Pittsburgh employment office on orders from Harrisburg. While it was protested that the move was one of routine, it nevertheless produced an "I told you so" attitude among critics of the Governor, some of whom asserted that persons carrying letters from political leaders frequently asked for Storer as they entered the Pittsburgh employment office.

Both Mr. Connor, director of the Philadelphia employment office, and William H. Connell, the county Civil Works administrator, declared they would welcome an investigation of the situation here. In the words of the latter, it would be found "clean as a hound's tooth."

At the close of every business day for the first few weeks of C.W.A. activities Mr. Connor's wastebasket was filled with letters from politicians and others, recommending unemployed persons for jobs. Now such letters, unread by himself, are stored away in big piles in an empty drawer. Jobs, he asserts, are filled on the basis of the individual applicant's qualifications. His office wants to know how long the applicant has been unemployed, where he or she was last employed, at what salary, in what position, the number of dependents, whether the applicant is a war veteran, and so on.

From the Baltimore Sun of January 23, 1934, is taken the following article:

[From the Baltimore Sun, Jan. 23, 1934]

C.W.A. PRONOUNCED "FLOP" BY CREATORS; BLAME LAID TO CHISELING AND GRAFT—PRESIDENT AND HOPKINS, TIRED OF UNDERMINING BY BUSINESS MEN AND POLITICIANS, ARE DETERMINED TO END SCHEME ON MAY 1—FEAR PUBLIC CLAMOR MAY FORCE ITS CONTINUANCE—HEAD OF AGENCY TO ASK CONGRESS FOR $350,000,000 "BURIAL FUND"—UNEMPLOYED TO GO BACK ON DIRECT RELIEF WHEN WORK PROJECTS ARE ABANDONED

By Paul W. Ward

WASHINGTON, January 22.—The C.W.A., conceived by President Roosevelt and Harry L. Hopkins, its chief, to help the Nation's unemployed, is declared to have turned out to be a viper in the administration's bosom.

Chiseling by business men and politicians has made the whole program abhorrent to the men in charge of it, it was said officially today, and that is why the C.W.A.'s life is to be cut short if its projectors have their way.

FEAR PRESSURE OF PUBLIC CLAMOR

Their only fear now is that they may not have their way—that public clamor may force them to continue—although President Roosevelt was represented at the White House today as still determined to ask Congress for no more than enough to carry the C.W.A. program on to May 1.

"Abhorrent" is not too strong a word in which to compress the privately stated opinions of the men in charge. Moreover, those opinions were expressed so forcefully as to nullify report circulating here to the effect that the administration, faced with a budgetary dilemma, was trying to maneuver into a position where it later could say:

"We didn't want to spend all this money on the C.W.A. but the public—Congress—insisted."

DEMANDS ALREADY POUR IN

The insistence, the public clamor, already has begun. Mr. Hopkins said his office is getting 9,000 letters a day urging that the C.W.A.'s life be prolonged. Members of Congress are being similarly deluged. Mass meetings are being held in various communities.

In administration circles, however, there is strong inclination to regard the clamor as being "inspired." Mr. Hopkins himself called it "high-grade propaganda" and predicted more of it. He also said there was no doubt the C.W.A. had been "a great thing for the small business man."

Why officials take that skeptical attitude toward the clamor, and why they not only want to get rid of the C.W.A. but are afraid they won't be able to, may be summed up in the following items, based on authoritative information:

Politicians are riddling the program with their constant and frequently successful efforts to make it a part of the spoils system. In some sections of the country a man has to have political "pull" to get a job raking leaves, trimming trees, or digging ditches.

Business men are riddling the program by their efforts to "short-change" the Government by bribing C.W.A. officials to certify for payment supply invoices on which no delivery has been made. Their efforts, as well as the patronage efforts of the politicians, have slopped over into the emergency relief field as well, it was said.

BITTER TOWARD BUSINESS MEN

The officials from whom this information was drawn were inclined to look somewhat forgivingly upon the politicians, but they were bitter about the business men, whose sins, they said, outranked those of the ward heelers. When the remark was made that it was rather unforgivable to "chisel at the expense of persons on relief", one official retorted:

"I've learned since I've been here that business men will do most anything."

WHOLE THING'S A FLOP

It was that same official who, remarking his disgust with the C.W.A. program and his fear that it would not be allowed to die, said:

"We've got the bull by the tail and are afraid to hang on and afraid to let go. * * * We're spending tens of thousands of dollars just to investigate charges of graft that fairly fill the air. The lid is liable to blow off at any minute. * * * Some of our directors are incompetent; we'll soon remedy that. * * * Some of our projects are lousy, and we know it. * * * The whole thing's a flop."

He mentioned several situations already under investigation by the Department of Justice and a few which are expected to produce criminal indictments in a day or so. He was specific as to certain situations and certain States. Maryland was not mentioned.

RELATES CASES OF GRAFT

He told of cases of graft in connection with truck hire. He told of cases in which foodstuffs and other supplies had been paid for but not received. He told of one city where, investigation had shown, "our own men, mind you", went to a certain alderman whenever there were trucks to be hired.

But he insisted that the amount of actual graft in terms of money as related to the total C.W.A. expenditure was niggardly. At the same time he insisted that the major onus be placed on "business men."

The politicians, he argued, were doing only what American tradition dictates.

"All that the politician wants", he said, "is to have John Jones know that he—the politician—got him his job."

There was no doubt, he said, that in some sections the politicians had succeeded in placing their followers on C.W.A. projects in preference to other and perhaps more deserving unemployed men.

NEW-DEAL DEMOCRATS INCLUDED

What incensed him most against these politicians, it appeared, was that the most demanding among them were "new-deal" Democrats, men who had clambered aboard the Roosevelt bandwagon when it first got under way, and thought that, therefore, despite the fact that they had never been notable for their party loyalty in the past, they deserved the first helpings from the pork barrel at this time.

What seemed to hurt administration officials most was the realization that, out of the 120,000,000 men and women in this country, they had been unable to pick a sufficient number that were bribe-proof to man the C.W.A. organization from top to bottom. And what seemed to concern those officials most was the fact that a lot of minor officials are going to have to be prosecuted for doing things that probably seemed to them traditional and therefore harmless.

OVERNIGHT DEVELOPMENT

It also appears to be their belief that the administration embarked upon the C.W.A. program without adequate consideration in advance of the problems it would raise. It was pointed out that the C.W.A. was an almost overnight development.

That overnight development, according to officials, will be prolonged into infinity if the politicians have their way. The belief was expressed that if the C.W.A. is continued the politicians will find a way to make it almost a 100 percent patronage affair.

It should be said that among administration officials no fear is expressed that without the C.W.A. there will be no way of taking care of the 4,000,000 unemployed and their families, who are its present beneficiaries. They would be returned to the outright emergency relief, given on a basis of actual, minimum need, which was their pre-C.W.A. mainstay.

HOPKINS STATES POSITION

Mr. Hopkins in discussing that point insisted, however, that he would not and could not predict the future needs of the country's unemployed.

"I am not going before Congress and say we need $1,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000", he said. "If I say $1,000,000,000, somebody will ask me how I know, and I'll have to say I don't know; nobody knows. Then they'll say, 'Why not $3,000,000,000?' and I'll have to say, 'Why not?'

TO ASK FOR $850,000,000

"Nobody knows what will be needed. Anything I could say now would be just a guess in the dark. I, for one, am unwilling at this point to try to project the needs of the unemployed beyond spring."

There will go to Congress shortly—probably tomorrow—he said, a request for $350,000,000 to carry the C.W.A. on from February 15 to May 1, along with a request for $500,000,000 for emergency relief "from now on." He thought the C.W.A. and the E.R.C. appropriations would be kept separate and that they might be arranged as appropriations direct from the Treasury instead of through the R.F.C., as at present. Such a shift, however, would require some new legislation, he said.

MAY RESTORE 30-HOUR WEEK

Concerning the proposed $350,000,000 "burial fund" for the C.W.A., Mr. Hopkins said:

"Its effect, if granted, would be to restore the 30-hour week on all C.W.A. projects except, maybe, in rural areas. We haven't taken off any men. We've just stopped putting more men on and we've cut them down to a 24-hour week. There are a little more than 4,000,000 men on now. A demobilization below this has got to start right away.

"We'll start laying men off February 15. What we have done, though, is to order 12 States that had more than their quotas at work to cut down to their quotas. Those States are Michigan, Arkansas, Maine, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah, Washington, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Illinois.

TO COMPLETE ALL PROJECTS

"We haven't stopped buying materials for C.W.A. projects. We ordered $3,000,000 worth today, and we're going to order some more. We took over the buying of materials because we wanted to get control of it, so we could keep our budget in hand."

Mr. Hopkins said he was confident all C.W.A. projects now under way would be completed by May 1.

Discussing present and future emergency relief needs, Mr. Hopkins said the Federal Government was paying 62 percent of the national bill and that it had been paying 70 percent. He was still in favor of granting relief funds to States on a matching basis, and in that connection he said he had written Gov. Ruby Laffoon, of Kentucky, asking him to "turn over the liquor taxes for relief; the Legislature voted it for relief, and where was it?" He had had no reply from the Governor, he said.

COUNTS 9,000,000 JOBLESS

Mr. Hopkins said he thought there were 9,000,000 unemployed in the United States, that 4,000,000 are on C.W.A. projects and that 2,000,000 are on relief, but only 500,000 of them are "employable." Of the 9,000,000, he said, about 2,000,000 are farmers and tenant farmers not ordinarily included in unemployment figures, and 3,000,000 are persons who were unemployed in 1929.

He thought the P.W.A. in the next few months would absorb between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 and that "the seasonal pick-up" in private industry would absorb 1,000,000 more. There would be at least 4,000,000 employable persons still out of work after May 1, Mr. Hopkins estimated, and there his press conference ended.

Now, Mr. President, I come to an article appearing in the Baltimore Sun of January 24, 1934, entitled "The Great Game of Politics." This article has a date line of Washington, January 23, and a subheading, "An Unexpected Blast":

No more extraordinary thing than the sweeping attack of Mr. Harry Hopkins upon the Civil Works Administration has ever happened in Washington. It is without precedent because Mr. Hopkins, himself, is the Civil Works Administrator.

So far as known, this is the first time in history the head of a great Government department charged with the execution of a major administration policy has indicted his own department, branded the policy as a flop and a failure, urged its abandonment. Had such an assault been made, for example, by ex-Gov. Alfred E. Smith, or by a Republican, or in one of the newspapers appalled by the vista revealed when this huge, half-baked scheme was promulgated overnight—had the assault come from one of these sources, there would have been a storm of indignation. Mr. Smith would have been called a sorehead, the Republicans accused of playing unpatriotic politics, and the newspaper writers of trying to "sabotage the recovery program."

When, however, this blistering excoriation of the C.W.A. comes from the C.W.A. Administrator himself, then the wrath of those who believed blindly has no target upon which to center, and they are left in a baffled and somewhat bewildered state of mind. When this Civil Works idea was first announced it was hailed as the noblest thing Mr. Roosevelt had done. The country rang with praise, and it was pushed with tremendous speed. There were protests that the plan was by far the most dangerous upon which we had yet been launched; that this was the dole on the grand scale, and once embarked on this line the Government could not retreat without risking chaos. But these points were swept aside as trivial. A huge organization was set up, the billions were started flowing and more than 4,000,000 men and women are now on the Federal pay roll, doing trivial and unnecessary things. Approximately $70,000,000 a week is distributed among them.

The Director now denounces the whole business. He charges waste, graft, and inefficiency. He lays the blame partly upon the politicians, partly upon the business men, partly upon our own people. The money will be exhausted February 15. He asks $300,000,000 to continue in a greatly reduced way until May 1. Then he urges abandonment. But at that notion there is an enormous howl. Governors, mayors, and communities violently protest. They say it is impossible for the Government to shift this burden back. To stop in May will be to throw 4,000,000 men and women, with their families, out on the streets to starve. Neither the States nor the cities are in condition to take care of them. They are all about broke. Private charity has dried up as a result of the dole policy. Industry could not possibly absorb any considerable number of these people. They beg for another and more adequate appropriation.

Mr. President, I may say here that I have had telegrams from mayors of some of the cities in my State, and they have urged precisely what is set forth in the article from which I have just read. They feel that their agencies for the care of those in need have broken down. They can no longer provide the necessary funds. All the avenues of relief have dried up, and so there is no recourse except to the Civil Works Administration.

This article goes on:

But if the President yields, then his Budget calculations, already at the optimistic limit, will be upset and the difficulties in the way of the $10,000,000,000 financing, to which the Treasury is committed, vastly increased. The idea of an ultimate balance in 1936 would become fantastic. The President is reported reluctant to ask Congress to continue the C.W.A. He will ask another half billion for Federal relief, another $300,000,000 for the C.C.C., but that is as far as he feels he dare go. On the other hand, Congress is under terrific pressure from States and cities to provide another billion anyhow.

The disposition will be to smooth things over and effect a compromise. Probably it can be done, but it serves no purpose not to look the facts in the face, and Mr. Hopkins has presented these in an impressive way. His action in indicating his own administration is explained in two ways. One is that he wanted to forestall the storm he saw coming and put the responsibility upon Congress; that he wanted personally to get out from under and not rush blindly into disaster. The other and more correct one is that Mr. Hopkins is an honest and fearless man. The waste and graft with which the C.W.A. is saturated has sickened him. He realizes the unworkability of the scheme, and what it means to make it permanent. Having got hold of the tail of the bull he knows the difficulty of letting go. But feeling as he does, he had to say so. It is a bad situation he has revealed, but it was right to reveal it.

Mr. President, I come now to some articles which have appeared in the newspapers in my State.

For some time after the C.W.A. began to function in Rhode Island, charges were circulated that it was being used by certain unscrupulous people for political purposes. Those rumors grew to be so frequent that they became the subject of discussion pretty much all over the State. The Evening Bulletin, a newspaper published in my State, made an investigation and sent its reporters around to find out about the handling of the C.W.A., the methods pursued in employing those who were to have the benefits of it, who was doing the hiring, and whether or not there had been any favoritism.

I come now to an article appearing in the Evening Bulletin of December 30, 1933, entitled:

Warren Federal Jobs Office Used to Build up Political Machinery for Democrats—Head of Barrington Club Hands Out Notifications for C.W.A. Employment.

In explanation, I may say that the Barrington Club referred to here is a Democratic political organization having its headquarters in the town of Barrington, in the State of Rhode Island.

The article goes on:

VITULLO DENIES GIVING NOTICES TO DE SPIRITO

The Bristol County office of the Federal Reemployment Service, operated by a Democratic politician, is being used to build up the Democratic political machine.

At least 30 of this office's official notifications directing men to report for duty on Barrington C.W.A. projects were delivered to the successful applicants, not by mail, as the rules of the Service require, but by Jacob de Spirito, president of the Barrington Democratic Club.

When Mr. De Spirito, who is not in any way officially connected with the Reemployment Service, handed out these cards the implication was clear—the men were receiving a favor from the party and they were invited to reciprocate.

Mr. De Spirito on two separate occasions admitted to an Evening Bulletin reporter that he had distributed these cards to 30 men. The men were selected from a long list of applicants in the Warren office of the Federal Reemployment Service and the cards were made out in that office.

The head of that office is Peter E. Vitullo, a member of the Warren Democratic town committee.

Vitullo denied he had given the notices to De Spirito, refused to explain how these particular men had been selected to work on Barrington C.W.A. projects, and said: "That's just another one of those stories."

COUNCILMAN SPEAKS

A member of the Barrington Town Council told the Evening Bulletin that in the presence of Cosmo Guliano, of 544 Maple Avenue, Barrington, Vitullo had admitted to him that he had given the cards to De Spirito because he didn't have anyone else to do it.

Guliano admitted to the Bulletin that he called upon Vitullo with the councilman, but he did not remember the conversation that took place.

The Bulletin presents these facts revealing the manner in which the Federal Reemployment Service is functioning in Bristol County as showing how President Roosevelt's C.W.A. program of putting the needy and the jobless back to work on public projects easily may be perverted, and is being perverted, to serve cheap political ends.

In Rhode Island the Federal Reemployment Service is directed by Percival de St. Aubin. He appointed the heads of his various branch offices around the State.

DE ST. AUBIN TO INVESTIGATE

Mr. de St. Aubin, when acquainted this afternoon with the facts, said, "If I find there is anything which warrants an investigation I will make one."

He said that the deliverance of work notices by messenger instead of mail is in violation of the rules.

Asked what action he would take if he found the statements made by this newspaper to be correct, Mr. de St. Aubin said, "It would depend upon what I find out. At present, I know nothing of the case. I have been ill for several days."

About 18,000 men have been put to work on C.W.A. projects in Rhode Island. Approximately half of these were transferred from the lists of those who were receiving either money or food orders for relief on November 18. The other half have been requisitioned from the lists of those out of work, but not on public relief, who had registered with the various local offices of the Federal Reemployment Service.

EACH DISTRICT HAS QUOTA

Each local C.W.A. administrator was assigned a quota. For instance, he might have been directed to place 1,000 men at work. First, he would take all able-bodied men on his town's relief list. He then would ask the director of his Federal reemployment office to supply the remainder.

The rules of the Reemployment Service require that when a manager of one of these local offices receives a request from a local C.W.A. administrator to put a given number of men to work, the manager shall select the men best qualified for the work, giving preference to veterans.

Order of registration and relative needs of the applicants are entirely secondary considerations, according to the instructions that have gone out from Mr. St. Aubin's office. In fact, the Service has no machinery to ascertain the relative need of the men, and little effort is made to do so. So that a man with a home and an automobile and with several other members of his family working may receive preference over another man who is very close to becoming a public charge.

FIVE AT WORK IN FAMILY

Not only may, but does. This newspaper's investigation in Barrington reveals that one man, who was selected by Vitullo for a C.W.A. job, has 5 children at work, 3 of whom hand over their full pay to him. He also owns a home, although it is mortgaged, and he is making payments on a 1933 auto.

In another family both the father and a son were awarded jobs by Mr. Vitullo.

It was impossible last night to learn just how many men had registered with Mr. Vitullo's office in Warren, how many had been awarded jobs, and how many were still jobless. The Warren office said the information must come from Mr. de St. Aubin's office in Providence, and it was stated there that the figures could not be given out without Mr. de St. Aubin's approval and I don't know where he can be reached now.

Probably no one in Rhode Island begrudges these gentlemen and all their children jobs, but it is to be remembered that the purpose of the C.W.A. is to relieve distress, and that it is largely a substitute for the old public-relief systems.

The C.W.A. is a public agency for relief. Its expenses are borne by the taxpayer. If it continues no longer than May 1 it will cost the Nation about three quarters of a billion dollars. Of this amount the taxpayers of Rhode Island must pay, at some time and in some form, to the tune of fifteen or twenty million dollars. That is, they must pay for these relief expenditures stretching over but 6 months a sum considerably greater, perhaps almost twice as great as they pay to run every agency and activity of their State government for an entire year.

MAPLE AVENUE CONNECTIONS

Last week the Bulletin heard that the C.W.A. was doing great things for the Maple Avenue section of Barrington. Now, the Maple Avenue section is inhabited very largely by those who were formerly dependent for their living on the nearby brickyard. When these men worked at the brickyard they got, in most cases, no more than $15 a week, and the work was irregular, with frequent lay offs. Now everyone on Maple Avenue who has a C.W.A. job is getting his $15 a week with no lay offs.

But in the course of its investigation into the good times on Maple Avenue the Bulletin learned that it was no longer C.W.A. that was Santa Claus. It was "See De Spirito." So a reporter went to see Mr. De Spirito.

De Spirito admitted delivering notices to go to work to about 30 men in Barrington. He said he had not got these notices from Vitullo, but refused to say who gave him the notices.

Next the reporter saw a member of the Barrington Town Council. He said he knew that De Spirito had given the notices from the Federal office in Warren to four members of Mr. De Spirito's Democratic Club. He named the four men as former Police Chief Albert Pearson, Jr., Giannatistta Colardo, John St. Ours, and Giuseppe Piccerelli. De Spirito admitted giving the cards to the latter three but denied giving one to Pearson. The councilman said Vitullo had admitted to him in the presence of Cosmo Guliano that he gave the notices to De Spirito.

AGAIN ADMITS DELIVERING NOTES

The following night De Spirito again admitted delivering the notices, and again declined to say where he got them. "I don't deny that I delivered the notices, because I did", he said, "but why should I tell you those other things when I don't think that I should?"

Vitullo was then seen and denied giving the notices, stating, "That's just another one of those stories." When asked to explain how applicants were selected for Barrington C.W.A. projects, he referred all questions to the State office in Providence.

Viall Stanley, Barrington C.W.A. administrator, admitted that he had heard a lot of talk to the effect that De Spirito distributed the notices, but knew nothing definite about it. "I know there has been a lot of talk, but I don't know how much there is in it", he said, and suggested that Vitullo "would have to answer that."

Mr. Stanley confirmed reports, however, that Antonio Petrucci, 53, and his son, Matty, 23, of Maple Avenue, Barrington, both had been given C.W.A. jobs. Both had been assigned by Vitullo's office, Mr. Stanley said.

VISIT TO SHOE SHOP

The reporter next encountered Sorzio De Angelis, of 173 Maple Avenue, in a shoe shop, and among others present was De Spirito. De Angelis took no part in the conversation when the reporter questioned De Spirito, but when the question, "Are you a member of the Democratic Club?" was put to him, De Angelis replied: "No; that's the reason I haven't got a job I guess. It is the general understanding around here that if you belong to the club you'll get a job, and if you don't you are out of luck." De Spirito remained silent during this conversation.

The next step in the reporter's investigation led to Cosmo Guliano, who was the companion of the councilman at the interview with Vitullo. Guliano admitted the interview, but asked if he could recall the conversation which took place, hesitated and then replied: "I don't remember."

Guliano explained subsequently that he had talked with Vitullo since the interview and had been advised to come back tomorrow.

DOESN'T WANT TO MAKE TROUBLE

"That is why I don't want to make any trouble", observed Guliano. He said he had registered at the Bristol County office in September, and couldn't understand why he didn't get a job when applicants more recent than himself had secured work.

"Are you a member of the Barrington Democratic Club?" he was asked.

"No; that's the trouble I guess", he replied.

Guliano said that after the attempts of the Barrington councilman to land him a job through Vitullo had failed, he went to see De Spirito.

"De Spirito told me, 'I don't want to do that job any more'", Guliano said.

He said he didn't know the names of the men who had been given jobs before him, though registered later, but advised the reporter to contact "Harry", who lived across the street.

UNABLE TO GET JOB

"Harry" turned out to be Harry Franklin, former Warren taxi driver, but now a resident of Barrington. A few minutes after the reporter began talking with Franklin, Guliano entered the Franklin home. Franklin stated that he had been unable to get a position, though Vitullo, whom he knows personally, had promised to have him assigned to a project.

"They tell me I can't get a job because my wife is working", he said. "I can't understand that when there are men with four or five children working who have been given C.W.A. jobs."

"The story is wide-spread throughout the town", he continued, "that you either have to be a member of the Barrington Democratic Club or else know Frank Adams (chairman of the Democratic town committee) if you want to get a C.W.A. job in Barrington.

"I had a fellow come right up to me and tell me he knew who could get me a job. He said he knew the man who had given out 40 notices to report to work on C.W.A. projects. He wouldn't name the man, but I think he must have meant De Spirito."

OFFERS INFORMATION

Guliano then volunteered the information that Tony Lombardi, of Maple Avenue, and Crescenzo Pompei, of Anoaker Avenue, had applied for jobs through the county employment office last September and had not got them, "yet another man, John Vendituoli, who came to Barrington only about 9 months ago, and applied for a job less than a month ago, has already been given a job."

Giuseppe Piccerelli, of Church Street, Barrington, a former member of the Independent Citizens Club—now the Barrington Democratic Club—was the next person interviewed. He is one to whom De Spirito admitted giving a notice. He has 5 children in his family at work, 3 daughters and 2 sons. He owns his home, which is mortgaged, and has a 1933 sedan, purchased on time payment.

"How long have you been working under C.W.A.?" he was asked.

"Since December 13", he replied.

"How did you receive your notice?"

"In the mail."

Piccerelli said he had been out of work for 35 months when he got the C.W.A. job, and thought he was entitled to it. All his life, he argued, sickness handicapped him, but he saved his money when he worked, raised his family, paid his bills, and "now some people are jealous because I have a job."

Only 2 daughters and 1 son give him their full pay, he said, and a daughter, 24, and a son, 22, give part of their pay to their mother.

With one of the Piccerelli sons, the reporter then visited the Democratic Club, on Maple Avenue, where several members, including De Spirito, were sitting around a stove while two men played pool at a nearby table.

AGAIN CAN'T REMEMBER

De Spirito greeted the reporter affably, asking: "Have you found out anything more?" The reporter replied by asking again where De Spirito got the notices, and this time De Spirito replied "he didn't know."

The reporter asked for directions to the home of Giannatistta Colardo, one of those to whom De Spirito admitted handling a notice, and was told that one of the two men playing pool was Colardo.

"Are you a C.W.A. worker?" the reporter asked Colardo.

Before he could reply the Piccerelli son broke in, saying, "No; his son is."

"Shut your mouth", De Spirito shouted, and from then on discussion of C.W.A. was futile.

As the reporter left De Spirito said he wished him "the best of luck"; said he realized it was the reporter's job, but expressed the hope that he would stop trying to show a connection between the Barrington Democratic Club and the C.W.A.

The functions of the Civil Works Administration in Rhode Island are in the hands of a Mr. de St. Aubin, who is the branch manager in Rhode Island. In the Evening Bulletin of January 6, 1934, this article appeared:

ST. AUBIN'S BRANCH MANAGER APPOINTEES ALL DEMOCRATS

Here is the political record of the men who have been appointed by Percival de St. Aubin, State director of the Federal Reemployment Service, as managers of his branch offices in Rhode Island. Last Monday the Bulletin published a statement by W. Frank Persons, national Director of the Service, in which he said: "It is not in keeping with the President's wishes in the matter of C.W.A. administration that a political picture be created."

Patrick J. Cox: Woonsocket. Former Democratic senator from Woonsocket. Now a Democratic leader in the second ward of Woonsocket, and one of the lieutenants of that wing of the Democratic Party led by Martin M. McLaughlin.

Gordon Bennett: West Warwick, president of the combined seventh and ninth ward Democratic clubs in Warwick, and mentioned as coming head of Democratic city committee in Warwick. Was unsuccessful Democratic candidate for representative in third Warwick district in 1932.

Peter E. Vitullo: Warren. Member of Warren Democratic town committee for last 6 years.

Daniel J. Kehew, Jr.: Newport. President of Young Men's Democratic Club of Newport. In 1932 election was active in registration work for Democrats and served as Democratic supervisor in district 2, precinct 1. Alternate delegate to Democratic congressional convention for second district in 1932.

Timothy F. O'Hearn: Westerly. Democratic State central committeeman from Narragansett. Member of Democratic State executive committee, secretary of Narragansett Democratic town committee. Democratic candidate for senator in Narragansett in 1932.

James C. Appleton: Cranston. Active member of Edgewood and Pawtuxet Democratic Association. Democratic supervisor in 1932 election.

William J. Bannon: Pawtucket. A personal friend of Thomas H. Bride, Jr., Mr. de St. Aubin's chief assistant.

Richard J. Gilduff: Providence. Democratic Representative from first Providence district from 1912 to 1922. Democratic candidate for reading clerk of house, 1925. Democratic candidate for Providence Board of Canvassers, 1930, and again in 1931.

Another article, appearing in the Evening Bulletin of January 6, 1934, is as follows:

CRANSTON DEMOCRATS USE UNITED STATES JOB OFFICE TO STRENGTHEN PARTY—KENNELLY FOUND TO HAVE BIG PART IN ALLOTING WORK—FORMER DEMOCRATIC CITY CHAIRMAN HAS NO OFFICIAL CONNECTION WITH SERVICE—SPECIFIC CASES TRACED—CONDITIONS SIMILAR TO THOSE UNCOVERED IN WARREN OFFICE

The Cranston office of the Federal reemployment service, which supplies workers for C.W.A. projects, is being used by Democratic politicians, like the Warren office of the same service, to build up the fences of the Democratic Party.

The Evening Bulletin herewith presents evidence that former Democratic City Chairman Thomas A. Kennelly, not in any way officially connected with the service, has a good deal to say as to who among the many applicants for jobs shall be given work in the C.W.A. in Cranston.

The evidence throws some light on the extent to which the Cranston office of Percival de St. Aubin, State director, is being operated in harmony with President Roosevelt's directions that the Reemployment Service should be kept out of politics and should give work to needy men without any consideration of their political affiliations and backgrounds.

The Bulletin has statements revealing that three men who registered with Mr. de St. Aubin's Cranston office were placed on C.W.A. jobs only after Kennelly's influence had been exercised in their behalf. Two of these men saw Kennelly—the other got work after his father had seen Kennelly.

Still another man says Kennelly came to him and said he could place him in a C.W.A. job if he registered with the reemployment office. He says he told Kennelly he "didn't want the job."

The Bulletin informed Mr. Kennelly of each of these statements and requested his comment upon them. In each case, his reply was: "I have nothing to do with the C.W.A. and I am not responsible for stories that do not originate with me."

These specific cases are reported to be typical of many others in which men have quickly obtained C.W.A. jobs in Cranston after Mr. Kennelly had put in a word in their behalf at the local office of the Reemployment Service. To meet the C.W.A. pay rolls, the Nation will spend during the 6 months ending May 1 about three quarters of a billion dollars, and of this amount the taxpayers of Rhode Island will eventually have to pay from 15 to 20 million dollars. A Democratic politician, holding no public office, has generously shouldered the burden of deciding to whom Cranston's share of this expenditure will go.

The beneficiaries of Mr. Kennelly's influence with Mr. de St. Aubin's Cranston office describe his activities for them as acts of friendship.

The picture in Cranston differs not in essentials but only in details from that in Bristol County. A week ago the Bulletin disclosed that at least 30 cards directing men to go to work on Barrington C.W.A. projects had been delivered from Mr. de St. Aubin's Warren office, not by mail or by any employee of that office but by Jacob de Spirito, president of the Barrington Democratic Club.

In Barrington it had become common knowledge that only deserving Democrats, or those who promised to be deserving, need apply. In Cranston word has spread through the ranks of the unemployed that the surest way to get a C.W.A. job is to see Tom Kennelly.

The head of the Warren office is Peter E. Vitullo, a member of the Warren Democratic town committee. The head of the Cranston office is James C. Appleton, a young man who has been active in the Edgewood and Pawtuxet Democratic Association and in Democratic politics in the first ward, where he was a Democratic supervisor at the 1932 election.

These men, and the heads of all other branch offices in Rhode Island of the Federal reemployment service, were appointed by Mr. de St. Aubin as State director of that Service. Thomas H. Bride, Jr., Mr. de St. Aubin's assistant director in the Providence headquarters, was the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for State senator from Cranston at the last election.

PARTY WORKERS GET JOBS

Other prominent Democratic workers in Cranston have no cause to complain at the new deal. Working as foremen on C.W.A. projects at the State institutions are Michael Como, a former Democratic city councilman; William Harvey, brother of Democratic City Chairman Frederick J. Harvey; and Salver Ruggieri, a member of the fifth ward Democratic committee. They are receiving 72 cents an hour, which foots up to $21.60 for a 30-hour week.

Thomas A. Kennelly was elected Democratic city chairman in Cranston following the 1930 election, and served until a few weeks before the 1932 election. He is the big Democratic power in the fourth ward. But in State politics he is known as one of the small group that worked unremittingly to obtain for William S. Flynn the Democratic nomination for Governor in 1922.

David Goodman, of 14 Mayfield Avenue, Cranston, has the job of carrying water for the men who work on a C.W.A. project on Atwood Avenue. He told the Bulletin that he registered with the Reemployment Service and then waited a long time without getting any job. He says he then saw Tom Kennelly. Kennelly told him to drop in at the reemployment office. He did so and immediately a card was given to him and he was assigned to work in the C.W.A.

Goodman said that he did not know positively that Kennelly put in a word for him. He only knew that he registered; that he did not get a job for a long time; that he saw Kennelly; that Kennelly told him to go back to Mr. Appleton's office; that he did so and that he got a job at once.

ANOTHER INSTANCE

Latham Buddington, of Bateman Avenue, works on the same C.W.A. job with Goodman. He was pointed out by Goodman as another who got his job through Kennelly. Buddington said he didn't know who arranged for him to be put to work in the C.W.A.—"it was someone my father saw."

The Bulletin consulted Latham's father, Arthur N. Buddington. He said it was Tom Kennelly who got the C.W.A. job for his son, but wanted it known that it was an act of friendship.

"I told Mr. Kennelly", said Buddington, "that Latham had not worked for 4 years and 8 months, and that he had registered at the reemployment office at the first opportunity and had been told repeatedly there was no work at present.

"I did not go to Mr. Kennelly because he was in politics, but I met him and in the course of conversation I mentioned some of the difficulties being experienced, and he said if the boy reported at the reemployment office he would be cared for. He went there and secured a job.

"Mr. Kennelly was very kind to do it. It was just an act of kindness. He did not give a note and the boy did not have to say anything but give his name at the office."

Lewis N. Sault, a Democratic candidate for a seat in the House of Representatives from the fourth Cranston district at the last election, and an automobile mechanic by occupation, informed the Bulletin that Kennelly told him he could place him in a C.W.A. job if he registered with the Federal reemployment office in Cranston.

DID NOT NEED JOB

"I have been fortunate", Mr. Sault said. "I have been able to keep busy, and I told Tom I did not want the job. I gave him the name of a man I thought would be pleased to accept the offer."

Mr. Sault declined to reveal the name he had given to Mr. Kennelly and said he did not know whether the man had obtained a job. "Politics have entered on both sides", he said. "The other side will not give a job to a Democrat."

He was told that the Bulletin was anxious to discover abuses in the C.W.A. by anyone of whatever political affiliation. He was asked to give specific instances were any Republican had played politics in giving C.W.A. jobs. He declined to do so.

(The organization that administered the old relief system in Cranston is Republican. When the C.W.A. was instituted Cranston was given a quota of 990 jobs to fill. Of these jobs 297 were filled by the transfer of men from the old relief lists. To fill the rest of the jobs requisitions were sent from time to time to the Federal reemployment office in Cranston, as is the requirement under the C.W.A. regulations. Cranston Democrats have complained in the past that the Republicans were playing politics by delaying the beginning of C.W.A. projects so as to provide no more jobs than necessary for those who had registered with Mr. Appleton's office.)

NO JOB FORTHCOMING

Irvin Smith, of 154 Curtis Street, Meshanticut Park, told the Bulletin that he registered for work when the Federal reemployment service opened an office in Providence last September. When the Cranston branch office was opened later, he said, he went there to register again but was told his card was in the file and the first registration was sufficient.

He said he has not received work, but that he has friends who had registered and had then seen Mr. Kennelly and were put to work immediately. He said Joseph Rogers, of 1956 Cranston Street, got a job 3 days after seeing Mr. Kennelly. He said Rogers had told him so.

A Bulletin man went to Mr. Rogers' home. Rogers was not there, but his mother said she knew Joseph had registered at the reemployment office and had been given work shortly after he had seen Mr. Kennelly.

"If it hadn't been for Mr. Kennelly, Joseph might not be working", she said.

Smith said he also needs a job badly because there is no one working in his home. He was one of the very first Cranston men to register with Mr. de St. Aubin's service, but he has not seen Mr. Kennelly.

I may say that Cranston is one of the thriving cities of the State of Rhode Island. It adjoins Providence, and has a population of approximately 50,000.

Another article, appearing in the Evening Bulletin on January 10, 1934, is as follows:

RELIEF LISTS MORE THAN DOUBLED SINCE TRANSFERS TO C.W.A.—TREND AROUSES CODY, WHO ORDERS "ADEQUATE" INQUIRIES AS TO NEED OF APPLICANTS—STEADY INCREASE SHOWN—CASE LOAD, REDUCED TO 2,100 AT START OF C.W.A. WORK, HAS RISEN TO 5,752

Aroused at the continued growth of relief lists in Rhode Island since the transfers to Civil Works Administration projects were made, George R. Cody, secretary of the State unemployment relief commission, has notified State relief administrators that "adequate investigations as to the need of applicants" must be made.

Mr. Cody informed the administrators that there has been a tendency toward making only superficial investigations since C.W.A. was inaugurated 6 weeks ago. In this connection it was learned that C.W.A. in this State has expended about $1,100,000 up to this time.

Case-load figures compiled at the State unemployment relief commission show a steady increase in the relief lists since November 16, when C.W.A. transfers became effective. On that date there were 12,143 on work or home relief, and during the next 2 weeks approximately 10,000 were transferred to C.W.A., leaving approximately 2,100.

CASE LOAD JUMPS

The case load on December 30 had jumped from that approximate figure to 5,752, with many of the towns showing large increases.

Mr. Cody said today that the idea persons on relief rolls would be chosen for C.W.A. jobs quicker than if they were registered with the Federal Reemployment Service only is responsible for much of the increase in the relief rolls.

"This idea is erroneous", Mr. Cody said. "No one can be transferred to C.W.A. from relief rolls, except in cases where they are selected from the reemployment offices, and, as far as I know, selection from those lists is based on qualifications for the work, not need.

"These cases have all been investigated and found to be needy, but I do not believe they should get any preference over persons who have been self-sustaining while waiting to be chosen for C.W.A. from the reemployment lists. No such preference can be given anyway."

Much of the increase, according to directors of public aid, is due primarily to C.W.A. Many persons never before on relief applied for C.W.A. jobs when that plan began to operate, and, pending their selection from the Federal Reemployment Service, asked for relief.

Mr. Cody's instructions to the State relief administrators, dated January 5, and never made public before, read:

"It is extremely important that there be no let down in the manner of making careful investigations to all new applications for relief. There has been a tendency since the launching of the Civil Works program, because many people were under the impression that the way to get a job was to get on the relief rolls, for the relief officials in some parts of the State to make only superficial investigations before relief was given. I want to urge that the utmost care be taken in the making of adequate investigations as to the need of the applicants."

WOONSOCKET'S INCREASE

An indication of the growth of relief rolls can be gleaned from the figures for Woonsocket. The week ending November 18 there were 944 men and women on relief rolls. Of this total 802 were able to work and were transferred to C.W.A. within the next 2 weeks, leaving 142. Since that transfer Woonsocket's list has jumped from 142 to 844 on December 30—to within 100 of the total before transfers were made.

Alderman James H. Holland, spokesman for the Woonsocket Work Relief Bureau, commenting on the increase in his city's work-relief lists, made the statement: "I expect that the present number on work-relief rolls will decrease by approximately 200 as soon as that number of individuals realize they cannot obtain jobs on C.W.A. projects."

"The number of persons receiving relief in Woonsocket now is not so great as the number afforded relief at this time last year", Alderman Holland said. "Late in December 1932 there were approximately 2,000 receiving aid."

COMPLICATED FIGURES

Woonsocket transferred 802 to C.W.A. and now has 844 on relief, a total of 1,646, and this figure does not include the number since been given C.W.A. jobs through the Federal Reemployment Service. This number approximates 400, so that persons securing funds under C.W.A. or work and home relief totaled about 2,000 at the end of December 1933, as well as the year before.

Alderman Holland said, "Woonsocket's relief problems have been much more difficult of solution during the past few months than those of other cities and towns in the State. Our manufacturing industries have been much more affected by the recent let down in business conditions." He predicted there will be a pick-up in the woolen and worsted industries shortly.

Providence also shows a large increase in its relief lists since the C.W.A. transfer. The city had 836 on work and home relief after the C.W.A. transfer, and on December 30 this figure had grown to 1,869—more than double.

REIDY EXPLAINS

Edward P. Reidy, Providence director of public aid, laid part of this increase to the fact that many persons seeking C.W.A. jobs came to his office to apply. When informed that the jobs could not be given to them except through the Federal Reemployment Service, these people asked for aid, and after investigation were found to be needy. But, Mr. Reidy pointed out, it was the desire to get on C.W.A. that prompted these people to visit his office, and the result was an increase in the relief lists.

"I don't know how these people were getting by before they came to us", Mr. Reidy said. "Perhaps relatives were helping them or they were getting part-time work. We are now back to where we were last March, counting the number now on relief, the number transferred to C.W.A., and the number requisitioned for C.W.A. We had about 8,300 then and we have about that number now. During the summer we dropped to 4,300, and that was not all a seasonal drop. Many people went to work in all kinds of jobs during the summer, but now they are coming back."

PAWTUCKET LIST GROWS

Pawtucket has almost doubled its relief list since the C.W.A. transfers, but Dr. Robert E. Kelley said he believed the increase to be seasonal. The city had 1,449 on the work-and-home relief November 18, transferred all but 471, and on December 30 had a case load of 927.

Cranston more than doubled its relief list in the 6-week period, and John Hamilton, director of public aid, attributed the increase to the same reason as Mr. Reidy. He said applicants come in to get C.W.A. jobs, register at the Federal reemployment office, and then apply for aid to carry them until they have been selected for C.W.A. jobs. He said that after investigation it is found that these applicants are needy and they are placed on the rolls.

Cranston transferred all but 125 of its work-and-home relief workers to the C.W.A., and now has 278 receiving relief.

Warren had 215 on the work-and-home relief and transferred all but 16. Since then the town relief rolls have grown to 78, and Edward Maguire, deputy C.W.A. administrator, laid the increase to the small C.W.A. quota given the town. He said that because of the small quota many people could not get C.W.A. jobs and were forced to apply for relief. Also, about four men were transferred back to relief because they were discharged from C.W.A. projects.

UNUSUAL PICTURE

Jamestown presents an unusual picture. There were 53 transferred to C.W.A. and all assigned to Federal projects. No one was left on work or home relief, and this condition prevailed until just before Christmas when 26 came on the relief rolls, and a week later 27 had been investigated and found to be worthy cases.

Thomas F. Sheehan, director of public aid, said that these are all new cases. He pointed out that there have been two lean summer seasons, and that this caused the increase. He also said that the idea that through work relief could be found the door to a C.W.A. job was the motivating power in some cases, but insisted all are needy cases.

Central Falls shot up almost 100 percent after the transfer. The city had 85 left on work-and-home relief, but on December 30 this figure had sprung up to 165. City treasurer, Joseph T. Curran, accounted for part of this increase by stating that included in the total are cases under which supplemental aid is given. He said these are cases now employed in industry but who do not earn sufficient to live on, and apply for supplementary aid.

In that connection, published in the same edition of the same paper, was a tabulation of the relief rolls, showing increases in the number of those applying for relief since the C.W.A. went into operation. I ask that that tabulation be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RELIEF ROLLS JUMP GREATLY SINCE TRANSFER TO CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION JOBS

The table shows how the State unemployment relief lists in Rhode Island have grown since the transfers were made to Civil Works Administration last November:

	On relief rolls Nov. 18	Transferred to Civil Works Administration	Balance after transfer	On relief Dec. 30
Barrington	65			14
Bristol	213	167	46	68
Burrillville	43			14
Central Falls	376	291	85	165
Charlestown	5			2
Coventry	61	55	6	31
Cranston	422	297	125	278
Cumberland	139	111	18	128
East Greenwich	47	43	4	23
East Providence	567			203
Exeter [1]
Foster	31	22	9	30
Glocester	2			2
Hopkinton	31	31	0	0
Jamestown	53	53	0	27
Johnston	180	180	0	98
Lincoln	53	41	12	16
Little Compton	29	29	0	16
Middletown	59	53	6	42
Narragansett	55	36	19	23
Newport	557	536	21	194
New Shoreham	15	15	0	0
North Kingstown	49	49	0	16
North Providence	94			57
North Smithfield	32	32	0	38
Pawtucket	1,449	978	471	927
Portsmouth	51			16
Providence	5,171	4,335	836	1,860
Richmond	11	10	1	2
Scituate	68	68	0	13
Smithfield	49	42	7	33
South Kingstown	105	87	18	54
Tiverton	47	47	0	5
Warren	215	199	16	78
Warwick	451	308	143	171
Westerly	220			85
West Greenwich	8			10
West Warwick	176	130	46	169
Woonsocket	944	802	142	844
Total	12,143	[2] 10,000	[2] 2,100	5,752

[1] Not operating at present time.

[2] These are approximate figures. The cities and towns for which no figures of transfer are shown transferred the great majority of their cases to C.W.A., and in some cases, all to C.W.A.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I assume that this activity is a part of what has been described to us during the past few months as the "new deal." I have no quarrel with those who want to change the existing order. I have opposed this form of relief, and I have explained already in my remarks this afternoon the reason why I have opposed it; but I would not oppose the consideration of a change in the existing order. Under our form of government, I concede it to be the right of the citizens of this country to have that government which they want. But I am not unmindful of the provisions which have been set out in our fundamental law as the method of bringing about those changes. I am opposed to changing the fundamental law by mere legislative fiat, and that, I think, we have been doing here for the past 10 months.

I may say, parenthetically, that I opposed all such proceedings. I have some regard for the provisions of the Constitution. I know there are those who feel that it is out-moded. I know there are those who think that it no longer serves the purposes of our country, that it should be changed, that it ought to give way to the new order.

Only last evening a statement was made in my presence that it might be well for citizens of New England to take a trip out into the Middle West, and to the far West, perhaps, to get an idea of the thought of the people, to learn what the masses of the people are thinking. That might be of advantage; but I am not unmindful of the fact that this whole program is experimental in its nature. That is admitted by those who advocate it.

I prefer to be guided by the lamp of experience. We do know that we have been eminently successful under our form of Government, and that whenever there is an urge for a change in the fundamental law, it does not take very long to effect a change, once the people want it. That was clearly demonstrated when we removed from the Constitution the eighteenth amendment, and it took but a few months to do it.

I believe that if there is any urgent demand on the part of a majority of the people of this country to bring about such a change, it can be accomplished, and it can be accomplished in accordance with the provisions of that covenant into which the founders of this country entered 150 years ago. I favor that mode of procedure. So I oppose all measures which have for their object the chiseling away of any part of the foundation of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate for more than 5 minutes. I simply wanted to make a statement, before we reached a vote, in view of the fact that I opposed the inauguration of the movement which now is at full flood tide.

I do not think it is a matter of how much money we appropriate, whether it be $2,500,000,000 or $950,000,000. If we do not make the appropriation $2,500,000,000 now, we are certain to do so by May. It is not a question of the amount.

When this movement was inaugurated, I sounded what I regarded as a warning, that it was not the length of the step we were taking, but that it was the direction in which we were taking it. It is not a matter of degree now; it is a matter of what is to be the effect.

I have been considerably concerned over our financial ability to carry out the program. I am equally concerned about the effect it is going to have upon the entire social and political fabric of our civilization. No one can look upon the movement which has resulted in what is really a dole without a feeling of wonder and fear. Mr. Hopkins said the particular relief we are now providing in this way is not as good as the British dole, that that would be better and would be less expensive. What worries me is not so much its cost, which is fabulous, but the obvious effect it is going to have upon our social and political order.

My concern at the present time is that, having inaugurated the program, it cannot be stopped. It would be cruel to stop it under present conditions. Having launched it as a Federal function, thereby destroying the local reliance that heretofore has always been sufficient to satisfy the needs, there is nothing left except to get out of it the best we may.

I look upon the growing expenditures as an exceedingly serious matter. Being $9,000,000 a day last July, they reached $16,000,000 a day by October, $24,000,000 a day by December, and $32,000,000 a day last month. We are in the course of carrying out a program which will mean an expenditure of $15,000,000,000 a year if the present rate of expenditure shall be continued. The public debt in 1930 was $16,500,000,000; it is now $27,000,000,000, and by the close of next year it will be beyond $32,000,000,000. At the rate of 4 percent, the interest charge alone upon that debt will amount to $1,360,000,000, to say nothing whatever about the sinking fund. That interest charge is three times the total cost of the Government, including the Army and Navy, under the administration of Col. Theodore Roosevelt.

I have been concerned about what will be the end of it. Spokesmen for the policy have announced today that the only way out is by scaling down debts. When the Government starts upon that course it means repudiation. There is a very pronounced conviction throughout the country that there will be no satisfactory outcome until we shall cancel all local indebtednesses, including individual indebtedness. How is it going to be done? Evidently it will not be done by the brutal method of officially canceling them; but it will be by way of cheapening the dollar in an inflation movement. That ultimately will be the method chosen.

One spokesman today said there is no such thing as balancing the Budget. I think he voiced the view of a great many people that we ought not to be concerned about governmental indebtedness, that it is not a matter to be looked into, but that we should proceed on the present basis, spending ourselves into prosperity and reaching the zero point where there is nothing further to divide.

I cannot see a bright future for our country by pursuing such a course as that. Years ago, Jerry Simpson, in the House of Representatives made a startling remark in relation to a movement which was then being discussed. He said, "Where in the devil are we at"? The famous Thomas B. Reed said, "That is a thing that nobody can ever tell when it is applicable to the Member who asks the question." I am paraphrasing that remark. "Where are we at" today in the midst of this program and where do we go from here? Yet there is nothing at this stage to do except to continue until we can perhaps taper off and get out of the situation with the least burden possible.

But, Mr. President, getting out of it is going to be a good deal harder than anything we have ever yet undertaken. I think I stated the truth a year ago at the time we launched upon it, when I said we have begun a thing we will never stop. That is my opinion today. We have the choice of two evils. I shall vote against the amendment; and if I were to have the privilege of voting upon the bill—which I will not have because I am paired with an absent Senator—I should feel constrained to vote for it because we cannot stop at this stage; but I want my colleagues to realize that I am deeply concerned about where this program is leading us, because it is certainly going to get beyond our control.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it appears we are about ready to vote, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Couzens	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Cutting	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	Davis	Lewis	Schall
Barbour	Dickinson	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barkley	Dieterich	Long	Shipstead
Black	Dill	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Duffy	McGill	Steiwer
Brown	Fess	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Gibson	McNary	Thompson
Bulow	Goldsborough	Murphy	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Neely	Trammell
Capper	Hale	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Clark	Harrison	Overton	Van Nuys
Connally	Hatch	Pittman	Walsh
Coolidge	Hayden	Pope	Wheeler
Copeland	Hebert	Reynolds	White

Mr. LEWIS. I am requested to state that the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] is occasioned by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

Mr. LONG. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to occupy only a moment.

I feel that the legislation we have before us is the only solution which has been proposed, and, in my opinion, is a very wise solution of the problem which confronts us at the present time.

We have heard considerable criticism, but we have heard no constructive suggestions. This is true not only of the present hour but it has been true during the last year, since the incoming administration assumed charge of the affairs of Government.

I believe that it was wise on the part of the administration to adopt the plan; that in the main it has been a wonderful benefit to the American people; that it has caused more money to flow into general circulation and into the channels of trade than any other plan that might have been adopted. So I very heartily join with my friends in the Senate in supporting this measure.

I wish to announce, however, that I should not desire to have the impression go forth that, so far as I am concerned, the enactment of this proposed legislation carries with it a declaration that this policy and the plans adopted pursuant to it are working to a termination, say, in May of this year. I believe we should confront the problem as it presents itself from time to time, and as it presents itself in May of this year.

I do not believe the conditions of the country and of those in destitution who require aid and relief are such that we should at this time, in forecast, issue a declaration of policy that there is to be a termination of this character of aid in May.

My best understanding is that no such policy is contemplated by the administration or by those who are supporting the legislation. In supporting the bill I certainly do not have any such view in contemplation. Otherwise, I gladly support it.

As to the amount of appropriation that has been proposed, the administration that has been in charge of this policy, the administration that is most familiar with the needs and the conditions and the statistics, has recommended a certain amount. I appreciate the beneficent spirit and the humanitarian policy which has ever actuated Senators upon this floor who have proposed that we increase the amount from $950,000,000 to $2,500,000,000; but I believe we can safely trust the administration that inaugurated this policy, that had sufficient humanitarian spirit and desire to aid the American people to bring it forth, that is most familiar with its details, as to the sum which should be appropriated.

For that reason I shall support the appropriation of $950,000,000 recommended by the administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], but I understand that he would vote the same way that I shall vote on this particular amendment. Therefore I am privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CUTTING (when Mr. NORRIS' name was called). The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. STEIWER (when his name was called). On this question I have a special pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

May I add that if the Senator from Nebraska were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea", and the Senator from Vermont, if present and at liberty to vote, would vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay", and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]; the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]; the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]; the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]; and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

I am advised and authorized to state to the Senate that Senators FLETCHER, TYDINGS, CARAWAY, BYRD, LOGAN, and GLASS, if present and voting, would vote "nay." I also wish to announce the general pair of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. I am advised that, if present, he would have voted as I have voted. Therefore I shall allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY].

Senators HATFIELD, METCALF, HASTINGS, REED, and AUSTIN, if present, would vote "nay" on this question. I am not advised how the other Senators would vote.

I also announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]; and

The Senator from Californa [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

I am instructed to inform the Senate that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] would vote "nay" if present.

Senators BORAH, LOGAN, and BYRD would vote "nay" on this question, if present; and Senators JOHNSON, NYE, and FRAZIER would vote "yea."

I am also requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily absent. I have not been advised how he would vote on this question.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—10

Black	Cutting	Long	Shipstead
Bone	Dill	McCarran	Wheeler
Costigan	La Follette

NAYS—58

Adams	Couzens	King	Russell
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Schall
Bachman	Dickinson	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dieterich	McGill	Smith
Barbour	Duffy	McKellar	Steiwer
Barkley	Fess	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gibson	Murphy	Thompson
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Neely	Townsend
Bulow	Gore	O'Mahoney	Trammell
Byrnes	Hale	Overton	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Pittman	Van Nuys
Clark	Hatch	Pope	Walsh
Connally	Hayden	Reynolds	White
Coolidge	Hebert	Robinson, Ark.
Copeland	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.

NOT VOTING—28

Austin	Fletcher	Kean	Patterson
Bailey	Frazier	Logan	Reed
Borah	George	McAdoo	Stephens
Byrd	Glass	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Caraway	Hastings	Norbeck	Tydings
Carey	Hatfield	Norris	Wagner
Erickson	Johnson	Nye	Walcott

So Mr. CUTTING's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 2, line 2, I move to strike out the figures "$950,000,000" and insert the figures "$1,500,000,000."

This issue has been thoroughly debated, and I do not propose to detain the Senate at this late hour further than to say that, if this amendment shall be agreed to, it will enable the Civil Works Administration to carry on at its present level of activities until the time which so many Senators have indicated, namely, the 1st of May, shall arrive, and it will be possible to determine whether there has been such an increase in normal business activity or in the Public Works Administration or in agricultural employment as will justify the reduction of the Civil Works force.

If this amendment shall not be agreed to, it will mean that, beginning tomorrow, 250,000 persons now employed on civil works will be demobilized each week, until the 1st of May there will be no person in the United States employed on civil works.

During the course of this debate there has been some criticism of the kind of projects and of the administration which has been set up to carry forward this work. Every person familiar with the program knows that as time has gone on the character of the projects has steadily become better and the efficiency of administration has steadily improved. If a rapid demobilization is commenced tomorrow, it means that, even though the Congress and the Executive should change their minds later in the spring and determine it necessary to revive this work, a new organization will have to be drawn together; it means that there will be no planning upon the projects which are available, and that we will have the same tragic experience when this program shall be revived that we had at its inception.

I therefore have offered the amendment in the hope that it might appeal to the wisdom of the Senate that this work should be continued until we are in possession of the facts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be voted down. I base my objection to it upon the same arguments that have been made heretofore, and for the same reason.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that it was the purpose of the Civil Works Administration to demobilize the work at the rate of 250,000 men a week commencing tomorrow?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that is correct; that statement is contained in the testimony. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the statement is correct that it is contemplated under this bill to begin demobilization at the rate of 250,000 men a week beginning tomorrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, Mr. Hopkins stated that it was the purpose of the administration gradually to reduce the number so that by May 1 the Civil Works program would cease.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire, of course, to vote with the administration on a question of this character, but I am entirely out of harmony with the idea that a plan should be adopted which would result in demobilizing all these people by the 1st of May, and I have been supporting the measure, if that is true, under a misapprehension.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, did I lose the floor?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for permitting me to speak.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to suggest, Mr. President, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Florida, that there should be no misunderstanding of the situation that confronts us upon this question. Beginning tomorrow 250,000 persons now employed on civil works will be demobilized per week until by the 1st of May there will not be a single person in the United States employed upon civil works. That is the kind of gradual demobilization which will ensue if we stand upon the appropriation provided in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. In other words, Mr. President, between now and May 1, 4,150,000 men now employed on civil works will be out of employment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Precisely.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wish to inform the Senator from Florida for his further information that the demobilizing starts in Florida, and because of the nice weather they have down there they will probably demobilize all the people on C.W.A. work in a couple of weeks.

Mr. TRAMMELL. We can stand it better, of course, than some other parts of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Wisconsin knows that under the pending bill an appropriation of $950,000,000 is made, and the gradual reduction of the C.W.A. applies only to $450,000,000. It is all under the control of the President and he can direct the procedure. The whole $950,000,000 can be used for that purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; the difficulty with the Senator's statement is that $500,000,000 of this amount is required for direct relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is to extend over a period until next January, if it is to be used in that way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not assume that the Senator has any desire to make a statement which is not substantiated by the record; as I understand it, $500,000,000 is required for relief purposes, and $450,000,000 of this appropriation, making $950,000,000 in all, is to be used for civil works. It clearly is in the testimony—and Mr. Hopkins so informed the committee—that demobilization of Civil Works activity would begin and that it would be terminated on the 1st of May.

If Senators wish to vote in favor of putting 4,000,000 persons back upon direct relief, that, of course, is their responsibility. But I do not think that any Senator should vote under a misapprehension as to the effect of the policy, not only upon economic activity but upon human beings; the 4,000,000 persons and their dependents who are involved in the vote we are about to take.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement I made a moment ago with reference to my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably absent from the Senate, I feel free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay", and if I were permitted to vote I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to reannounce the pairs as stated by me previously and also the yeas and nays as stated by me previously, if the Senators who are paired were present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). Announcing the same pair as on the previous vote, I am informed that my pair, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], would vote as I have voted. Therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the pairs which were announced by me on the previous vote obtain on this vote, and that the Senators thus paired would vote the same way on this amendment as indicated on the last vote.

Mr. STEIWER (after having voted in the negative). I find that my pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is effective as to this vote. I will transfer the pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], as I did previously, and permit my vote to stand. If the Senator from Vermont were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] are paired. I am unable to state how they would vote if present. I wish also to repeat my announcement of Senators who are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—14

Black	Dill	McCarran	Shipstead
Bone	Hatch	Murphy	Wheeler
Costigan	La Follette	Pope
Cutting	Long	Russell

NAYS—52

Adams	Copeland	Hebert	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Couzens	Keyes	Schall
Bachman	Davis	King	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Lewis	Smith
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Steiwer
Barkley	Duffy	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Fess	McKellar	Thompson
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Neely	Trammell
Capper	Gore	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Clark	Hale	Overton	Van Nuys
Connally	Harrison	Reynolds	Walsh
Coolidge	Hayden	Robinson, Ark.	White

NOT VOTING—30

Austin	Fletcher	Logan	Reed
Bailey	Frazier	McAdoo	Stephens
Borah	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Glass	Norbeck	Tydings
Byrd	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Carey	Johnson	Patterson
Erickson	Kean	Pittman

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question in connection with the telegram I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas presents a telegram, which will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

AUSTIN, TEX.

Hon. TOM CONNALLY,
Senate Office Building:

Request allotment to Texas $225,000 to supplement like amount from Texas hospitalization 500 indigent tubercular cases in private sanitarium.

J. W. E. H. BECK,
Senator, Chairman Public Health Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee is it his contention that the language of this bill in lines 2 to 5, on page 2, is sufficiently comprehensive to warrant the action of the Federal Administrator in granting a request of that character?

Mr. McKELLAR. Undoubtedly. That language reads as follows:

The sum of $950,000,000, which shall be available for expenditure for such projects and/or purposes and under such rules and regulations as the President in his discretion may prescribe.

It would undoubtedly cover that subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, the President or, under his direction, the relief administrator may make regulations to authorize the Federal Government to supplement a like amount of funds from a State government for the treatment of charity and indigent patients in hospitals suffering from tubercular or other diseases?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt that it is entirely in the discretion of the President and his administrator.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is in charge of the bill and that is his construction of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my judgment as to what the bill means.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. Any State director or administrator for any State whose duties involve the disbursement of funds under the Federal Emergency Relief Administration or under the Federal Civil Works Administration for any State shall be appointed for such State by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this entire movement, from its inception until the present moment, belongs to and is attached to this administration. The credit for its success or the blame for the failure of the movement belongs to the administration. The States themselves select for the organization now set up the Civil Works projects that are most available and most beneficial for their own internal improvement and for the benefit of their people. We place the credit where it belongs, and the responsibility should rest there. That those who administer it should be in harmony with the full policy of the law cannot be denied. It seems to me that the administration should have a voice in nominating those who will spend the public money; but the Senate of the United States would not have permitted for a moment in years past, and should not permit even today, anyone to disburse $950,000,000 without first having passed upon the responsibility and the eligibility of the man or men who are to disburse that money.

Because of the emergency, in view of the publicity that has gone forth, in view of the charges of scandal and fraud that have cut into the allotments, there is no reason now why we should not scrutinize those who will spend the public money. For that reason I am submitting the amendment.

More than that, those who are in the States where this public money is to be expended should have some voice in determining who shall direct and control the expenditures of the public moneys within the respective States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do.

Mr. LONG. The Senator's amendment only requires confirmation by the Senate?

Mr. McCARRAN. Appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Of whom?

Mr. McCARRAN. Of the public administrators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I do not know how that Senator would vote on this question. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. STEIWER (when his name was called). Repeating my former announcement, I withhold my vote, not knowing how my pair would vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. Not being informed how he would vote if present, I am not at liberty to vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to reannounce on this vote the general pairs previously announced on the former vote, but I am not advised as to how the various Senators would vote on this particular amendment.

Mr. KING. I have a pair on this vote with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote on this question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have been informed that my pair, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to further announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—42

Adams	Davis	Long	Thomas, Utah
Bailey	Dieterich	McCarran	Thompson
Barbour	Dill	McGill	Townsend
Black	Duffy	Murphy	Trammell
Bone	Gibson	Neely	Vandenberg
Brown	Goldsborough	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Bulow	Gore	Overton	Walsh
Capper	Hatch	Reynolds	Wheeler
Clark	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	White
Coolidge	Lewis	Russell
Copeland	Lonergan	Smith

NAYS—19

Bankhead	Cutting	Hebert	Robinson, Ark.
Barkley	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Byrnes	Hale	McKellar	Sheppard
Connally	Harrison	McNary	Shipstead
Couzens	Hayden	Pope

NOT VOTING—35

Ashurst	Erickson	Kean	Pittman
Austin	Fess	King	Reed
Bachman	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McAdoo	Stephens
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Glass	Norbeck	Tydings
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Costigan	Johnson	Patterson

So Mr. MCCARRAN'S amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer. I will have to read it, because it is in my own handwriting and the clerk probably cannot decipher it.

In line 23, page 2, after the word "duty", I move to insert the following:

Provided further, That a further sum of $50,000,000 is appropriated and shall be transferred to the several States in proportion to population, to be disbursed by said States for the operation of their respective public schools, by and through their respective State educational boards and departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Is it in order to move to instruct the conferees before or after the conferees are appointed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know just what the Senate rules provide in that respect. In the House of Representatives it is necessary to make the motion before they are appointed.

Mr. CLARK. Then, Mr. President, I move that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed to insist on the McCarran amendment, just adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, is the question debatable? If it is, I should like to make a brief statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All questions before the Senate are debatable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Nevada applies not only to Civil Works administrators in the States but also to those who are administering direct relief.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that there is no difference between them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. CLARK. I will state on the authority of Mr. Hopkins that the relief administrator is simply taken over and made the C.W.A. administrator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is not true in many States. I know it is not true in my own.

Before Senators tie the hands of the conferees on this question, I should like to point out that the whole set-up under the direct-relief bill which was passed provided for cooperation between the States and the Federal Government in extending relief; and the Governor, under the law, was directed to designate the authority through which the Federal relief administrator should work in connection with direct-relief activities. It seems to me unjust from the point of view of the States, so long as they are putting up a portion of the money for direct relief—as some of them still are—that we should insist upon a Presidential appointee to administer, in part, State funds.

Furthermore, it seems to me that before the Senate upsets the entire organization under the direct relief act, the matter should have more consideration than this amendment has obtained from the Senate. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he ought not to tie the hands of the conferees in considering the phraseology of this amendment as it has been agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I make a point of order that the motion of the Senator from Missouri is not in order, the Senator from Tennessee having already moved, and the Senate having agreed to his motion, that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is as familiar as I am with the fact that if that point of order is sustained I can accomplish the same purpose by making a motion to adhere. I do not want to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think a motion to adhere would be in order at this time.

Mr. CLARK. I differ from the Senator from Arkansas on the question of order.

In response to what the Senator from Wisconsin said, I have no desire whatever to tie the hands of the conferees; but the Senator from Wisconsin is as familiar as I am with the practice that has lately prevailed in this body, when the Senate has repeatedly adopted amendments of this character and they have gone to conference and have been dropped out, sometimes at the instance of the Senate conferees, without giving the Senate an opportunity to pass on the matter. Then a conference report is brought in here, which must be voted up or voted down.

If the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is willing to give us assurance that he will afford the Senate a chance to express its will on this matter again unless it can be agreed to or the amendment perfected I have no desire to press the motion for instructions at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Permit the Chair to suggest that the parliamentary clerk advises the Chair, who is not particularly familiar with the Senate rules, that it is in order, before conferees are appointed, to instruct them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly it is; but that is not the question before the Chair. The suggestion of the parliamentary clerk is gratuitous. The question before the Senate is the motion of my friend, the Senator from Missouri; and I make the point of order that the Senator from Tennessee has already made a motion that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees. It is not in order now to make a second motion that the Senate insist upon its amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conferees have not been appointed; and therefore, under general parliamentary law——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No motion has been made to instruct.

Mr. CLARK. I made a motion to instruct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I beg pardon. The motion of the Senator was that the conferees of the Senate be instructed to insist upon its amendments, which was the same motion that was made by the Senator from Tennessee. Of course I am aware that the Senator from Missouri knows what motion he can make, and how to make it. I understand that perfectly; but the motion he has made is clearly out of order, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. CLARK. Then, Mr. President, I move that the conferees to be appointed be instructed to insist on the McCarran amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the Chair rule on the point of order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before that is done let me suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the conferees, in my judgment—I know it will be so as far as I am concerned; I can answer for myself, and I think I can answer for the others—will in good faith insist upon this amendment; and if he desires, or if the Senate desires, and I think there is a desire here that we should do so, we will bring the matter back to the Senate for a vote.

Mr. CLARK. That is all I ask for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HALE, and Mr. KEYES conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORT OF ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN (H.DOC. NO. 133)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the requirements of section 6, of the Trading with the Enemy Act, I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Alien Property Custodian on proceedings had under the Trading with the Enemy Act for the year ended December 31, 1933.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

EXPENSES OF INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS (H.DOC. NO. 245)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an annual appropriation in the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and/or of the commissions established by that committee.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

[Enclosure: Report.]

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 828) to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 280) thereon.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED

Additional bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 2690) for the relief of Norris R. Wentworth, Lloyd J. Wentworth, J. K. Wentworth, Jr., and George Finley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2691) for the relief of Western Knitting Mills, Wallace G. Kay, and Kay & Co., Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2692) relating to the record of registry of certain aliens; to the Committee on Immigration.

SOME CONSTITUTIONAL ASPECTS OF THE NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT AND THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Prof. Robert A. Maurer, of the Georgetown University School of Law, which appeared in volume XXII, pages 207–231, Georgetown Law Journal, January 1934, be printed in the RECORD. It is a very able as well as comprehensive study of the National Industrial Recovery and Agricultural Adjustment Acts, and a clear treatment of them from the constitutional viewpoint. The article has already occasioned considerable comment among the legal profession and, indeed, has been adverted to by several members of the bench in their decisions construing these acts. I wish, therefore, to have it printed in the RECORD, so that it may be available to the general public as well as to students and libraries.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[NOTE BY EDITORIAL STAFF.—Mr. Justice Adkins, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, has said of this article: "I have also derived direct and substantial aid from * * * the draft of an article by Prof. Robert A. Maurer to be published in the January issue of the Georgetown Law Journal * * * on 'Some Constitutional Aspects of the National Industrial Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act'." The statement was part of Mr. Justice Adkins' opinion in Victor et al. v. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Eq. No. 56298, decided December 1, 1933 (61 Wash., L.Rep. 870), in which four retail distributors of gasoline in Detroit sought by injunction to restrain the Secretary from interfering with their actions in violation of the code adopted for the petroleum industry under the N.R.A., and in which the constitutionality of the act was upheld and the injunction denied.]

It is futile to attempt to prove that the Agricultural Adjustment Act[1] and the National Industrial Recovery Act[2] as a whole are constitutional or that they are unconstitutional. The problems presented by these acts are many and varied, and the whole does not admit of one categorical answer. It may be conceded that both statutes must be brought within the authority of Congress delegated to it, either expressly or impliedly, by the Constitution of the United States. Some suggestions have been offered of new constitutional theory. For example, it has been said that the "general welfare" clause of the preamble may justify an assumption of power in Congress. This is unsound; but since it has been offered, it should be said that were this clause a grant of power, which it is not,[3] yet it relates to the purpose of the Constitution as a whole, and it is quite obvious that the general welfare was sought to be promoted under a frame of government of dual character, separating Federal powers from State powers, and setting up countervailing departments with checks one upon another, with specific limitations upon all, and with specific guaranties to the people against excess of governmental authority. By all of these taken together is the "general welfare" to be promoted.

[1] Known as "A.A.A." (48 Stat. 31 (1933); 7 U.S.C. Supp., secs. 601–619 (1933).)

[2] Known as "N.R.A." (48 Stat. 195 (1933); 15 U.S.C. Supp., secs. 701–712 (1933).)

Again it has been suggested that the clause empowering Congress to lay and collect taxes for the general welfare[4] may be invoked to sanction an exercise of power by Congress beyond the scope of the other clauses in which lie the delegated powers of Congress.[5] If this suggestion relates to the money-raising and mere money-spending activities of Congress, all will concur, for the purposes of Federal taxation are admittedly broad, and there are no practical means, other than public opinion, to check the use of Federal money, where no regulatory power to command, to control, or to compel is sought to be exercised in connection with the spending,[6] except possibly in the extraordinary event that an officer refuses to disburse funds on the ground that the purpose is unconstitutional.

There is definite purpose in a written constitution. This one of ours was ordained and established in a time of great stress and strain. It was not intended as a mere fair-weather instrument. That the Federal Government is one of delegated powers will, of course, not be questioned, and it is not believed that constitutional limitations will be permitted by the Supreme Court to be lightly swept aside. That would be revolution indeed, for it would mean the end of constitutional government itself. It must be assumed that Congress intended to remain within established limits when it enacted the so-called "N.R.A." and "A.A.A." statutes. The objects of this legislation were very far-reaching, yet an analysis of the statutes indicates a clearly discernible purpose to secure industrial recovery, in part through a broad voluntary effort on the part of industry and the trades, and by the Government as well, and, in a restricted sense, through enforcement of penal provisions. It is important that this distinction be kept in mind in an appraisal of the effects of these statutes when put into actual operation, even with respect to the declared emergency purposes set out in the opening sections of each act. Has Congress shown an intent to keep within specific constitutional limitations in the exercise of regulatory power, or does it rely upon some broader sovereign authority[7] that goes beyond its definite constitutional grants of power? The Agricultural Adjustment Act may fairly be said to relate the emergency aspects of this legislation to the monetary and interstate commerce powers of Congress. And so related, they indicate no attempt of Congress to step outside its sphere of delegated authority, though they may involve an extension of such authority beyond that heretofore exercised. The declaration of policy in the Industrial Recovery Act likewise aims "to remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce which tend to diminish the amount thereof."[8] This purpose fairly adhered to needs no emergency to support it, unless it embraces, for a temporary and emergency period, an extension of governmental power beyond normal limits, and a consequent withdrawal of individual right to a corresponding degree. It must be admitted that when we deal with emergency legislation we enter upon a field for the most part unexplored. The Supreme Court has been called upon in but a few instances to define the limits. In the case of Wilson v. New[9] the test of governmental power in Congress involved the maintenance of wages of railroad employees under the Adamson law[10] for a fixed and limited period, to preserve the status quo pending the operation of special arbitration machinery designed to avert a threatened national strike of railroad employees. The power of government to regulate the wages of employees even of public utilities has, under normal conditions, been uniformly denied,[11] and was expressly denied in the court's opinion in that very case.[12] The Supreme Court has since referred to this exercise of power in the Adamson law as one warranted only by the emergency and for a temporary period.[13] It is noted that the excess of power, beyond that which is normally valid, conceded to Congress in the case of Wilson v. New, is linked to the commerce power and is distinctly an outgrowth of that power. It may not be assumed either from this case or from the District of Columbia rent law case[14]—which involved the war power of Congress and its power exclusively to legislate for such District—that an emergency due to industrial depression opens up some entirely new field for Federal legislative experiment, for example, in matters purely local and within the domain of reserved State power, and not in some substantial manner related to interstate commerce. The dictum of Chief Justice White, who wrote the court's opinion in Wilson v. New, to the effect that, of course, a mere emergency could not give birth to a power that never lived,[15] is a clear indication of the line which should separate the proper exercise of power within constitutional limitations from the mere usurpation of authority by Congress which would amount to an overthrow of constitutional government. The court characterized the legislation in question as the exercise of a power which inevitably resulted from Congress' authority to protect interstate commerce in dealing with a situation like that which was before it, "to the end that no individual dispute or difference might bring ruin to the vast interests concerned in the movement of interstate commerce, for the express purpose of protecting and preserving which the plenary legislative authority granted to Congress was reposed."[16] Matters of purely local business and industry are not per se within the legislative power of Congress, and the ipse dixit of that body cannot be so extended without overthrowing the Constitution itself. It is only when the local intrastate matter works some burden upon or discrimination against interstate commerce, when there is some substantial interrelation, interdependence, or interaction between local business and interstate commerce, capable of proof of record, that the Supreme Court has recognized the intervention of Congress as proper to protect and preserve its grant of power. By indirection, local matters are then made capable of Federal control, but not in and for themselves. That is the doctrine of the Shreveport case,[17] of the Wisconsin Passenger Fares case,[18] and of Stafford against Wallace.[19] Those who framed this legislation for approval and adoption by Congress sought to extend Federal authority to its uttermost limit for the laudable purpose of overcoming the depression. In doing so they provided for certain governmental activities as to which it was not necessary to bother about constitutional limitations. This is particularly true of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The money-spending and money-loaning function indicated in the making of cotton-option contracts,[20] payments to secure reductions in acreage,[21] payments of money raised by the processing taxes,[22] are none of them in excess of constitutional powers vested in Congress. If any citizen wishes to part with his property or limit his use of his property voluntarily for a money or other valuable consideration offered by the Government, he is not, of course, in a position thereafter to complain of a violation of his constitutional rights. We assume that in the exercise of such functions Congress is not attempting to exercise any control or command or compulsion, such as is associated with the ordinary regulatory process.

A CONSTITUTIONAL BASIS FOR ENFORCEMENT

In the licensing provision of the Agricultural Adjustment Act,[23] which carries a penal provision, the scope of enforcement is specifically limited. Power is given to the Secretary of Agriculture

---

[3] I Willoughby, The Constitution of the United States, (2d ed., 1929), secs. 61, 63.

[4] ART. I, Sec. 8, of the Constitution, provides that Congress shall have the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

[5] The report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the N.R.A. bill (H.Rept. No. 159, 73d Cong., 1st sess.) said of section 1: "This section also establishes the constitutional basis for this legislation, which is predicated upon both the interstate commerce clause and the general welfare clause of the Constitution." It did not make clear which of the "general welfare" clauses was in mind.

[6] Frothingham v. Mellon and Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447 (1923). See also United States v. Realty Co., 163 U.S. 427 (1896).

[7] The doctrine of inherent sovereign powers, as affecting internal affairs, was expressly repudiated in Kansas v. Colorado (206 U.S. 46 (1907)).

[8] Supra, note 2, at § 1.

[9] 243 U.S. 332 (1917).

[10] 39 Stat. 721 (1916), 45 U.S.C., sec. 65 (1926).

[11] Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations of Kansas (262 U.S. 522 (1923)).

[12] Also Adkins v. Children's Hospital (261 U.S. 525 (1923)). The Supreme Court, upon the authority of Adkins v. Children's Hospital, affirmed an order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Arizona allowing a preliminary injunction restraining the enforcement of the Arizona State minimum wage law for women (Murphy v. Sardell, 269 U.S. 530 (1925)).

[13] Adkins v. Children's Hospital, supra, note 12; Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations of Kansas, supra, note 11.

[14] Block v. Hirsh (256 U.S. 135 (1921)). Cf. Chastleton Corporation v. Sinclair (264 U.S. 543 (1924)).

[15] "* * * and although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless emergency may afford a reason for the exertion of a living power already enjoyed", supra, note 9, at 348.

[16] Id., at 350.

[17] Houston E. & W. Texas Ry. Co. v. United States (234 U.S. 342 (1914)).

[18] Railroad Commission of Wisconsin v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (257 U.S. 563 (1922)).

[19] 258 U.S. 495 (1922). See also Board of Trade of Chicago v. Olsen (262 U.S. 1 (1923)), and Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States (280 U.S. 420 (1930)).

[20] Supra, note 1, at title I, sec. 6.

[21] Id., at sec. 8(1).

[22] Id., at secs. 8, 9.

[23] Id., at sec. 8 (3).

"to issue licenses permitting processors, associations of producers, and others to engage in the handling, in the current of interstate or foreign commerce [24] of any agricultural commodity or product thereof." In the making, even, of marketing agreements [25] voluntary in character, the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture is restricted to agreements with those processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling, in the current of interstate or foreign commerce, of any agricultural commodity or product thereof. This statute is without ambiguity. The enforcement through license control carries with it a responsibility, which rests upon those who administer the act, to establish their jurisdiction over licensees who are handling agricultural products as a matter of actual fact in the current of interstate or foreign commerce.

In the Industrial Recovery Act, also, there was no need to bring the President's voluntary agreements with trade or industry within any specific constitutional limitation.[26] What has been said above applies to this feature of the Industrial Recovery Act. However, an examination of the strictly regulatory features of both of these acts reveals for the most part a studied attempt by the authors to bring such exercise of power within some Federal delegated constitutional authority.

In the N.R.A. codes of fair competition for trades and industry are authorized. "After the President shall have approved any such code, the provisions of such code shall be the standards of fair competition for such trade or industry or subdivision thereof. Any violation of such standards in any transaction in or affecting interstate commerce shall be deemed an unfair method of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act,[26a] as amended * * *." [27] It is further provided that "When a code of fair competition has been approved or prescribed by the President under this title (title I), any violation of any provision thereof in any transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce shall be a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof an offender shall be fined * * *." [28] If the penal provisions of this act, laid for its enforcement, were not intended by Congress to be limited to matters of fact in interstate commerce, in accordance with the recognized limitations upon the power of Congress itself, then why did not the act relate the effect of the act and the enforcement provisions to transactions generally, irrespective of their local or interstate character? In the licensing provision, which has a penal aspect, in that a license may be withheld or revoked, we find substantially the same limitation.[29]

If the theory upon which these various enforcement provisions are founded is correctly stated, then the conclusion is inescapable that the problem before a court, passing upon the infliction of penalties, is primarily one of determining whether the factual situation of record brings the case within the indicated statutory limitation. It may be argued that the purposes of these statutes, as set forth in the declarations of emergency and of policy by Congress, are much broader than the commerce power of Congress. Presumably this may be true. These broad purposes of national rehabilitation are, however, sought to be accomplished through a variety of effort by mutual and voluntary agreements which carry no penalties, and also by a variety of mere money-spending activities of the Federal Government, particularly in the aid of agriculture. It is nevertheless true that in those provisions in which the Government exhibits the heavy hand of authority to control or to compel a surrender of individual right and individual initiative in the fields of agriculture and of industry, with pains and penalties, the statutes themselves in their very terms base the power to enforce upon the commerce clause. In this respect the intent of Congress has been made clear. It is not necessary to assume that the changed conditions, economic in character, do not call for a recognition of the necessity of extending, under present emergency conditions, the commerce powers of Congress beyond that heretofore exercised. The expansive nature of this commerce power is well recognized. The Supreme Court has on many occasions held, that when conditions call for new legislation not theretofore deemed necessary, it is no objection that the legislation is new. The power lies dormant in Congress until the necessity for its exercise arises. Changed conditions call for a development of legislation to meet them. The whole history of interstate commerce law from 1887 to this date is a forward movement, step by step, of the power of Congress even to the point of control by indirection of those things once deemed purely local, but later found to be within the commerce clause because of their substantial effect upon the interstate control of commerce.

Reference has been made in support of this legislation to the current or stream of commerce, and to the emergency conditions which are said to bring all business within that stream. It is assumed in consequence that the powers of Congress extend to the sources of commerce and to all matters in trade or business irrespective of their local or interstate character. However, it would not be fair to assume that in the administration of the acts this view is taken as the basis of action to enforce. A statement made by Chief Justice Hughes in the recent Appalachian Coals case has been seized upon. The Chief Justice, after speaking of injurious practices in the industry which demanded correction, said, "When industry is grievously hurt, when producing concerns fail, when unemployment mounts and communities dependent upon profitable production are prostrated, the wells of commerce go dry." [30] It would be rash to assume, from such generalizations as this, that the Supreme Court is ready to sanction a complete overthrow of the police power of the States over trades and industry carefully guarded for a century, with respect to all those known provisions of the N.R.A. codes now in operation. Admittedly the codes cover virtually every aspect of industry and trades. It is to be remembered that by settled authority [31] the exercise of legitimate State police power which affects interstate commerce, though permitted within recognized limits in the absence of legislation by Congress, must give way before any regulation enacted by Congress under its constitutional authority. The result of the codes under the N.R.A., in destruction of State police power, if every provision of them is enforceable, is apparent. It is common knowledge that the provisions of the codes do not stop with interstate commerce or with those trades or industries that are interstate in character. There is no pretense of such limitation. Things purely local in character by any conception or definition of intrastate, as distinct from interstate, are included. To bring such transactions within the constitutional regulatory power of Congress, enforceable under penalty of the law, it is necessary that we concede not only that Congress may pour money into the "wells of commerce" to keep them from going dry, but also that it may, under the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, reach back into the States and control without limit the sources of production, and manufacturing processes, output of farm and factory, and increase of goods and of labor; say who shall and who shall not engage in new enterprise; and generally dictate the hours of labor, the wages to be paid, the conditions of employment, and the relations of employer and employee. To the average layman, as well as to the average lawyer, a statement such as this portrays a system of constitutional government quite different from that under which we have lived, both from the point of view of the proper function of the States in our scheme of government, and of the proper function of government in relation to individual initiative and liberty. The Supreme Court said in the famous Child Labor case: [32]

"The control by Congress over interstate commerce cannot authorize the exercise of authority not intrusted to it by the Constitution (Pipe Line Cases, 243 U.S. 548, 560). The maintenance of the authority of the State over matters purely local is as essential to the preservation of our institutions as is the conservation of the supremacy of the Federal power in all matters intrusted to the Nation by the Federal Constitution.

"In interpreting the Constitution it must never be forgotten that the Nation is made up of States to which are intrusted the powers of local government. And to them and to the people the powers not expressly delegated to the national Government are reserved (Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 76). The power of the States to regulate their purely internal affairs by such laws as seem wise to the local authority is inherent and has never been surrendered to the general Government.

"* * * This court has no more important function than that which devolves upon it the obligation to preserve inviolate the constitutional limitations upon the exercise of authority, Federal and State, to the end that each may continue to discharge, harmoniously with the other, the duties intrusted to it by the Constitution."

We cannot doubt that this is a statement of fundamental principle, whether we approve or disapprove of its application by the court in particular cases.

---

[24] The italics are those of the writer in this and subsequent passages.

[25] Supra, note 1, at sec. 8 (2).

[26] "The President is authorized to enter into agreement with, and to approve voluntary agreements between and among, persons engaged in a trade or industry, labor organizations, and trade or industrial organizations, associations, or groups, relating to any trade or industry, if in his judgment such agreements will aid in effectuating the policy of this title with respect to transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, and will be consistent with the requirements of clause (2) of subsection (a) of section 3 for a code of fair competition", supra, note 2 at sec. 4 (a).

[26a] 38 Stat. 719 (1914), 15 U.S.C., sec. 45 (1926).

[27] Id., at secs. 3 (a), (b).

[28] Id., at sec. 3 (f).

[29] Id., at sec. 4 (b).

[30] Appalachian Coals, Inc., v. United States (288 U.S. 344, 372 (1933)). This was a suit brought to enjoin a combination alleged to be in restraint of interstate commerce. The Government contended (at p. 358) that the creation by producers of coal of an exclusive selling agency "eliminates competition among the defendents themselves and also gives the selling agency power substantially to affect and control the price of bituminous coal in many interstate markets." The language of the Chief Justice above quoted was used by the court in justification of the plan adopted to improve fairly competitive conditions. The court (at p. 373) held that "the facts found do not establish, and the evidence fails to show, that any effect will be produced which, in the circumstances of this industry, will be detrimental to fair competition."

[31] McDermott v. Wisconsin (228 U.S. 115 (1913)); Second Employers' Liability Cases, Mondou v. N.H., & H. R. Co. (223 U.S. 1 (1912)); Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Washington (222 U.S. 370 (1912)); Chicago, Etc., R. Co. v. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co., (226 U.S. 426 (1913)).

[32] Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U.S. 251 (1918)).

It is conceivable that the courts may sanction such an extension of Federal authority as is contemplated under the codes in the face of the unusual needs caused by the depression, grown to the proportions of what we call an emergency, the excess of Federal regulation beyond the normal being only temporary, and leaving recognized constitutional limitations unimpaired under more normal conditions. Such a result, so far-reaching in its implications, would be justified only in case that issue is presented under a statute so clearly and explicitly founded upon a claimed emergency power as would admit of no other reasonable interpretation. Had the Congress provided, for example, that "When a code has been approved or prescribed by the President under this title, any violation thereof shall be a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof an offender shall be fined not more than $500 for each offense, and each day such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense", a prosecution by the Government of a plumber, or of a restaurateur, or of an hotel proprietor, there being no evidence of record of any interstate transaction or of any substantial injurious consequence to interstate commerce, would of necessity be based upon the broadest possible conception of an emergency power in Congress to regulate business irrespective of its interstate character. One cannot reasonably doubt the significant difference of the legislative intent when the statute adds words of limitation such as a code "of fair competition" and any violation thereof "in any transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce."

The question, then, is this: Has Congress recognized in the N.R.A. and the A.A.A. the constitutional limitations upon its regulatory powers? The answer is "Yes", if we assume that it was intended that in the administration much should be left to voluntary agreement of a cooperative character and voluntary surrender of constitutional guaranties to Federal policy in return for a release from prosecution under the antitrust laws (the monopoly prohibition excepted), and an expectation or hope that mutual effort would hasten recovery; and if we accept as true that it was intended that enforcement of penal provisions was to be resorted to only where transactions complained of could be proven of record to be within Federal authority under the interstate commerce clause, as a matter of fact.

These conclusions find support in the legislative history of the N.R.A. In his address to the United States Senate, presenting to that body the Industrial Recovery Act, Senator WAGNER, of New York, who was largely instrumental in the formulation and drafting of this legislation, said:

"I have been discussing codes which are voluntary both as to their competitive practices and as to their labor provisions, and it is primarily upon such spontaneous action that the bill relies. It is not my intention to substitute Government for business, or to remove from the shoulders of business men the responsibility for economic recovery. The duties of industrialists are enhanced by the opportunities which the bill offers for constructive cooperation." [33]

Again, in the same address, he said:

"The question of the proper exercise of Federal authority depends upon whether the bill confines itself to national matters, or whether it attempts to extend to matters which are of purely local concern. The answer is clear. The language of the bill expressly provides that any compulsory measures, such as the licensing feature of the bill, and any penalties for violation of the codes, shall be confined to business in or affecting interstate commerce. Thus no attempt is made to extend Federal action to an area of activity not covered by the commerce clause of the Constitution." [34]

In view of Senator WAGNER's peculiarly intimate association with this legislation, and of the special deference paid to his sponsorship, which may be noted in the Senate's deliberations,[35] these pronouncements are important and persuasive.

It is admittedly difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile with established principles of law, and with the specific statutory limitations hereinbefore described, those provisions of the National Recovery Act, additional to the above-mentioned sections, which are obviously designed securely to guard and advance the interests of labor. Every code of fair competition must embody the following conditions: (1) Recognition of the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively, free from employer interference, restraint, or coercion, in self-organization, selection of representatives, and mutual aid and protection; (2) prohibition of the "yellow dog" contract as a condition of employment; [36] (3) compliance by employers with maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President.[37] Having been incorporated in the codes, their violation is subject to criminal prosecution. No mention is here made of transactions in or affecting interstate commerce, but it should be remembered that it is only violations of the codes "in any transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce" that constitute unfair methods of competition within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that are made misdemeanors.[38]

The duty is enjoined upon the President to afford every opportunity to employers and employees to establish standards of minimum wage, hours of labor, and "such other conditions of employment as may be necessary * * * to effectuate the policy of this title" [39] by mutual agreement. However, Congress does not leave these matters to voluntary action alone. Where no such mutual agreement has been approved by the President, he is empowered, after investigation into labor practice, policies, wages, hours of labor, and conditions of employment, to prescribe a limited code of fair competition.[40] If the purpose was to differentiate labor and wage conditions from other incidents of local manufacture and production beyond the field of interstate commerce and to assert a power of control in Congress, acting through the President, new to our law, there is no precedent to sustain it. Perhaps it was thought to base this power upon that board and rather indefinite emergency purpose set out in the preamble to the act. Upon the authority of Wilson v. New,[41] that would be at best of doubtful validity, unless a substantial relation to interstate commerce could be shown. It is possible to avoid an unconstitutional result by a different construction. These limited labor codes "shall have the same effect as a code of fair competition approved by the President under subsection (a) of section 3." [42] This reference back to the general code-making power of the President, already referred to above,[43] is quite significant, particularly in respect to the enforcement of it under penal provisions or otherwise, and would seem necessarily to carry with it the limitation to transactions in or affecting interstate commerce.

The National Recovery Act has provided for control of the management of interstate business by employers, first, through general codes of fair competition for trade or industry, voluntary or compulsory, and, second, through a licensing system which seems to be aimed particularly at destructive wage or price cutting, but which goes much further, in that the President may take complete control of an industry and deny one the right to engage in that industry, if the codes of fair competition prove ineffective.

"Whenever the President shall find that destructive wage or price cutting or other activities contrary to the policy of this title are being practiced in any trade or industry or any subdivision thereof, and, after such public notice and hearing as he shall specify, shall find it essential to license business enterprises in order to make effective a code of fair competition or an agreement under this title or otherwise to effectuate the policy of this title, and shall publicly so announce, no person shall, after a date fixed in such announcement, engage in or carry on any business, in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, specified in such announcement, unless he shall have first obtained a license issued pursuant to such regulations as the President shall prescribe." [44]

The theory upon which this assumption of Federal power is based is that distressed conditions due to the depression of business may have led a minority of an industry to resort to price-cutting, cut-throat competition to get business, paying starvation wages, and requiring long hours of labor under sweatshop conditions. This would constitute unfair competition in commerce, a special evil growing out of the depression, prejudicial to those employers in the industry whose consciences would not permit them to resort to such methods. It may be sustained if the conditions of license imposed are directed bona fide toward the removal from interstate commerce of such unfair competitors, and are not a disguised effort directly to invade the police power of the States. It may well be that out of the emergency conditions some such new evils of unfair methods of competition have grown which Congress may control by appropriate legislation, as it did when it passed the Adamson law. Such a result is not necessarily out of harmony with the decision of the Supreme Court in the Child Labor case [45] and Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co.[46] The congressional legislation condemned in those cases was, in the one, an effort under normal conditions to inflict a penalty upon any producer, manufacturer, or dealer who shipped in interstate commerce the product of a mine or manufactory in which children had been employed contrary to the provisions of the statute within 30 days prior to shipment; in the other a substantially similar effort to accomplish the same result under a thinly disguised regulation in the form of a tax measure. Both were held attempts by Congress to control by indirection matters within the police power of the States and not within interstate commerce.

There can be no doubt that Congress may freely select the means, the manner, or the mode of carrying its powers into effect; and inasmuch as the codes of fair competition apply only to interstate and foreign commerce transactions, there is no obstacle in the way of a licensing system to accomplish a legitimate regulatory purpose, by means which anticipate evils to be corrected, if Congress so wills. Under familiar principles, if the conditions to the grant of a license are commensurate with the scope of a regulatory power legitimately enforced, and there is no arbitrary discretion to give or withhold a license, there is no violation of any constitutional principle. But the licensing power here be-[33] CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 73d Cong., 1st sess., 5256 (1923).

---

[34] Ibid.
[35] Id., at p. 5254.
[36] In Adair v. United States (208 U.S. 161 (1908)), and Coppage v. Kansas (236 U.S. 1 (1915)), Federal and State statutes of like import, with criminal penalties, were held to be unconstitutional deprivations of liberty of contract.
[37] Supra, note 2, at sec. 7 (a).
[38] Id., at secs. 3 (b), (f).
[39] Id., at sec. 7 (b).
[40] Id., at sec. 7 (c).
[41] Supra, notes 9, 15, and 16.
[42] Supra, note 2 at sec. 7 (c).
[43] Supra, p. 213.
[44] Id., at sec. 4 (b).
[45] Supra, note 32.
[46] 259 U.S. 20 (1922).

stowed may also be invoked to enforce a "voluntary agreement" entered into between the President and persons engaged in trade or industry. There is novelty in the law which encourages the making of mutual agreements, and then denies the right of one to continue in business without a license, subject to drastic criminal penalty. Nevertheless, the statute limits such enforcement by license and criminal penalty to transactions in or affecting interstate commerce, and the violation of a mutual agreement entered into for the purpose of securing certain advantages held out by the statute, such as the suspension of the antitrust laws governing agreements in restraint of trade, by analogy to unfair methods of competition, and on general principles of law, would seem to give sanction to this result. The authority to license business enterprises is, furthermore, extended to the purpose "otherwise to effectuate the policy of this title." Of course, this is also restricted to interstate and foreign business. But what is the limit of this licensing power thereby conferred? Aside from the purposes above indicated, what is the scope of the legislative will which the President is to execute? The answer lies only in the general declaration of policy of the act, which says, "It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce which tend to diminish the amount thereof * * *." The provisions of the act which specifically carry out this purpose have already been discussed in this paper. The declaration of policy continues, "and to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups, to induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision, to eliminate unfair competitive practices, to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries, to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required), to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power, to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of labor, and otherwise to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources."[47] The first clause suggests that Congress may have a purpose "for the general welfare", and apart from interstate commerce, to promote industry for the purpose of cooperative action. This and other objects are commendable, but it will not be presumed that Congress seeks to promote the general welfare by granting to the President a regulatory power through license that goes beyond the constitutional regulatory power of Congress itself, and that, furthermore, so obviously leaves him free to adopt and enforce through license his own conception of the means by which these broad purposes of social and economic welfare are to be obtained. It would be within his unlimited discretion to determine the conditions upon which he will grant a license "otherwise to effectuate the policy of this title."

Reference has already been made to the licensing feature of the Agricultural Adjustment Act,[48] under which the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to issue licenses to processors, associations of producers, and others. That the license control is intended to be commensurate with the power of Congress is clear, for the subjects of control are those engaged in the handling "in the current of interstate or foreign commerce" of agricultural products. The terms and conditions upon which a license is granted must not be in conflict with existing acts of Congress, and must be such "as may be necessary to eliminate unfair practices or charges that prevent or tend to prevent the effectuation of the declared policy * * *." Here again we have reference to the administrative control of unfair practices, in accord with established legal concepts extended, it may be, to include extraordinary competitive conditions. Note, however, that the license control includes "charges." Government control of the prices at which agricultural commodities or products may be sold is clearly not in accord with the law of the Constitution, as defined in Tyson v. Banton,[49] Ribnik v. McBride,[50] Wolff Packing Co. v. Court,[51] Williams v. Standard Oil Co.,[52] and New State Ice Co. v. Liebman.[53] This challenge of unconstitutionality of the price-fixing aspects of this statute is met in the declaration of emergency of the act itself, which expressly declares that the basic industry of agriculture and transactions in agricultural commodities have become affected "with a national public interest." If such a result may be declared by Congress, yet it is not conclusive upon the courts. If conceded, then the power to regulate goes as far as public interest is involved, even to the extent of regulating the price, as with public utilities. This assumption of power explicitly rests upon the declared emergency, is expressly temporary in character, and raises a question of the most profound nature.[54] In its defense the Government will undoubtedly invoke the authority of Wilson v. New.[54a] A decision of the Supreme Court on the point sustaining the price-control aspect of license power of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, limited expressly to those matters "in the current of interstate and foreign commerce", will not necessarily determine the more far-reaching question raised by the National Recovery Act and pressed for a favorable answer by its sponsors, namely, whether the admitted existence of an economic emergency warrants the assumption by Congress of a regulatory control of American industrial life in all its aspects, free from the control of those limitations which are inherent in the commerce clause and the other powers delegated to Congress in the Constitution.

[47] Supra, note 2 at sec. 1.
[48] Supra, note 23.
[49] 273 U.S. 418 (1927).
[50] 277 U.S. 350 (1928).
[51] Supra, notes 11 and 13.
[52] 278 U.S. 235 (1929).
[53] 285 U.S. 262 (1932).
[54] See United States v. Calistan Packers (4 F.Sup. 660, N.D. Calif. (1933), noted in (1933) 22 Georgetown Law Journal 100); Economy Daily Co. v. Secretary of Agriculture (61 Wash.L.Rep. 633 (1933)).
[54a] Supra, notes 9, 15, 16, and 41.

DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER

The recovery acts present a number of problems involving the delegation of legislative power. It has been said that Congress has in an unconstitutional manner delegated the legislative power to the President. An analysis of these statutes does not sustain this view. In the Agricultural Adjustment Act the question is squarely presented in those sections which provide for the laying of taxes upon processors to secure funds with which to carry out special aids to agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture is given a very broad discretionary authority to determine whether such taxes shall be levied and in what amounts. The general principle stated in Field v. Clark,[55] in the Grimaud case,[56] and in the Hampton case,[57] is that when the legislature lays down an intelligible principle or policy, "a primary standard",[58] to guide the administrative discretion in filling in the details of the statute by the making of rules and regulations, and in applying the statute to factual situations upon which the statute is intended to operate, then there is no unconstitutional delegation of legislative power, even though the legislation be stated in broad terms. The statute provides that "there shall be levied processing taxes as hereinafter provided."[59] When rental or benefit payments to producers are to be made the tax shall be in effect. The rates shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture at such rate "as equals the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and the fair exchange value of the commodity."[60] The processing tax "shall be at such rate as will prevent such accumulation of surplus stocks and depression of the farm price of the commodity",[61] the Secretary being authorized to make findings of facts as to the accumulation of surplus stocks and the depression of farm prices. "The current average farm price" and "the fair exchange value" of a commodity are defined in general terms, and the Secretary is empowered to make findings from statistical data, a clear fact-finding function, involving judgment, of course, but not involving an uncontrolled discretion. This statute is reminiscent of the flexible tariff law,[62] and the provisions for the exercise of administrative discretion furnish an exact analogy to that tariff law. Under the authority of the Hampton case[62a] this delegation of power to the Secretary of Agriculture is unmistakably constitutional.

There has been considerable controversy over the delegation of code-making power to the President in the N.R.A.—that is, as to his authority to approve "a code or codes of fair competition for the trade or industry * * *."[63] This authority is expressly limited to findings that the trade associations or groups which draw the codes shall be open in membership and truly representative, and further that they shall not promote monopoly or oppression of small enterprises. The President may impose conditions for the protection of the consumers and competitors, and he may make such exceptions to, and exemption from, such code "as the President, in his discretion, deems necessary to effectuate the policy herein declared."[64] There is no clear or definite principle provided in this act as a guide to the President's discretion, other than those matters above stated. What may he include in these codes? The statute contemplates that the codes shall be initiated by the members of an industry, but also authorizes the President, "upon his own motion", to prescribe and approve a code of fair competition.[65] If we look to the declaration of policy[66] as the guide to the exercise of the Executive discretion, we find the policy of Congress stated in very broad terms. It is as all-embracing as the Nation itself in all of its social and economic aspects. If we look upon this declaration of policy as the basis upon which the delegation of authority is vested in the President to approve a code—and it is his approval that gives it official sanction and makes it the standard of unfair competition—it seems rather obvious that on this basis there is no limitation whatever upon the discretion exercised in the drawing of codes. The President could insist upon any provision which is, in his estimation, within any of the broad purposes of the declaration of policy. It is as much as to say that Congress has declared that the social and economic conditions of the Nation should be improved in respect to the purposes stated, and that the President shall enact such statutes in the form of code provisions as will bring about improvement. Such a sweeping, all-embracing declaration would seem not to satisfy the judicial test heretofore laid down to prevent the legislature from handing over its law-making power to the President. It may well have been in contemplation of the

[55] 143 U.S. 649 (1892).
[56] United States v. Grimaud (220 U.S. 506 (1911)).
[57] J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. United States (276 U.S. 394 (1928)).
[58] United States v. Shreveport Grain & Elevator Co. (287 U.S. 77 (1932)).
[59] Supra, note 1, at sec. 9 (a).
[60] Id., at sec. 9 (b).
[61] Ibid.
[62] 42 Stat. 858, 941 (1922), 19 U.S.C. 154 (1926).
[62a] Supra, note 57.
[63] Supra, note 2, at sec. 3 (a).
[64] Ibid.
[65] Id., at sec. 3 (d).
[66] Supra, note 8.

framers of this statute that many things might be included in the codes for moral effect in securing voluntary cooperation and not for the purpose of legal enforcement. The history of the administration of the N.R.A. lends color to that supposition.

Consider, however, that by the statute itself [67] the code is to be one of "fair competition", and its violation shall in law be deemed "an unfair method of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act." [68] Herein lies an understandable purpose to confine the codes to those provisions which may be brought within the concept of unfair methods of competition. These words have come to carry with them a quite definite connotation in Federal trade law. Here is a standard to which the President can look for a guide to the exercise of his discretion as definite at least as such concepts recognized in the law as "just and reasonable rate" and "public convenience and necessity", standards for the administrative determination of rates in the one case and the issue of certificates in the other. In the Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914 "unfair methods of competition" were expressly declared to be unlawful.[69] Authority was vested in the Federal Trade Commission to enforce this law through administrative findings as to what are "unfair methods" and to issue cease and desist orders against their continuance. With reference to this the United States Supreme Court, in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz,[70] said:

"The words 'unfair methods of competition' are not defined by the statute, and their exact meaning is in dispute. It is for the courts, not the commission, ultimately to determine as matter of law what they include. They are clearly inapplicable to practices never heretofore regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly. The act was certainly not to fetter free and fair competition as commonly understood and practiced by honorable opponents in trade."

Authority vested in the President by the National Recovery Act to approve or prescribe codes of fair competition is distinctly an administrative power. The adoption of the codes by Congress, in advance, as its standards, does not change the result. The code-making authority is still within the limitations of the statute itself, and it should be remembered that Congress expressly provides [71] that it is violation of the code standards in transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce that shall be deemed an unfair method of competition and shall be a misdemeanor under the penal provision of the act. This specific limitation would seem unquestionably to apply to the President's authority to include matters in the codes which cannot by any known standard be deemed to constitute unfair competition. So construed, the delegation of authority to the President is not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.

Whether or not the President steps outside of his statutory authority presents a different question, of course, from that of unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. However, if it is not the intent of Congress that the President should include in a statute, as a basis of criminal prosecution, those matters which constitute only normal natural competitive advantage, which is not in any modern sense unfair, this would seem to reflect a purpose in Congress that the President, in his administrative act in approving or prescribing codes, should be guided by the standards of unfair competition which have been developed in the law heretofore. For example, he could not, it is submitted, attempt to equalize normal competitive advantage which grows from efficient organization of industry, expert management which would justify higher salaries in one plant than in another, reputation for prompt and efficient service, good workmanship and materials, and willingness to make good any defects in manufactured products, opportunity to secure employees at lower wages in one place than those that normally prevail in another, close proximity to markets, and others of like character. It will be for the courts ultimately to determine, at least for the purpose of enforcing the penal provisions of the statute, whether provisions in the codes include matters that may fairly be described as unfair methods of competition. This is not to say that the President may not in the codes seek to secure by purely voluntary acquiescence on the part of industry other purposes included in the declaration of policy of the National Recovery Act.

There is another section of the N.R.A.—that pertaining to limited labor codes [72]—which presents a problem both as to its interpretation and as to its constitutionality. It is a vulnerable part of the N.R.A. Its legislative background is completely dark.[73] It may have been intended as a latent threat to encourage the establishment of "mutual agreements" concerning labor practices, policies, wages, hours of labor, and conditions of employment, which it immediately follows in the statute. It will be remembered that this provision has a penal effect in that it provides that where no mutual agreement has been arrived at in these matters the President may prescribe a code "which shall have the same effect as a code of fair competition approved by the President under subsection (a) of section 3." Insofar as this provision, in this relationship, may be taken as restricted in its penal aspects to violations "in any transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce", this separate delegation of code-making power would seem to be entirely unnecessary, because such labor practices, wages, hours of labor, and the like as could conceivably relate to unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce are already within the general code-making power. If it be true, however, that Congress intended to grant some wider code-making authority beyond the field of interstate commerce and applicable only to purely local transactions in trade and industry, then this attempted delegation would seem to be unconstitutional because it lays down no standard of control of purely local labor practices, policies, wages, hours of labor, and the like which could serve as an intelligible guide to the exercise of discretion by the President as to what regulations should be included in the codes and made enforceable. Furthermore, this legislation, read as without any limitation whatever, if carried beyond the interstate commerce field, would completely destroy the reserved power of the States, and would also sweep away all judicial decisions affecting the liberty of contract, such as Muller v. Oregon,[74] Sturges v. Beauchamp,[75] Holden v. Hardy,[76] Lochner v. New York,[77] and Adkins v. Children's Hospital.[78] Though the principle of these cases, from the viewpoint of the impropriety of general restrictions upon hours of labor and wages under the police power of the States, may be deemed to have been weakened by strong dissenting opinions and by the decision in Bunting v. Oregon,[79] there still remains a constitutional objection to the inclusion of such general restrictions within the commerce power of Congress.

It is reported upon good authority that up to this time little effort has been made by the N.R.A. administration to carry into effect this rather puzzling provision. It is probable, therefore, that we shall not have at any early date, if at all, any judicial determination of its purpose and effect. Possibly any view of it will prove eventually to be purely academic.[80]

[67] Id., at secs. 3 (a), (b).
[68] Id., at sec. 3 (b).
[69] Supra, note 26a.
[70] 253 U.S. 421, 427 (1920).
[71] Supra, note 2 at secs. 3 (b), (f).
[72] Id., at sec. 7 (c).
[73] In the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the national industrial recovery bill (H.Rept. No. 159, 73d Cong., 1st sess.) there is but a brief paraphrase of sec. 7 (c), with no comment or discussion. In the report of the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the same bill (S.Rept. No. 114, 73d Cong., 1st sess.) no mention whatever is made of sec. 7 (c), except that the House committee report was included at the end of this report. There was no discussion of sec. 7 (c) in either House or Senate.

[74] 208 U.S. 412 (1908).
[75] 231 U.S. 320 (1913).
[76] 169 U.S. 366 (1898).
[77] 198 U.S. 45 (1905).
[78] Supra, notes 12, 13.
[79] 243 U.S. 426 (1917).
[80] Since this article was written, several cases have been decided, among them Purvis et al. v. Bazemore, — F. Sup. — (S.D. Fla. 1933), where it was held that the N.R.A., insofar as it provides for the regulation of business purely local in its nature (here dry-cleaning and dyeing establishments), is unconstitutional in that it invades "the reserve power of the States." A second case is that of Victor et al. v. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior (61 Wash. L.Rep. 870 (1933)). (Note by editorial staff.—See same case, supra note *, p. 207, and Recent Decision, infra, p. 358.)

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 42 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, February 9, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 8 (legislative day of Feb. 6), 1934

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONER

L. D. White, of Illinois, to be a Civil Service Commissioner, vice George R. Wales, deceased.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Bernard J. Flynn, of Maryland, to be United States attorney, district of Maryland, to succeed Simon E. Sobeloff, resigned.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Wayne Bezona, of Washington, to be United States marshal, eastern district of Washington, to succeed David T. Ham, whose term expires February 19, 1934.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us and bless us. We thank Thee for the innumerable gifts of Thy holy providence. We pause in unspeakable gratitude for the Prophet of the Golden Rule, who spoke to mankind from the lonely yet beautiful shore line of Galilee. As there is an unanswered prayer and an unrealized dream in every breast, Heavenly Father, bulwark us with an unyielding faith; let not doubt or hesitation make their intrusions. Other men have labored and we have entered into their labors. So the fruits and the echoes of our work will live. They will roll on from soul to soul and from time to time. Gracious God, stimulate us with power to believe in the unseen, in the unattainable, and in the contagion of excellence. By endurance and foresight, by strength and skill may we meet obstacles with a song. Let these things teach us, our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order that I might call the attention of the Membership of the House to the way in which the new regulations of the President liberalizing laws relating to veterans are being nullified by the Veterans' Administration. I call attention to one particular case coming within my knowledge, which is representative of a great many others, in which a Spanish-American War veteran on January 19, 1934, the date when the President's liberalizing regulations were promulgated, was rated as 60-percent disabled on account of service-connected disabilities and under the regulations then in force was receiving $54 per month. The President's regulations raised the rate of payment in comparison with the degree of disability, so that a man in his status rated 60-percent disabled would be entitled to $60 per month. The Veterans' Administration, instead of giving him the benefit of the more liberal policy which the President had intended, rerated him without any evidence having been submitted as to any change in his condition, rerated him when it could have no purpose and no justification in doing so except that it desired to reduce the amount of his compensation or pension. They rerated him 50-percent disabled and changed his pension to $50 per month instead of the $54 which he had been receiving, when under the President's regulations he was clearly entitled to $60 per month. I have a letter here concerning this matter, but I shall not put it in the RECORD.

This man's individual case means nothing to you perhaps, it means very little to anybody except to him, but it is indicative of a policy which is being pursued by the Veterans' Administration on account of which, no matter how much the President may attempt to liberalize the harsh regulations which have heretofore been effective, these authorities may nullify his purposes and may prevent the actual payment to the veterans of the benefits that he intended they should have.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Has the gentleman any information that he can give me on this point? Practically every Member of Congress I have talked to is in favor of some Spanish-American War veteran legislation that will rectify the injustices that have been done the Spanish-American War veterans.

Mr. TARVER. I am certainly very much in favor of it.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. When are we going to have a chance to give the Spanish-American War veterans that which we are all in favor of giving them?

Mr. TARVER. With regard to that, perhaps the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of Spanish-American War veteran legislation can give the gentleman more information than I can. The point I am interested in is this, that there shall be conveyed to the President, who I am sure was actuated by good motives in reference to Spanish-American War veterans and has evidenced a desire to correct injustices done them, information as to the way in which the Veterans' Administration has been nullifying the more liberal orders which he has recently issued affecting the rights of these men and of World War veterans. Whereas the men are entitled under his orders to increased compensation or pension, the effect that is being given by the Veterans' Administration authorities in many cases is to reduce the pensions already accorded them. This is, in my judgment, outrageous and ought to be corrected, and I am sure will be corrected when the President has become advised of the practices that are being followed.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GLOVER. Practices of this kind are being carried on in violation of the will of the President and the acts of Congress. Should not this Congress go on record favoring the discharge of any man who will carry on such a practice as that?

Mr. TARVER. Unquestionably so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. My judgment is—and I do not presume to give advice to the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation or to the Chairman of the Committee on Pensions, which has jurisdiction over legislation relating to the Spanish-American War veterans—that these two committees should institute an investigation, which they can do without any specific resolution on the part of the House, and determine to what extent the administrative authorities of the Veterans' Administration are nullifying the more liberal provisions now being promulgated by the President for veterans' benefits.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish to interject an observation concerning the case of an aged lawyer with whom I have been acquainted for the past 30 years, a Spanish-American War veteran, who spends most of his time in veterans' hospitals, and who is totally and permanently disabled.

He was honorably discharged from the Spanish-American War in November 1898. In March 1899, just 4 months later, not under the Spanish-American War veterans' law, for there was none, but under the general law, he was placed on the pension roll for service-connected disability. He drew that pension for 34 years. After the passage of the Economy Act, and without any examination and without any new evidence, he was rerated. His service connection was taken away from him and his pension was cut from $60, which he had been allowed for total permanent service-connected disability, to $30, which he was allowed for total permanent non-service-connected disability under the new law. I want to say to you gentlemen that you can take this one case and multiply it by 50,000 if you want to know what happened to the Spanish-American War veterans of this country under the administration of the Economy Act. There was not a more inhumane, heartless interpretation of an act of Congress in all the history of our country. They were evidently rerated wholesale on batteries of typewriters. They should be dealt with on a Civil-War basis.

Mr. TARVER. May I say to my friend that his case is only one of many thousands of a similar character, and the President is being blamed by the veterans for injustices that are resulting because of the heartless administration of these regulations by authorities of the Veterans' Bureau, which I am sure does not have his approval.

Mr. STUDLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STUDLEY. I know of at least half a dozen cases in the county where I live that are similar to the case stated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. TARVER. I am sure every Member of this House could give similar testimony.

Mr. STUDLEY. Old men who are feeble and unable to earn a living were cut down from $60 a month to $15 a month.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, another regulation of the President which has been nullified by the Veterans' Administration is that providing for presumption of service connection of disabilities of Spanish War veterans for which they were being pensioned on March 20, 1933, and placing the burden on the Veterans' Administration to show the contrary. It is Veterans' Regulation No. 12. As written it does credit to the generous heart of our great President, and if it had been administered as written, a great part of the injustices to Spanish War veterans would have been avoided. But the Veterans' Administration, which is one facility of the Government still under Republican control and still being directed by the same man who directed it under Presidents Coolidge and Hoover, has nullified this regulation in actual practice. Every Member of Congress knows that. Instead of assuming the burden of showing nonservice connection in such cases, as the President directed, the Veterans' Administration has placed the burden upon the veterans and required them to carry it not only by evidence reasonably showing service connection, but apparently by evidence showing service connection beyond reasonable doubt. That is almost impossible for these veterans of a war ended more than 35 years ago. Yet these Spanish War veterans are inclined to blame the President. I sympathize with them as much as anyone possibly could, and I want to help get the injustices from which they suffer corrected; but I believe we ought to place the blame for the nullification of this regulation the President made in their favor squarely on the shoulders of General Hines.

I desire at this time to call your attention to one other injustice that is being perpetrated under the economy act. I can best describe it by giving you an instance. C. L. Price, Trenton, Ga., is the father of Oval Price, a deceased World War veteran, whose XC number is 598,010. I give you this information in order that anyone interested may check up on the facts as I give them. At the time of this veteran's death there was effective in his case an insurance policy issued by the Government and on which he had paid premiums and which the Government recognized as in force and valid to the extent of a portion thereof approximating $2,000. His father was designated as beneficiary in this policy. On April 27, 1926, Charles E. Mulhearn, then Assistant Director, Veterans' Bureau, wrote the father:

> Our records indicate that you were the designated beneficiary of this insurance, and we are, therefore, enclosing bureau form 514 upon which you may make proper claim. Upon receipt in this office of the above form properly executed necessary steps will be taken to award this insurance to you.

Mr. Price, on account of lack of proper assistance, did not file his claim. He has said to me:

> I just thought that since Uncle Sam had written me he owed it to me I could get it anytime and it would be safer with him than anywhere else, and I didn't have anybody to help me fix the blanks, so I just left it with him.

Since the Economy Act was passed Mr. Price has tried to get this money that Uncle Sam admitted owing him. And Uncle Sam's agent, Mr. H. L. McCoy, director of insurance, Veterans' Administration, wrote him under date of October 3, 1933, as follows:

> You are advised that further consideration cannot be given this claim for the reason that the Seventy-third Congress in an act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, specifically repealed all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance, except as to cases wherein contracts of yearly renewable term insurance have matured prior to March 20, 1933, and under which payments have been commenced, or in which judgments have been rendered * * * or in which judgments may hereafter be rendered in any such suit now pending.

Mr. Price had not sued the Government. Payments of the Government's acknowledged debt had not been begun to him, and therefore the Economy Act absolved Uncle Sam from liability for an admittedly honest debt. I do not believe Uncle Sam, which is to say the American people, wants any such debt disregarded.

I have not undertaken to discuss at length veterans' matters. I simply mention these things to show you that a Representative can, with faith in his President, nevertheless suggest that patent injustices should be corrected.

H.R. 7527—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H.R. 7527, and to insert therein a resolution passed by the Democratic committee of the State of Delaware, a telegram received by me from the Governor of the State of Delaware, and my answer by telegram to the Governor relative to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for the passage of the bill now before the House, H.R. 7527. By doing so I register my approval of the continuation of the Civil Works program—and vote additional funds for the carrying out of the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933.

This bill has the approval of the administration. The amount named therein, $950,000,000, is the sum the Federal Relief Administrator considers necessary to be appropriated by the Congress at this time in order to continue the work that is now being pursued in the various States. The main object sought to be accomplished by this appropriation is the continuation of employment already begun, as well as the creation of new and other employment. In other words, it means the keeping of men and women now employed under the C.W.A. in their jobs and the providing of jobs for many who are now idle. Furthermore, it makes provision for direct emergency relief.

Our great President has acquainted the country with his desire that all agencies now or hereafter to be set up in the several States for the administration of this and other recovery measures be kept free of all partisan politics. The press recently quoted the President as saying to the 48 Federal relief directors, "We want you to be absolutely hard-boiled if you find any local person within your State who is trying to get political advantage out of the relief of human needs, and you will have the backing of this administration 1,000 percent, even if you hit the biggest political boss in the United States on the head in carrying out this general program." That advice is typically Rooseveltian. It is just the right sort of admonition to be given all who are and will be charged with the execution of the various relief measures.

The sad and unfortunate feature, however, is that the President's wish is not being respected by many of those in whom he has placed confidence. Numerous violations of both the spirit and letter of these emergency relief measures can be found. Politics is being played with human misery in various sections of the United States by the professional politicians. It would seem that such is the case in the dear little State of Delaware, which I have the honor to represent in this body. It is my belief that the C.W.A. in Delaware is to some extent in the hands and under the control of those not in full accord and sympathy with the policy and program of this administration. It is charged that they are using it to make stronger an already strong reactionary Republican State organization.

Many complaints are coming to me daily of political discrimination in favor of Republicans in the placing of employees under the C.W.A. in Delaware. It so happens that the C.W.A. State director is none other than a Republican ex-president of the Wilmington City Council, who has the backing of what in Delaware is styled "The Better Government League." The name, "The Better Government League", is a false label. It is in truth and in fact nothing more or less than what my predecessor in this body has lately seen fit in his newspaper to term a holding corporation for the Republican Party. The Delaware C.W.A. State director is its agent and tool. Under his control is the State director of the Federal Reemployment Bureau. The only politics they seem to avoid and taboo is the honest-to-goodness, downright, simon-pure, Jeffersonian democracy brand. They will countenance a Democrat if he or she has Better Government League backing. Let it be known that neither the Delaware C.W.A. State director nor his former secretary, who is now the Federal reemployment director, has been selected or recommended by me. If I had my way they would not now hold these powerful positions. The action of both of these officers has become so unfair and unjust as to cause the Democratic State committee to pass resolutions with respect to them. These resolutions are:

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of the Democratic State committee that Walter Dent Smith, State director of C.W.A. projects, and Howard P. Young, State director of the Federal Reemployment Bureau, have exercised the functions of their offices in an extremely partisan manner, in that they have refused to pay certain appointees of William A. Hannigan, supervisor of census for the district of Delaware, solely on the ground that they were known to be interested in the Democratic Party; and

Whereas these men who were denied payment for their services as census enumerators by the said Walter Dent Smith and Howard P. Young were regularly registered in the State Employment Bureau at Wilmington, Del., and therefore greatly in need of work and their families in much need of support: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Democratic State committee, in session here assembled, condemn the actions of Walter Dent Smith, State director of C.W.A. projects, and Howard P. Young, State director of the Federal Reemployment Bureau, for the partisan manner in which they have conducted the offices to which they have been appointed by the Federal Government.

We, the Democratic State committee, here assembled, ask and earnestly request that the Federal Administration at Washington dismiss Walter Dent Smith, State director of C.W.A. projects, and Howard P. Young, State director of the Federal Reemployment Bureau, because we firmly believe and know their administration is exercised solely along partisan lines, and if continued will work great hardship and unfairness among the unemployed.

Strictly speaking, the men and women taken on the C.W.A. projects in the States are not Federal employees. Yet they have been, are being, and will continue to be given employment in the State by reason of Federal appropriations. It would seem to me to be a notorious and outrageous discrimination if 90 percent or upwards of those selected for C.W.A. work should come from the ranks of a political party that has been and is the enemy of the political party now in control of the Federal Government. To say that partisan politics should play no part does not mean that a Democrat should be discriminated against. Certainly capable, competent, and needy Democrats, as well as Republicans can be found in Delaware. To give Delaware Republicans and their Better Government League allies nine tenths or more of the jobs is far from complying with the President's request to keep politics out of relief work. It forms a just basis of criticism and condemnation.

Notwithstanding all this, my heart goes out to the man or woman, be he or she Republican or Democrat, who is forced to depend upon relief work for subsistence. In order to furnish them employment and give them a better outlook on life, as well as to enable them to provide for their families and dependents, I shall vote for this bill with the hope that it will be administered altogether free from partisan politics.

It is to be noted that this bill permits the Federal Relief Administration to make grants for relief within a State to a public agency without the consent of the Governor. Under the existing relief act a Governor of a State has to request the funds. The distinguished Representative from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] explained that the change was made to avoid situations when the people in a State might need Federal aid and could not receive it because the Governor would not apply for it unless he had the right to control it.

This provision is a wise one. The Governor of Delaware has not shown a disposition to go along with the President's program. To illustrate: It was my privilege and pleasure to march in an N.R.A. parade held in the city of Wilmington, Del., last fall. Standing in the reviewing stand was Governor Buck, who by his presence gave the impression to the public that he was in thorough accord with the National Recovery Act and the rules set up for its administration. Within a short time thereafter he called the Delaware Legislature in special session for the purpose of passing a public works bill. One would have thought that the Governor would favor a bill in harmony with the President's recovery program. Not so, however. At that session two bills were introduced—the one in the Democratic house, the other in the Republican senate. The house bill received the support of the entire Democratic membership of both house and senate, numbering 31. It carried a provision for a loan of $2,500,000, accepting a 30-percent grant from the Federal Government, and subscribing to the N.R.A. wage scale.

The senate bill sponsored by the Governor received the support of the entire Republican membership of the senate, numbering nine. It authorized the borrowing of this fund of $2,500,000 from the State school fund, containing no N.R.A. provision. Undoubtedly the intent, object, and purpose was to put the public-works program in Delaware under the domination and control of the Republican organization headed by the Governor, who, I am told, is greatly influenced in such matters by his political lieutenant, the secretary of state. The result was that neither bill passed, and the legislature was prorogued by the Governor after remaining in session 30 days, costing the State upward of $50,000. Nothing was accomplished, because of partisan politics played by the Governor and his political advisers.

The consequence is that the building trades in Delaware, which have been so severely hit, are now at a standstill. The Governor, however, did show some interest in the continuation of the C.W.A., as shown by the following telegram received by me from him:

JANUARY 19, 1934.

HON. WILBUR L. ADAMS,
House Office Building:

Discontinuance of the Civil Works program in Delaware before the end of the winter will increase the State's relief burden and bring further distress to the unemployed who are now being helped. It is felt by some of the leading citizens of our State that the C.W.A. program should be continued through the winter months. If you concur in this opinion, I ask your favorable consideration of any legislation to come before Congress providing an appropriation for extending the program.

C. D. BUCK, Governor.

Presumably he wants to save the State's money and is in favor of C.W.A. because he controls it. To his telegram I wired the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D.C., January 19, 1934.

GOV. C. D. BUCK,
State House, Dover, Del.:

Your wire received. Be assured I strongly support President Roosevelt's program and desire C.W.A. continuation in Delaware and throughout the Nation. I frankly believe quota of 6,000 workers, half from relief rolls and remainder from employment registrations, should have been on the C.W.A. pay roll in Delaware by December 15 as promised. My position is that work should be supplied unemployed, and I shall support appropriations that will provide employment for deserving jobless. The action of Wilmington City Council in providing $75,000 to partly finance C.W.A. pay rolls gratifies me.

WILBUR L. ADAMS, Member of Congress.

In conclusion let me say that I am following the greatest leadership that has arisen in this country since the Civil War. Roosevelt is the hope of our country.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, February 12 next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the life and character of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d day of January I introduced H.R. 6413, the subject matter of which is to declare a policy of the United States of America and to authorize the creation of administrative units and to allocate appropriations in order to make certain equitable adjustments with persons, as defined in this act, who prior to the effective date of the National Industrial Recovery Act, or within 30 days thereafter, made agreements or contracts with the United States of America and who have complied with the terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the rules and regulations promulgated in pursuance thereto.

Many of the Members of the House, as well as a good many citizens, have made inquiry concerning this bill, and I am going to ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated in the RECORD of today.

The situation is that shortly before the passage of the National Recovery Act, a great many contracts were entered into by the Government all over the country, including some in my own city, and when the N.R.A. did go into effect, these industries or businesses complied with the terms and the policy of the N.R.A. which forced them to raise their pay and reduce their hours. The result has been that many of these citizens sustained losses, when they would have made a profit but for their compliance with the law. An injustice has been done to a great many of these people and this bill seeks to clothe the National Recovery Administration with authority to make equitable adjustments of these claims.

I also ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD, release no. 200, signed by the President, covering the situation, and indicating these adjustments would be made.

Acting in the belief that this situation would be cured, I took the matter up with Gen. Hugh Johnson, and on December 22, he advised me by letter that there was no law at this time justifying the adjustment of these differences. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WEST] and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON], as well as a great many others, tell me that they have individuals and firms in their own districts who have suffered in the same way.

This legislation ought to be enacted so that the National Recovery Administration will be authorized to deal fairly and justly with these individuals. These citizens entered into these contracts in good faith and should not be penalized because they complied with a new law and new conditions they could not anticipate.

So, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this short bill on the subject, which I have introduced, may be included in the RECORD at this point and likewise release no. 200, covering the subject, as issued by the President. I also expect to ask the Ways and Means Committee to give me a hearing on this bill just as soon as it has disposed of important revenue bills. I invite the aid and cooperation of those Members who have manifested an interest in the bill and who have constituents that are affected by the present situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

H.R. 6143

A bill to declare a policy of the United States of America and to authorize the creation of administrative units and to allocate appropriations, in order to make certain equitable adjustments with persons, as defined in this act, who, prior to the effective date of the National Industrial Recovery Act or within 30 days thereafter, made agreements or contracts with the United States of America, and who have complied with the terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the rules and regulations promulgated in pursuance thereto

Be it enacted, etc., That the term "person", whenever used in this act, shall include individuals, partnerships, joint-stock associations, declarations of trust, private corporations, or any other association of individuals organized for the pursuit of any legalized business.

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States of America, and it shall be the duty of the administrative units created or authorized to be created by this act, to make equitable adjustments with any person who, before the effective date of the National Industrial Recovery Act or within 30 days thereafter, entered into a contract or agreement with the United States or any department, agency, bureau, or subdivision thereof for the sale and delivery, in future, of any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any product of agriculture, industry, natural resource, or commercial pursuit, or to perform in future any labor or service of whatsoever kind, class, and character, and who, on account of compliance with the terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the rules and regulations promulgated under the powers contained therein, has sustained a loss on said contract or agreement, or who has not earned a reasonable profit on said contract or agreement, or who has not earned the same profit which he would have earned under such contract or agreement, provided such profit is reasonable, if said National Industrial Recovery Act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. To effectuate the policy of this act the President is hereby authorized to establish such agencies, to accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, to appoint, without regard to the provisions of the civil service laws, such officers and employees, and to utilize such Federal officers and employees, and, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees, as he may find necessary, to prescribe their authorities, duties, responsibilities, and tenure, and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to fix the compensation of any officers and employees so appointed.

SEC. 4. The President may delegate any of his functions and powers under this title to such officers, agents, and employees as he may designate or appoint.

SEC. 5. The President is authorized to allocate so much of the sum of $3,300,000,000 appropriated under the terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act as he may think necessary for expenditures in making effective the purpose of this act.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION

(Release No. 200)

President Roosevelt today (Sunday, Aug. 6) issued the following statement:

"It has been brought to my attention that in many instances hardships may be imposed upon employers who sign the President's agreement, or come under the codes of fair competition which are approved, who have previously made contracts with the Government to supply goods or services at fixed prices which may be inadequate in view of increased costs caused by shortening hours or increasing wages in compliance with agreements or codes.

"The policy of the administration was stated in the statement which I issued upon signing the National Industrial Recovery Act urging 'those having benefit of these forward bargins (contracted before the law was passed) to take the initiative in revising them to absorb some share of the increase in their suppliers' costs, thus raised in the public interest.' This policy was carried forward in the provision of paragraph 12 of the President's reemployment agreement under which those making this agreement with the President also agreed to 'make an appropriate adjustment of said fixed price to meet any increase in cost caused by the seller having signed the President's reemployment agreement or having become bound by any code of fair competition approved by the President.'

"The United States Government as a buyer of goods should be willing itself to take action similar to that recommended to private buyers. Therefore, wherever adjustments can be made under existing law, I shall recommend that they be made. In other cases where such adjustments cannot be made under authority now possessed by the executive departments, I shall recommend that the next Congress, meeting in January 1934, take action giving authority to the executive departments, under such safeguards as the Congress may approve, and making any necessary appropriations to provide for recompensing such buyers who have in good faith and whole-heartedly cooperated with the administration of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and as a result thereof should equitably be allowed an increase in the prices of goods furnished in the interim in accordance with the terms of contracts entered into with the Government prior to June 16, 1933.

"Because this same situation exists with regard to employers who have previously made contracts with States, municipalities, or other local governments, I further recommend to the Governors of the various States and to executives of counties and municipal units that they take similar action to allow for equitable adjustments in such cases.

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the Clerk will call the Private Calendar.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether we are proceeding under the new rule or the old rule?

The SPEAKER. We are proceeding under the previous order of the House and bills unobjected to will be considered.

SETH B. SIMMONS

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar (H.R. 3072) for the relief of Seth B. Simmons.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill if there is a mistake in the date. Should it not be December 15, 1908, rather than December 19, 1908?

The bill provides that the soldier shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 19th day of December 1908. Should it not be December 15?

Mr. WARREN. I think the gentleman is correct, and I will accept that amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Seth B. Simmons, who was a member of Company M, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 19th day of December 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the figures "19" and insert "15", so that it will read "15th of December."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILBUR ROGERS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4423) for the relief of Wilbur Rogers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Minnesota explain the difference between the A classification and B classification?

Mr. KVALE. I do not know that I can do so to the complete satisfaction of the gentleman, but there is a distinction, to describe it in a brief and general way, that reflects on the integrity and performance of the officer. The B classification is considered a sort of reflection on the officer's efficiency and fitness. This officer was most efficient throughout his entire service, of the highest character, and rendered distinguished and heroic service, climaxing in the action that resulted in his eventual retirement. The committee carefully examined the evidence, held complete hearings, and became convinced that by changing a barrage order he actually saved the lives of hundreds of our own troops. This was proven. I do not believe any thinking Member of the House would deny him this relatively small benefit and this belated correction of a clear injustice.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I am satisfied that the officer has an honorable record, but he made no claim of physical disability until after retirement.

Mr. KVALE. I understand this retirement was not based on a physical disability.

Mr. GRISWOLD. They gave an efficiency rating of A and B, and the B officers were allowed to retire.

Mr. KVALE. I may add that this officer had a physical disability due to gas; and the gentleman from New York knows from his own experience in dealing with disabled veterans what that is. The disability is more often than not very slow in showing itself.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is the gentleman from Minnesota satisfied that the officer was subject to retirement because of physical disability?

Mr. KVALE. Yes; I am satisfied of that fact, and I believe I can speak for the committee. The report contains record of a disability due to gas.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Very well; I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon retired officers of the United States Army Wilbur Rogers, major, United States Army, shall be held and considered, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to have been classified in class A and to have been retired under section 1251 of the Revised Statutes for incapacity which was a result of an accident of service: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. STROUD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 3050) for the relief of William H. Stroud.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William H. Stroud, who was a member of Troop G, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 30th day of January, 1875: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES W. EATON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 272) for the relief of Charles W. Eaton.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROBERT BENNETT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 289) for the relief of Robert Bennett.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WILLIAM J. NOWINSKI

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 408) for the relief of William J. Nowinski.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in computation of service for pay purposes Lt. (Jr. Gr.) William J. Nowinski, Supply Corps, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have entered a commissioned status in the Navy on April 19, 1926.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN THOMAS SIMPKIN

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 507) for the relief of John Thomas Simpkin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] whether he can give us the dates that seem to be missing in this case. How long after the discharge of this man before he was placed in the asylum? The report gives us no dates whatever.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not the accurate dates, because he was first sent to a place for defectives, and afterward at various times to the asylum. Later he was sent home in charge of his family. Much of this correspondence came after I appeared before the committee. Reports were furnished the committee by doctors and others, which I have not. I have a tremendous amount of correspondence preceding the hearing, and there seems to be no question but that this man was sent to the asylum shortly after.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The record of the War Department shows that he was court-martialed twice before his discharge; that he was sentenced to 6 months on the first court martial, which he served; and that he was discharged on February 14, 1921; but it does not show what day he went to the asylum, how long after this it was.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. GAMBRILL. He went to the asylum about 4 years and 5 months after his separation from the service. Information furnished to the committee by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] in the form of affidavits from physicians showed that Simpkin was suffering from a mental disorder at the time of his induction into the service and that such mental disorder resulted in his misbehavior.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The report fails to show any information from any physicians, but so far as the report of the Navy Department is concerned, it is entirely adverse.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, those reports from the Navy Department are naturally almost always adverse, but may I read this from a letter to me from the Bureau of Navigation, dated the 9th of December 1927:

As Simpkin performed honorable service during the World War, between the dates of May 10, 1918, and June 24, 1919, he was issued a Victory Medal and War Service Certificate, and has been credited with the benefits of the Adjusted Compensation Act, under application no. 317662.

The gentleman probably read the statement from his brother, which came in before the doctors' certificates, showing that this man's mind was entirely disordered, that when he was out of the service for a time he always acted and felt as if he was within the service. It is certainly a meritorious case in spite of the fact that there may be some dates that do not appear in the record.

Mr. GRISWOLD. What I call the gentleman's attention to is that none of this appears whatever. The only thing that appears of record is the adverse report of the Navy Department and there is nothing to controvert it at all.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Was evidence submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs in the way of medical statements from physicians who examined this sailor at about the time or shortly after his discharge from the service, indicating that his mental condition was defective at that time?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOPE. There is nothing shown in the report except simply a statement that there was evidence submitted to the committee to indicate that he was mentally defective during the time that he was in the service. We know nothing of course of what that evidence consisted.

Mr. GIFFORD. We have several letters here from various doctors. Some of them call him a defective in a large degree although they did not want to declare him insane for awhile. He was afterward sent to the insane hospital. We have always been exceedingly liberal in cases of war records of this kind. The man had an excellent record before he reenlisted in the service. He was declared to be all right and his brother's statement here seemed to be very important to the committee. After we went before the committee the doctors' certificates were sent in furnishing the evidence the committee desired, and I am sorry they do not appear in the report.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DELANEY. The gentleman made a statement that the Navy Department always objected to these bills. Of course there are a few instances where they did agree to the passage of these private bills.

Mr. GIFFORD. I mean these border-line cases.

Mr. DELANEY. In most instances they do object.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. They feel it is a precedent, and we can fully understand the attitude of the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John Thomas Simpkin, who was a member of the naval forces of the United States, at the time of his discharge being confined in the United States naval prison at Portsmouth, N.H., shall hereafter be held and considered to have received a full, honorable discharge from the naval service of the United States on February 14, 1921: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS T. GESSLER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 669, for the relief of Thomas T. Gessler.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers and sailors Thomas T. Gessler shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on December 6, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELBERT L. GROVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 909, for the relief of Elbert L. Grove.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Elbert L. Grove, late of United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 31st day of March 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN C. M'CANN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1404, for the relief of John C. McCann.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to correct the service record of John C. McCann, formerly of the U.S.S. California, so that he shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on August 26, 1908, and to grant to such John C. McCann an honorable discharge as of such date: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of the enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARVEY COLLINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2074, for the relief of Harvey Collins.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the proponent of this bill if two amendments will be acceptable to him in order to put the bill in proper form? The bill is satisfactory, except that the wording in one or two cases ought to be changed, inasmuch as we are trying to get uniformity in these bills. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] if he would approve an amendment in the third line from the bottom of the bill, after the words "United States", to insert "as a member of that organization on the 20th day of September 1901." In other words, the date of the honorable discharge ought to be stated.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. HOLLISTER. And, secondly, the wording of the proviso is not in the form that it is customary to use in passing these bills. It ought to read "bounty, back pay, pension."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. HOLLISTER. With those amendments there is no objection on this side.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harvey Collins, late of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States: Provided, That no pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Page 1, line 7, after the words "United States", insert "as a member of that organization on the 20th day of September 1901."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Further amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "pay" and insert in lieu thereof the words "bounty, back pay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JESSE C. HARMON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2021, to place Jesse C. Harmon on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Jesse C. Harmon, formerly a second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps and to place him upon the retired list of the Marine Corps as a second lieutenant, with the retired pay of that grade, or upon the active list in the rank and grade entitled: Provided, That before retiring him, a duly constituted Marine retiring board finds that the said Jesse C. Harmon incurred physical disability incident to the service in the line of duty: And provided further, That no back pay, allowance, or emoluments shall become due because of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

P. JEAN DES GARENNES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2040, for the relief of P. Jean des Garennes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill provides for the payment of a pension of $100 a month for life for a retired teacher of the Naval Academy. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL] if there is any precedent for legislation of this kind.

Mr. GAMBRILL. I do not know if there is any precedent for such legislation, but I introduced the bill. This gentleman served 28 years at the Naval Academy as professor of modern languages. He retired when he was 74 years of age, and he receives no retirement pay.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is there not some teachers' retirement fund to which he is eligible?

Mr. GAMBRILL. There is none. He is now 86 years old and totally blind.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAMBRILL. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has the gentleman any objection to reducing this to $50 a month?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. With that amendment there is no objection from this side.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to pay to P. Jean des Garennes, formerly a professor at the United States Naval Academy, now blind and totally incapacitated, the sum of $100 per month for the remainder of his life, beginning with the month in which this act is approved, chargeable to the appropriation "Pay, Naval Academy."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$50."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IRWIN D. COYLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2041, for the relief of Irwin D. Coyle.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Irwin D. Coyle, lieutenant commander, United States Navy, in the sum of $745.99, representing payment made by him to an officer of the Navy in accordance with orders of the Navy Department, which payment was disallowed by the Comptroller General.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "$745.99" and insert in lieu thereof "$911.94."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "General", insert the following: "Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to recredit the accounts of Chief Boatswain John B. Manghan, United States Navy, deceased, with the sum of $165.95, which amount was due and unpaid to Chief Boatswain Manghan at the date of his death on May 23, 1932, and was subsequently applied by the Comptroller General of the United States to offset in part the disallowance of $911.94 then outstanding in the accounts of Lt. Comdr. Irwin D. Coyle, Supply Corps, United States Navy."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAR DEBTS

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I present a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 250

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives with the following information: (1) What, if any, verbal or written assurance or agreement was entered into by the President to accept token payments on war debts due from Great Britain, Italy, Czechoslovakia, or any other nation? (2) What steps have been taken to induce France, Belgium, or any other defaulting nations to fulfill their obligations in accordance with terms and provisions of the World War debt-funding agreements approved by the Congress? (3) What, if any, verbal or written understanding, assurance, or agreement has been entered into by the present administration offering to accept a reduction in the payment of principal or interest, or both, on any of the war debts since the joint resolution adopted by the Congress, approved December 23, 1931, expressly declaring against further reduction or cancelation of war debts? (4) What, if any, verbal or written assurances have been given or negotiations entered into by the present administration with any foreign nation regarding tariff concessions or trade agreements in respect to war-debt payments?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying the resolution, which is brief, may be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution (H.Res. 250) to request the President of the United States, if not incompatible with public interest, to furnish the House of Representatives certain information with respect to matters relating to international negotiations and policies, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit that a motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MAPES. The order of business for today does not permit a motion of this kind to be made at this particular time.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] is privileged, is not debatable, and is not amendable.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I should like a moment to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has moved to lay the resolution on the table, which motion is not debatable.

Mr. MAPES. Then, Mr. Speaker, if a resolution of this kind is going to be called up without any member of the Ways and Means Committee except the gentleman who offers it being on the floor, I think we should have a quorum present to know what is going on, and I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman from Michigan that my action is taken by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his point of order a moment, the gentleman from Tennessee is trying to make a reply.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan make the point of order there is not a quorum present?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present unless I may have the opportunity of asking the gentleman from Tennessee a question or two.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, without waiving any rights I shall be pleased to answer, if I can, any question the gentleman desires to ask.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask one or two questions, but if the gentleman insists on pressing his motion at this time, in view of the ruling of the Speaker, I have no other redress.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Michigan may propound his question.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I was endeavoring to answer the gentleman when he interrupted me.

Mr. MAPES. Neither of us succeeded very well.

Will the gentleman inform the House whether this is a unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is what I was endeavoring to say to the gentleman. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MAPES. Does the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means know this resolution is to be brought up this afternoon in this way?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. He was present when the vote was taken in the committee; and he voted as did the other members of the committee. The chairman of the committee directed that I make the report and that it be brought in as soon as the business of the House would permit.

Mr. MAPES. Did the members of the committee expect the resolution would be brought up this afternoon in this way?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I think so; yes.

Mr. MAPES. Who is the author of the resolution?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. MAPES. Personally I have no interest in the resolution, but it is rather unusual to have an important report of a big committee like this brought up for consideration in the midst of an afternoon devoted to the consideration of the Private Calendar when no one expects any general business to be transacted. I think it is bad practice to do it; although, if this is a unanimous report of the committee and, as the gentleman indicates, the Republican members and all the members of the committee understood the report was to be brought up for consideration this afternoon, I shall not object; but, I repeat, I think it is exceedingly bad practice to bring in such an important report from so important a committee during an afternoon when everybody understands no business is to be considered except bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MAPES. I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Private Calendar.

WARREN BURKE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2287, for the relief of Warren Burke.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may state I have no objection to the bill, for it seems to be meritorious; but in the interest of uniformity I ask the gentlewoman from California if she will accept an amendment to make the bill conform to the uniform practice.

Mrs. KAHN. Yes; I shall be pleased to accept it.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to place Ensign Warren Burke, United States Naval Reserve, upon the retired list of the Navy with three fourths of the active-duty pay of his grade: Provided, That a duly constituted naval retiring board finds that the said Warren Burke is incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability incurred in the line of duty: Provided further, That no back pay, allowances, or emoluments shall become due as a result of the passage of this act.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to offer in lines 9, 10, and 11 of the bill, amending the bill to read: "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. KAHN: On line 9, after the word "further", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF BURTON BOWEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2535, for the relief of Burton Bowen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the compensation laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, etc., their widows and dependent relatives, Burton Bowen shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on March 26, 1903: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF RAYMOND C. BOGART

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2536, for the relief of Raymond C. Bogart.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the compensation laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, their widows, and dependent relatives, Raymond Charles Bogart shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy as seaman, second class, October 23, 1920.

With the following committee amendment:

After line 9, insert: "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance of any kind shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF SUE HALL ERWIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3167, for the relief of Sue Hall Erwin.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sue Hall Erwin, mother of Marcus Erwin, Jr., ensign, United States Navy, who was killed by an explosion on the United States ship Mississippi, June 12, 1924, is hereby allowed an amount equal to 6 months' pay at the rate Marcus Erwin, Jr., was receiving at the time of his death: Provided, That the said Sue Hall Erwin shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy her dependency upon her son, the late Marcus Erwin, Jr.,

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF BENJAMIN WRIGHT, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3423, for the relief of Benjamin Wright, deceased.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman think that the title is appropriate, namely, "For the relief of Benjamin Wright, deceased"? Should it not read "For the relief of the estate of Benjamin Wright, deceased"? It does not seem to me that we are able to do anything for this deceased soldier.

Mr. DOXEY. I will say that the bill as originally drafted just conferred the relief to Benjamin Wright as an honorably discharged soldier. When the committee heard it, and they gave us a very patient hearing, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL] suggested the word "deceased." The Navy Department was there, represented by Commander Crosby. This was just a suggestion of the Naval Affairs Committee to put the word "deceased" in there.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It does not seem appropriate to me.

Mr. DOXEY. Whether it is appropriate or not, it is perfectly satisfactory to me to put it there or leave it out. As it is written in there, I can see no harm in leaving it there.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I have no objection to it, but it does seem to me that we could find more fitting language.

Mr. DOXEY. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. If I knew of any more fitting language to describe his state, I would have used it. This is a most meritorious bill and I am sure it will pass, because it should pass. The relief asked for should have been given a long time ago. The Government he served so faithfully and honorably will correct an error that to my mind occurred as a result of an oversight or mistake.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Benjamin Wright, deceased, who was a lieutenant, junior grade, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on January 19, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRONZE TABLET ON GRAVE OF BRIG. GEN. ROBERT H. DUNLAP

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 276, to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the Congressional Medal of Honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the author of the bill if there is any precedent for an action of this kind in the case of a marine officer, who did undoubtedly perform a heroic deed, but which was not done in the course of his duty as a marine officer but while he was off duty?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say to the gentleman and to the House that this is a very unusual case. There probably never has been a bill similar to this one in the history of our Government.

Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, U.S.M.C., was assigned to duty at the French War College, Paris, in February 1931. On May 19, 1931, he was killed at La Fariniere, a village about 10 miles from Paris, while attempting to save a peasant woman who had been trapped by a landslide.

The woman's life was saved. A French board of inquest which convened at Paris on the following day found that a rocky cliff about 50 feet high had crushed in over a cave which was being used as a milk house or dairy and into which Madam Briant, a servant in the house, had gone.

Her cries for help immediately brought General Dunlap, who proceeded to extricate her from under a mass of rocks and earth. While so engaged another slide occurred, this time pinning Dunlap under a huge block weighing about 10 tons. After 24 hours of excavation and rescue work, the body of Dunlap was recovered in a crouching position, his back against the falling mass. He had saved the woman, but had made the great sacrifice.

On June 13, 1931, General Dunlap was buried at Arlington with full military honors, and on October 18, 1931, at La Fariniere, France, under the auspices of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, a monument was unveiled to him in the presence of 2,500 people, including representatives of every department of the French Government.

The inscription on the monument reads, "To the memory of General Dunlap, of the American marines, who did not hesitate to give his life to save that of a Frenchwoman. 19 May 1931."

For his meritorious and conspicuous services with the Seventeenth Field Artillery in France during the World War, General Dunlap was awarded a citation certificate by the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Force. He also was awarded the Navy Cross and the French Fourragere for his services during the Argonne-Meuse campaign. For his services in Nicaragua he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by the President of the United States and the Medal of Merit by the President of Nicaragua.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Illinois state what the citation for services at Nicaragua has to do with the whole matter?

Mr. BRITTEN. Nothing, excepting that the report from the Navy Department indicates the various citations that he has received over there from the commander in chief of the Expeditionary Force, from the French Government, from the President of the United States, and from the Secretary of the Navy, and this Nicaraguan citation is merely one of the many decorations received by this distinguished officer.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the Nicaraguan citation appear on the plaque?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. None of these citations will. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs and should have no objection on the floor of the House.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the excellent explanation which has been given by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be placed upon the grave of Robert H. Dunlap, former brigadier general, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., a bronze tablet bearing a replica of a Congressional Medal of Honor, for distinguishing himself conspicuously by extraordinary courage on May 19, 1931, at La Fariniere, Cinq-Mars La-Pile, France, where he met his death in a supreme effort to save the life of a French peasant woman.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEDICATION OF LAND FOR STREET PURPOSES IN PHILADELPHIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3542, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to dedicate to the city of Philadelphia, for street purposes, a tract of land situate in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to dedicate to the city of Philadelphia, for street purposes, all that certain lot or piece of ground situate in the thirtieth ward of the city of Philadelphia and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly side of Bainbridge Street, 50 feet wide, and the westerly side of Twenty-fourth Street; thence south 75°18'58" east, 53 feet and 11⅛ inches to a point, the said point being the intersection of the former southerly line of Bainbridge Street, 50 feet wide, and the northwesterly line of Grays Ferry Road, 60 feet wide; thence south 57°14'27" west, 80 feet and 4⅛ inches along the said side of Grays Ferry Road to a point in the westerly side of Twenty-fourth Street; thence along the same north 15° 4'32" east, 59 feet and 2¼ inches to the first-mentioned point and place of beginning, containing 0.035 of an acre of land.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "land", insert "more or less."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LT. COMDR. CORNELIUS DUGAN (RETIRED)

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3781, for the relief of Lt. Comdr. Cornelius Dugan (retired).

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report shows that this officer was advanced to the rank of lieutenant commander under an act which specifically provided he was not to have an increase in pay. He now comes to us, years afterward, and asks us under certain eventualities to increase the pay.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me to explain, this man is now 94 years old and gets a lieutenant's pay. If he gets this pension, he will get sufficient money to keep him going and to provide attendants. There is no man in the Navy today who has a record like Commander Dugan. He was 48 years in the Navy and served in three wars. He is a very old man and cannot live more than a few years. I think it would be well for us, as a gratuity, to give him an opportunity to pass his last years in peace and comfort.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I realize that, but I am speaking from the standpoint of establishing a precedent here. As I understand from the report, this officer was not entitled to be a lieutenant commander.

Mr. EDMONDS. He got the same advancement that other officers received.

Mr. GRISWOLD. He received this advancement after he was retired and after he had ceased to perform any service for the Navy. He did not receive advancement to lieutenant commander until March 2, 1923, and received it then under a special act with a provision in the act that he was not to receive any increased pay. Now, at a later time, we are to abrogate that act and invalidate it and say we did not mean what we then provided.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am arguing entirely on the man's age and his necessities. I think when a man has served in the Navy 48 years and has served in three wars, he is entitled to some consideration by this House.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think this man cannot live more than a few years. The other bill was passed in the Seventy-first Congress, and I do not think we can very well turn down a man with a service record like this.

Mr. GRISWOLD. We have many men in similar situations, and we will have them all coming here for special relief acts, although we had stated in prior acts that we would not increase them.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. GAMBRILL. I may say to the gentleman that the Committee on Naval Affairs gave this case very careful consideration. It is quite a remarkable case. Lieutenant Commander Dugan was born in 1840, almost a century ago, and served in the Navy 54 or 55 years. He saw service in the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and was called into service during the late war as an inspector of ordnance at shipbuilding plants.

This may establish a precedent; but I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, when this bill was before the committee, when he said:

I am in favor of establishing a precedent in this case, because it seems to me to be a most meritorious one.

I hope the gentleman will not interpose any objection.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I may say to the gentleman that I realize the merit of this case in view of this man's service, but he is now drawing the pay of a lieutenant commander, retired.

Mr. GAMBRILL. No; he is drawing a lieutenant's pay.

Mr. GRISWOLD. And if we establish a precedent on legislation of this kind, after passing a bill that provided we would not increase the pay, it will mean that many similar applications will be made.

If a precedent of this kind is to be established, it should be done by the entire House and not by a bill on the Private Calendar.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

DAVID J. MAHONEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4072) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to advance on the retired list of the Navy David J. Mahoney, retired, to chief boilermaker, retired.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How much would the increase be in pension if this change is made? I understand the man is getting $81.94 now, and this would give him $103.88 per month. I want to ask the gentleman if there is any difference in principle between this bill and the one just objected to?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think there is a great difference. The bill is to advance on the retired list of the Navy David J. Mahoney, boilermaker, retired, to the rating of chief boilermaker, retired, with the pay and allowances of that rating. This man first enlisted in the Navy on January 23, 1885, as a boilermaker, and he served continuously in that rating until he was retired, after 30 years' service, on April 24, 1915. He was recalled to active duty during the World War on April 10, 1917, and released from active duty on November 25, 1919.

The rating of a boilermaker prior to the World War was a peculiar one. He had the highest paid enlisted rating in the Navy. When the new ratings were promulgated the rating of chief boilermaker was established, but the old boilermakers on the retired list were not considered, although during their career in the active Navy they were paid as much as, and in some cases more, than most of the chief petty officers.

It seems to me that the principle is entirely different than that in the bill that just preceded this.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. At the time this man served in the Navy he knew what the rating was. The change in rating came after he was retired from the Navy. Is not that correct?

Mr. TINKHAM. That is true.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And this new rating was not in contemplation during the entire period of his service.

Mr. TINKHAM. I do not know about that.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I am constrained to object.

WILLIAM H. CLINTON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4079) to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint William H. Clinton, formerly a warrant gunner, United States Navy, a warrant gunner, United States Navy, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Navy as a warrant gunner, with the retired pay and allowance of that grade: Provided, That a duly constituted naval retiring board finds that the said William H. Clinton incurred physical disability incident to the service while on the active list of the Navy: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance of any kind shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DAVID SCHWARTZ

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4266) for the relief of David Schwartz.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, I cannot see where this individual performed any service which was valuable to the United States Government.

Mr. BLOOM. The reason he did not obey the orders of the officer was that he was insane, and he is now in an insane asylum.

Mr. HOLLISTER. What do you want to give him an honorable discharge for?

Mr. BLOOM. To clear his record.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Is the gentleman willing to have an amendment by which he cannot recover any pension or anything from the Government?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not object to that.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman says he was crazy when he enlisted. The relatives say that he was perfectly well at the time he entered the service.

Mr. BLOOM. Well, I intended to say that he became insane after he entered the service.

Mr. GRISWOLD. His illness is not service-connected?

Mr. BLOOM. I am not claiming anything of that kind. I only want his record cleared. The man is in an insane asylum today, and he was insane while in the service.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman admits he never should have been in the service?

Mr. BLOOM. I cannot admit that, because I do not know anything about it at that time. I do know that today he is in an insane asylum, and it was proved that he was insane at the time the officer gave him the command which he did not obey. He was slow in obeying the command of his officer, and that is why they gave him a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Is it the gentleman's intention to submit an amendment that no back pay, bounty, or compensation shall attach either before or after the passage of this act?

Mr. BLOOM. I think that is already covered. This same bill passed in the last Congress.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If the gentleman will accept an amendment to that effect, I shall not object.

Mr. BLOOM. I shall accept it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers David Schwartz, who served in the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on or about the 30th day of October 1917: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Strike out the proviso beginning in line 9 and insert in lieu thereof "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SYLVESTER T. MORIARTY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4389) for the relief of Sylvester T. Moriarty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the author of the bill if he has any objection to an amendment in the usual form providing that no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No objection whatever. The man is now drawing $150 a month from the Government. He is a man of high ideals. If this bill should pass and he is recognized under the retirement law, he would get only $132 a month, and the Government will save money.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman has no objection to that amendment?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No.

Mr. HOPE. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 6 of the Naval Appropriation Act approved July 12, 1921, as provided that the application for retirement of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and temporary officers of the Navy who have heretofore incurred, or who may hereafter incur, physical disability in line of duty in time of war shall be filed with the Secretary of the Navy not later than October 1, 1921, be, and hereby is, waived in the case of former Lt. (Jr. Gr.) Sylvester T. Moriarty, and his case is hereby authorized to be considered and acted upon under the remaining provisions of said section if his application for retirement is filed not later than 60 days from the approval of this act.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 2, line 4, after the word "act", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add: "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GEORGE DEWEY HILDING

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4437) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of George Dewey Hilding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to make an inquiry of the author of the bill, or the gentleman who made the report. Can the gentleman give us any specific reasons, other than those contained in this report, why this officer should be increased in rank and retired? He served approximately 2 years, during all of which time he was under treatment after his graduation from the academy. He was then retired as an ensign. He received full education from the Government. The Government has received practically no benefit from his services, and he is now drawing retirement as an ensign.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the gentleman from Indiana has said; and if the gentleman does not object, I shall. He served from June 3, 1921, until January 8, 1923, when he entered a hospital. In September of that same year he was discharged for physical disability. Assuming that he had served 9 months longer and had been promoted, he would have been entitled to increased retirement pay. I think this bill is unreasonable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. This bill, or one similar to it, has been reported now by the Committee on Naval Affairs in three different Congresses. Lt. Comdr. H. M. Ames, Medical Corps, United States Navy, retired, who was president of the retirement board at the time Ensign Hilding was retired, stated in a letter to me, a copy of which is set out in the report of the committee on the bill, that it was the custom to give "an officer at least a year of hospitalization before recommending that he appear before a retiring board, unless this action was at the officer's own request." This custom was not observed in the case of Ensign Hilding.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He was in the hospital 9 months.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. On the state of the evidence this man probably should never have been graduated from the academy and entered into the service because of his physical condition. If he had been relieved in his senior year, as are many cadets, he would not haye gotten even his ensign pay.

Mr. MAPES. I do not know how we can go back and pass on that question at this late date. It seems to me that we must assume that he was physically fit to graduate. As a matter of fact, he was allowed to graduate and to continue in the service for some time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The Government has just paid over $16,000 for his education at the Naval Academy. He had served just 1 year and was then confined. I think under the circumstances I am constrained to object.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, he entered the service in the regular way, and the point is that he was not afforded the same treatment that other men under like circumstances received. The facts are fully set out in the report of the committee. I assume that the gentleman has read them, and if he has his mind made up to object I have no desire to argue the case with him.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There are many students just out of high school who are sick and get nothing. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ANTHONY PETER DE YOUNG

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4438, for the relief of Anthony Peter De Young.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, according to the report this man's enlisted name was Tony P. De Young. The title should be corrected to use that name.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. It is "Anthony" in one case and "Tony" in the other.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. His name on the rolls of the Navy is Tony P. De Young. You are asking for relief for Anthony Peter De Young. I should think for your own benefit you would ask for relief of Tony P. De Young, alias Anthony Peter De Young.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I have no objection to consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Anthony Peter De Young, formerly a water tender, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a water tender on the 25th day of September 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS of New York: In line 5, strike out "Anthony Peter" and insert "Tony P., alias Anthony Peter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "For the relief of Tony P. De Young, alias Anthony Peter De Young."

ROSCOE M'KINLEY MEADOWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4454, for the relief of Roscoe McKinley Meadows.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, and I will object unless there is a satisfactory explanation. This particular man at the time of his discharge signed a certificate which reads as follows:

I hereby certify that I have no injury or disability which would entitle me to compensation under the War Risk Insurance Act.

Now, that is signed by this party, who was a chaplain. If there is not a satisfactory explanation by the proponent of this bill, I will be compelled to object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know that I can satisfy the gentleman, but I will say this: There were a great many statements, literally many hundreds, of that character signed at that time. Many of these men were very eager to get out of the service and they signed many certificates not knowing their own physical disabilities. This gentleman had an ear trouble then, rather serious, but he thought it would mend and would soon be cured. He is now almost totally deaf. He is a minister. He is unable to perform his functions as a minister because of this infirmity. He is a very worthy man, a very good man. The bill passed the Senate once and came here. It has been reported twice to the House, but in the rush of business last session it did not pass.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Had this man been an illiterate person, I would consider the explanation; but a chaplain, educated and conscious, and signing a statement such as this, I do not think should be allowed to go behind his statement. Therefore, I object.

JOSEPH B. LYNCH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4962, for the relief of Joseph B. Lynch.

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object, I assume the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] will have no objection to an amendment in the usual form, providing that no back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue as the result of the passage of this act?

Mr. LUCE. I have no objection at all.

Mr. HOPE. With that understanding I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to advance Lt. Joseph B. Lynch, United States Naval Reserve, to a place in the list of lieutenants of the Naval Reserve to rank next after Lt. Walter R. Hillberg: Provided, That in the computation of service for purposes of pay the said Lt. Joseph B. Lynch shall be credited with inactive confirmed commissioned service in the Naval Reserve Force during the period from August 18, 1921, to August 7, 1923, inclusive: And provided further, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue to the said Lt. Joseph B. Lynch.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: In line 12, strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof, "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

CORRECTION OF NAVAL RECORDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5018, to correct the naval records of former members of the crews of the revenue cutters Algonquin and Onondaga.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Ohio tell us something about this bill? I notice that the crew of the Onondaga served only 17 days.

Mr. BOLTON. No; the Navy contends they were in the Navy only 17 days on the 17th of August, they having enlisted about the 1st of August. This revenue cutter, which was in the naval service, was turned back to the Revenue cutter service. The ship proceeded on her way. The men were not discharged until the 10th or 12th of November, in Boston, her port of destination.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Would the gentleman's bill affect any men who enlisted in the service after the Executive order?

Mr. BOLTON. No. As a matter of fact, it could not. Both ships were at sea.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons who served in the naval service of the United States during the War with Spain and were honorably discharged therefrom, each member of the crew of the revenue cutter Algonquin or Onondaga who enlisted in 1898 for the duration of the war shall be held and considered to have been in the naval service for the entire period of such enlistment and to have received a discharge from the Navy of the same character and of the same date as the discharge received by him from the Revenue Cutter Service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUKE FRANCIS BRENNAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5201, for the relief of Luke Francis Brennan.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if this man is to be hereafter considered as having been honorably discharged it should be from the date of his separation from the service, which was March 22, 1899; and I shall offer an amendment at the proper time to correct this bill in this one respect.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors, Luke Francis Brennan, formerly of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of the United States Navy at the expiration of the term of his first enlistment: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: In line 8, after the word "Navy", strike out "at the expiration of the term of his first enlistment" and insert in lieu thereof "on March 22, 1899."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FELIX MAUPIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5218, for the relief of Felix Maupin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Felix Maupin, who was a machinist's mate, first class, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged under honorable conditions from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 23d day of August 1922: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VICTOR OSCAR GOKEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2176, for the relief of Victor Oscar Gokey.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Victor Oscar Gokey, late of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on May 22, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARTHUR I. NEVILLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 491, for the relief of Arthur I. Neville.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. Speaker, this identical bill became a law in the Seventy-second Congress. I hold a copy of it in my hand.

I call to the attention of the clerk of the committee reporting this bill that there is some weakness in the system whereby a bill that has been passed by one Congress can be reported out and put on the calendar of a subsequent Congress.

BERYL M. M'HAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 992, for the relief of Beryl M. McHam.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice from the report that the man was a deserter and has never yet returned.

Mr. McKEOWN. I may say to the gentleman that this man's record was such and his condition was such that they never even tried to arrest him. He went back to try to fix his record up, but his condition was such they never even arrested him. This man has a wonderful record. No man in the war had a greater record than Mr. McHam.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. According to the report he is still a deserter.

Mr. McKEOWN. They never even offered to arrest him, because of his physical condition due entirely to war service; and they have not bothered him since.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. As a matter of official record, he is in desertion at the present moment, and the passage of this bill would not cure the matter.

Mr. McKEOWN. Down here in the War Department that may be true. But this man is entitled to better treatment.

Let me call the gentleman's attention to the facts in this case. Mr. McHam was a man who enlisted in the First Division and went overseas in June of 1917. He operated hand grenades and was a messenger at the front. For 72 days he fought in the front-line trenches without relief. At one time in the Argonne he was wounded; also he was gassed; and he was 1 of 12 men selected by his commanding officer, which group captured 29 Germans and brought them in between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock in a No Man's Land raid. He is one of only 15 men who survived out of a company of 250.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. SWANK. I may say, Mr. Speaker, I am personally acquainted with this party and have been for many years. He lived in my home town formerly. I first introduced a bill for his relief. Mr. McHam afterward moved to the district of my colleague [Mr. McKEOWN].

This man voluntarily went to France as a member of the First Division in the early part of the war. He participated in nearly all the large battles, was wounded and gassed, and later went to Germany with the army of occupation.

I do not believe there is a more meritorious bill than this one.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I merely raised the point that as a matter of record he is classed as a deserter; and a man who is in desertion is not eligible for any pension or other benefits.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman will notice that there was a reenlistment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The man was dishonorably discharged first. Then he reenlisted and deserted.

Mr. McKEOWN. He asks only to be honorably discharged as of the date of the termination of the war.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman accept the usual proviso?

Mr. McKEOWN. No, no; that cannot be thought of in the case of this soldier; it would be a terrible thing. This man spent 72 days in the trenches at the front without relief.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is the uniform practice of Congress to insert a proviso that no back pay shall accrue. I shall have to insist upon that amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. In this particular case I thoroughly agree with the gentleman as to this soldier being still a deserter. I think further that the record shows he has a wonderful battle record, but as a citizen he is a washout. I do know this: He is now being deprived of $1,500 worth of adjusted compensation. He actually fought for this and he should have this.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman should not forget that the soldier committed a rather serious offense for which he was dishonorably discharged. He enlisted and he is now in desertion. I do not think his character is such that he is entitled to back pay, pension, and other benefits which may have accumulated.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I agree with the gentleman. This proviso would cut him out of the adjusted compensation. The adjusted compensation is due him for each day's service he actually served in France. All the rest of the soldiers got it and I think he is entitled to it, but the suggested amendment would cut him out of the adjusted compensation.

Mr. McKEOWN. Let me call attention to this fact: When the gentleman reads the record of this soldier he will see he was with some of the bravest men who went to France. He was within 10 feet of Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., when he was wounded. He was in the service from June 1917 to 1920. He was 72 consecutive days in the trenches without relief. He was a hand-grenade fighter and messenger, the most dangerous services a man could render. He was wounded twice. On one occasion he was one of 12 men picked out for a raid in No Man's Land. They brought back 29 Germans.

What was he court-martialed for? He was court-martialed for getting drunk after the armistice and when he was away on leave. He got drunk. They got into a brawl. He hit some fellow with his fist. He did not assault him with a weapon and did not attempt to kill him. He told some sergeant: "Sergeant, we will get you after awhile."

I appeal to you in all fairness. Here is a man who is a wreck today, who has not drawn even the $60 that was allowed.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I have no objection, provided the gentleman will accept the proviso. It is our usual practice. I am not willing to make an exception and start a new precedent in this case. I regret it, but I insist on the proviso.

Mr. McKEOWN. This bill has been through the House. It also went through the Senate and they put on this proviso, but we would not accept it. The record will show that those who knew of the record of this boy would not submit to the proviso being put on. If the gentleman puts the proviso in the bill, he might as well object to it and let the boy out.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I am willing that the veteran shall be eligible to all veterans' benefits that may accrue hereafter.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman think that one little drunken brawl should be the cause of his forfeiting $1,500 of service compensation, besides all the rights that he might have as a soldier?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I am not taking any such position. His fine military record entitles him to special consideration.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not think a small brawl should cost that much. No one was hurt, nobody seriously injured. I appeal to your sense of justice.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF FRANK D. WHITFIELD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1015, for the relief of Frank D. Whitfield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the only record that we have is that of the War Department. It is stated in this report that the claimant made an affidavit. This is the War Department report:

> A thorough search of the records has resulted in failure to disclose anything to show that a furlough was granted to this soldier at any time, or that he was present with his company in May 1918, or that his discharge from the service was contemplated by the military authorities at any time prior to February 4, 1921.

And the report of the committee does not show anything to controvert that statement.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will yield for an explanation, I will state briefly the facts are as follows: This soldier was drafted, and at the time he was drafted the index finger on his right hand was then and still is stiff. He was incapacitated from ever functioning as an infantry man in the service. After he had been in the service for a few months functioning merely as a laborer, he got word that his brother had died at Toccoa, Ga. The company commander, who was then a lieutenant, so this soldier says, told him:

> You can go on to the funeral. You are going to be discharged anyway for physical disability existing prior to enlistment. Go on up there and you need not come back.

He went on up to Toccoa, Ga. After being around there a few weeks he was arrested and taken back to Camp Wheeler in Georgia. He was there surrendered to the military authorities. They said, "No; we do not want him. He cannot function as a soldier." They did not take him in custody, and he returned to Toccoa.

He went back to Toccoa, Ga., and remained there until some time in the year 1919 when the sheriff, hoping, I suppose, to get the $50 bonus for apprehending a deserter, took him to Columbia, S.C. He was there surrendered to the military authorities for the second time. While in Columbia, S.C., after having been there only a few days, he was again discharged from the Army. Here is a certified copy of the discharge which, after reciting his whole history, states—

> That the said Frank D. Whitfield is hereby discharged under paragraph 26 of the Army Regulations from the military service of the United States for physical disability incurred before entry into the military service.

This is a certified copy of his discharge from the Army while in Columbia, S.C., in 1919.

The committee has recommended an amendment by adding to the saving clause, providing also that he shall not receive any benefits by way of adjusted compensation.

I will say that the sole effect of this bill is to give this poor, unfortunate fellow hospitalization if hospitalization shall ever be conferred under the general law upon honorably discharged soldiers who have not a disability of service origin. We do not claim his disablity is of service origin or that the tuberculosis that has developed in him since was of service origin, but we do say if any honorably discharged soldier in the United States shall hereafter be hospitalized for a general disability not of service origin that this poor, unfortunate fellow, who was dragged hither and thither in spite of a physical disability that incapacitated him from functioning as a soldier, shall be eligible to such benefits. This is the sole purpose of the bill under the saving clause recommended by the committee.

Mr. GRISWOLD. This is the understanding I wanted, because the War Department at no time in its service record regarding this man shows that he had this injured finger until after he had deserted and was discharged.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; and they discharged him for that very reason.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Frank D. Whitfield, who served as a private in Company F, One hundred and Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, Army serial no. 1348550, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on March 14, 1921: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out, beginning in line 10, page 1, after the word "Provided", the remainder of the proviso and insert in lieu thereof: "That no bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled to by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BERYL M. M'HAM

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 38, the bill (H.R. 992) for the relief of Beryl M. McHam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he will accept this amendment?—

Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance, except adjusted-service compensation, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With this amendment I have no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will accept that, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Beryl M. McHam, who served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment, and Company C, Eighth Regiment, United States Infantry, World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 7th day of July 1920.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: At the end of line 9 insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance, except adjusted-service compensation, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARRY C. ANDERSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3492, for the relief of Harry C. Anderson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harry C. Anderson, who was a member of Battery C, Twentieth Regiment United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 17th day of January 1920: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 10, after the word "Provided", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That no bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled to by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL JELNA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3032, for the relief of Paul Jelna.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows or dependent relatives, Paul Jelna, who was a private of Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on November 30, 1902: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES MOFFITT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 363, for the relief of James Moffitt.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers James Moffitt, who served in Company F, First Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company August 25, 1900: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PETER GUILDAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 371, for the relief of Peter Guilday.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman explain why the date February 11, 1901, is inserted in the bill rather than the date of the man's dishonorable discharge or the date of his desertion? I see no explanation at all for using this particular date.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; I cannot.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. In bills of this kind, usually, the date of the man's dishonorable discharge is given.

Mr. CONNOLLY. If the gentleman will offer such an amendment I shall be pleased to accept it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That date is February 11, 1904. The gentleman will accept such an amendment?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Peter Guilday (name borne on the rolls as Peter Gillday and also as Peter Gilday), of Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 11th day of February 1901: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. In line 10, change "1901" to "1904."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: In line 10, strike out "1901" and insert in lieu thereof "1904."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN P. LEONARD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 541) for the relief of John P. Leonard.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John P. Leonard, late of Company I, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said Company I, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 31st day of December 1901: Provided, That no bounty, pension, back pay, or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 12, after the word "prior", insert "or subsequent."

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment, and I want to explain the facts in this case. We have no objection to the provision "That no bounty, back pay, or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of the act", but we do object to the words "or subsequent."

I want to explain the facts in the case. This man Leonard enlisted March 16, 1899, and was sent to the Philippines in June 1899. There he took part in all campaigns in which his command, Company L, Eighteenth United States Infantry, was engaged, until November 1901, when he was sent to the hospital and recommended for disability discharge. Without being so discharged he was sent to the United States, to Fort Douglas, Utah, but was not assigned to duty at the fort. While waiting for his discharge he went home with another soldier. The other man was arrested, but Leonard was allowed to go home. He took this as an indication that he was not considered a deserter, having been recommended for discharge on account of disability.

In June 1916 he enlisted under his real name as a mechanic for border service, from which he was discharged for disability in 1916. The acceptance of his service strengthened his impression that he had been honorably discharged in 1901. Since then he has learned that he is charged as a deserter from his first enlistment. He never learned until after his enlistment that he had been charged with desertion in the Philippine Islands.

The following quotation appears in Leonard's statement:

That my good faith as to my action in thinking I received an honorable discharge from Company L, Eighteenth United States Infantry, on my return in 1901 is evidenced by the fact that I enlisted in the military service of the United States in the Mexican expedition in 1916. The Government, in accepting me, strengthened my impression that I had been honorably discharged.

Had he not been of the opinion that he had been honorably discharged, he would hardly have enlisted under his correct name in 1916 and thereby subjected himself to arrest as a deserter. In view of the circumstances in this case, the Committee on Military Affairs recommends that the bill do pass as amended:

Provided, That no bounty, pension, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to or subsequent to the passage of this act.

I submit to you that he had service disability that any other Spanish-American soldier had. This amendment put on by the committee is rather a stereotyped amendment, but I insist that under the circumstances the committee amendment should be voted down.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Does the gentleman know why the committee suggested that amendment, because that amendment does not ordinarily appear in this kind of bill?

Mr. GREENWOOD. This bill passed at the last session, and I was informed by the committee that several bills that went through the subcommittee at that time bore this same recommendation. I took it up with him at the time, and he said that he thought in this particular case it was an injustice to this man.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It has not been the practice of the committee, I may state from some 10 years' service on the committee, to put that amendment on a bill of this type.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am aware of that. I believe the amendment should not appear in this case. If the man had not had 2½ years' service in the Philippine Islands and been recommended for discharge because of disability incurred in that service, then I might see why such an amendment as this should be put on the bill; but it seems to me it would be a great injustice to this man, who has had no compensation during all these years, to at this time deny him the same privilege that his comrades have been enjoying for years, when he gave the same service, which ended in a recommendation for discharge on account of disability.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In view of the practice, and in view of similar bills reported, and in view of the statements in the report by the Committee on Military Affairs, I am forced to agree with the gentleman from Indiana that the committee amendment ought not to be put on the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I know this man personally, and I know of his service and of his standing in the community. He is a man who ought not to have this particular amendment appear against him.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Was the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] speaking for the Committee on Military Affairs? It does seem to me that when a committee has put an amendment of this kind on a bill there must have been some reason for it. I myself know nothing of the facts, and the statement made by the gentleman is, of course, very convincing, but there must have been some reason why the Committee on Military Affairs would change the usual form and place this amendment on the bill. There is nothing in the report to show that.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I took it up at the last session with the chairman of the subcommittee, and he said there were several bills of this character before his subcommittee and that this was rather a uniform suggestion made in respect to several bills at that time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I also happen to be a member of that committee and I believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] will bear me out in this regard, that this session the committee reported out en bloc all the bills that had been heard favorably by a former Congress. There was some dispute in the Committee on Military Affairs at that time as to just what amendment should go on that type of bill. I share the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] that there were a few of those cases that slipped out, although we are careful now and we have a policy that these bills that were reported from a prior Congress should come into this Congress as they were.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I took it up with the chairman of the subcommittee and what he told me bears out what the gentleman from Connecticut has said.

Mr. HOLLISTER. And both gentlemen from the Committee on Military Affairs feel that that amendment should not have been placed on the bill?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is my judgment; yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALBERT D. CASTLEBERRY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 1859) for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Albert D. Castleberry, who was a member of Company I, Forty-fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, Philippine insurrection, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 20th day of May 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RICHARD A. CHAVIS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. This bill has been considered by the committee and reported unanimously and has already passed the House twice. At one time it passed during the closing days of the Congress and, therefore, did not get considered in the Senate. This old soldier is personally known to me. He has lived all of his life in my home county. He is around 70 years old at this time, just a poor tenant, very illiterate—can barely write his name. So far as his offense is concerned, apparently his officers understood his weakness and they charged him with absence without leave, really not desertion. On account of his condition from every angle, I hope that my colleague will not object but will permit me to pass this over to the Senate; and I make this statement, that if for any reason I fail to get the bill passed in the Senate during this session, I shall not reintroduce it again.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I am a member of this Committee on Military Affairs. So far as another body is concerned, they had literally hundreds of House bills over there in the last two Congresses, and the Committee on Military Affairs failed to function over there, and it got to be a great burden on our Committee on Military Affairs of the House. I think probably the gentleman's bill was one of those that was caught with all of these two or three hundred bills which the other body never considered at all.

Mr. FULMER. We have passed numerous bills for this purpose, many of which were not nearly as meritorious as in this instance. Knowing this party as I do, he being very old, and in that there is nothing for the Government to lose, too, he has suffered for 35 years under a dishonorable discharge. I hope the gentleman will not object and that the bill will be passed.

Mr. HOPE. My objection is based upon the fact that this soldier appears to have done nothing during the brief period he was in the military service to justify any claim upon his country. The record shows that he was mustered in on the 23d day of August 1898 and that he deserted on the 24th of September and remained in desertion until he was apprehended and brought back for trial, and he was very fortunate at that time in the fact that he was charged with absence without leave instead of desertion. Apparently after spending 30 days in the guardhouse as a result of a trial by courtmartial, he again went absent without leave, and the records show he was absent at the time his company was mustered out. I cannot see anything in a military record like that which would justify us in passing a bill granting him an honorable discharge.

Mr. FULMER. If the gentleman will yield, if the gentleman knew this party personally he would not hesitate to allow this bill to pass. I realize the record looks bad; but we have passed so many bills that are in line with this bill that it would be very unfair to this old soldier not to pass this bill. As I said a while ago, the officers understood his weakness and did not find him guilty of desertion. I have in the file a number of letters from the very best citizens of my State requesting that favorable consideration be given this bill, knowing this party as they do. I have known this man ever since I was a boy, and for a number of years he has done considerable business with me; and he has been an honest, upright man, and lived a good, clean life; and at his age I consider there is nothing to be lost on the part of the Congress by giving him an honorable discharge, in line with hundreds of others for whom we have passed similar relief bills.

Mr. HOPE. The report of the Committee on Military Affairs indicates that apparently the principal purpose in asking that this man be given an honorable discharge at this time is to enable him to enter a soldiers' home, so that he will not become a charge on the local community. If the man had performed any military service which would give him any right to call upon the United States Government for a pension or for the right to enter a soldiers' home, I would say we might overlook some of his record; but certainly this man has not done anything that gives him any right along that line.

Mr. FULMER. There is nothing that this man can get in the way of a benefit in the future unless sometime he would be put in an old soldiers' home, and, knowing these people as I do, he will never leave his home, regardless of the condition he is in, to go to a soldiers' home.

Mr. HOPE. If we pass this legislation giving him an honorable discharge, from that time on he would be entitled to any benefits that would go to any honorably discharged soldier from the Spanish-American War.

Mr. FULMER. Not having served the number of days required, he would not be entitled to any pension whatsoever.

Mr. HOPE. I do not know what the record shows as to his service. If you take the time from the date of his mustering in until the time his company was mustered out, he was in the service for a period of several months. If we clear his record, he will be entitled to whatever benefits may be coming to any honorably discharged Spanish-American War veteran.

Mr. FULMER. As I stated, on account of his age, and this bill having passed the House twice, I am hoping the gentleman will give me this opportunity to clear the old gentleman's record, which I am sure the gentleman would do if I had time to talk to him further.

Mr. HOPE. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment that no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue as the result of the passage of this legislation?

Mr. FULMER. I shall be glad to accept that.

Mr. HOPE. With that understanding I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Richard A. Chavis, who served as a member of Company L, Second South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from said service on the 19th day of April 1899: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "accrue" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be held to have accrued."

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 1, line 9, strike out all of lines 9, 10, and 11, and insert "Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES WALLACE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2670, for the relief of James Wallace.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers James Wallace, who was a member of Troop K, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, and who was honorably discharged therefrom on January 17, 1902, and reenlisted April 8, 1902, in Troop K, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on June 22, 1902, and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM M. STODDARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2743, for the relief of William M. Stoddard.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William M. Stoddard, who was a member of Company D, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 13th day of February 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the figure "13th" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "25th."

Page 1, line 10, strike out the figure "1898" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "1899."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHRISTOPHER COTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3054, for the relief of Christopher Cott.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Christopher Cott, who was a member of Company M, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 5th day of August 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARVEY O. WILLIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3553, for the relief of Harvey O. Willis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harvey O. Willis, who was a member of Company F, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 19th day of July 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STEPHEN SOWINSKI

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3124, for the relief of Stephen Sowinski.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FRANK KROEGEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5635, for the relief of Frank Kroegel, alias Francis Kroegel.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SAMSON DAVIS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 381, for the relief of Samson Davis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Samson Davis, who was a member of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 29th day of August 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. WALTER E. DANDY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 257, to authorize full settlement for professional services rendered to an officer of the United States Army.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Dr. Walter E. Dandy the sum of $1,000 out of the appropriation "Medical and Hospital Department, 1929" in full settlement for professional services rendered on November 26, 1928, to Maj. Frank V. Schneider, Infantry, United States Army, who was suffering from a rare and obscure disease contracted in the line of duty, the said services resulting in the cure and restoration to full duty of the said Maj. Frank V. Schneider.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DAVID I. BROWN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1403, for the relief of David I. Brown.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, or dependent relatives, David I. Brown, formerly a private of Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 17th day of January 1903: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or other emoluments shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEONARD L. DILGER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1413, for the relief of Leonard L. Dilger.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Leonard L. Dilger, who was a member of Company L, Third Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 25th day of September 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM G. BURRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2439, for the relief of William G. Burress.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William G. Burress, who was a member of Company A, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 7th day of March 1897: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, as the proponent of the bill I think there ought to be a correction of title. The soldier referred to in the bill is dead, and I am reminded by the gentleman from New York that you cannot give relief to a dead man. So I think the title should be amended to read: "To correct the military record of William G. Burress."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think we should agree on some uniform practice in these cases. A few moments ago we passed a bill involving a man who had died and we added after his name in the title the word "deceased." Personally, I feel we should agree on some uniform method of handling this matter.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman's suggestion is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 1, amend the title to read: "For the relief of William G. Burress, deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN NEWMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2509, for the relief of John Newman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John Newman, recently of the United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private from Company B, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 5th day of August 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ERNEY S. BLAZER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3997, for the relief of Erney S. Blazer.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Erney S. Blazer, who was a member of Company E, Second Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 22d day of October 1902: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANCIS N. DOMINICK

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 727, for the relief of Francis N. Dominick.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army Francis N. Dominick shall be held and considered to have served without desertion as a private, Sixty-sixth Company, United States Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, and to have been honorably discharged from such service on October 19, 1903, Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOR THE RELIEF OF ROLANDO B. MOFFETT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 248, for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Rolando B. Moffett, who was a member of Company H, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 30th day of September 1880: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF WILSON G. BINGHAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2632, for the relief of Wilson G. Bingham.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it occurs to me that this officer had a wonderful war record and that he was a Regular Army officer, but he did not bring himself within the retirement provisions. He now draws $888 per year from the Veterans' Administration, and he is in no worse condition than thousands of others who are not even drawing that much or anything like that amount at the present time. I do not see why he should be especially preferred over thousands of others by special legislation.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I have personal knowledge of this young man's case; and I believe the subcommittee that heard his case and the full committee were convinced that, although this is perhaps a new theory, this young man's record was such that he is entitled to the consideration that this bill gives him.

I call attention to the fact that this young man was the youngest captain commissioned in the World War in the service of the United States Army. He graduated from West Point on August 30, 1917, and, in accordance with his expressed wish, was sent for service overseas. On October 9, 1918, at 21, he was commissioned as the youngest captain in the service in the late war. He took part in the Meuse-Argonne offensive and the Romaigne offensive. He was wounded and also suffered from gas inhalation. As a result of his war service he was twice awarded the Order of the Purple Heart, with oak leaf cluster, received the Victory Medal with three battle bars and the Verdun medal.

Following his wounds he was operated on at Souilly, spent 2 months at the base hospital at Jouee les Tours, and was finally brought back to the United States.

He attempted to go on with his duty in the service. He was confined at Madison Barracks in September 1919, for congestion of the lungs, due to gas inhalation and exposure. He was then ordered to California, where he continued to suffer from his service-connected injuries and lung congestion.

I should like to take the time to call the attention of the Members of the House to the recommendation made by Colonel Hunt, who had command of the Sixth Infantry, Fifth Division, under whom this young man served. Colonel Hunt states:

In this post he came under my personal supervision. Despite the fact that he was a mere boy of 21 years, in recognition of his training, efficiency and qualities of leadership I placed him in command of Company D. He successfully led this company throughout the St. Mihiel offensive, in which the regiment was in the assault during the entire operation. In additional recognition of his ability, we recommended him for promotion to a temporary captain, which was made official October 9, 1918, making him one of the youngest, if not the youngest, captain in the A.E.F. At various times during our front-line service Captain Bingham volunteered for raiding parties and to lead hazardous night operations in addition to his usual duties.

He comes from a long, well-known, distinguished, patriotic family of my home State, New Hampshire. He went to California in an attempt to receive some improvement from his service-incurred disabilities. It was impossible for him to do so. His commanding officer says this:

Knowing him as I do, and knowing that he has permanent disabilities to a high degree as a result of his service, I cannot deny myself this opportunity to urge that he be placed on the retired list of the Army.

And it was the feeling of the Military Affairs Committee, as set forth in the last sentence of this report, that since he was refused retirement under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act, he is left an orphan so far as general legislation is concerned, and the passage of this special act is necessary to accord him the rights to which he is entitled both in law and in equity. From my own knowledge of the case I feel that is a perfectly fair and reasonable statement of his case.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. As I look at the matter, these are the facts: This officer was educated at the United States Military Academy. He was a professional soldier. He went to war. He had a distinguished record in the service. After the war, and while still in service, and acting under orders so far as the Army was concerned, able-bodied, he went to California. He says that after he got there he wanted to stay there because of his health. He decided to remain there because of his health and requested his retirement or his discharge.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. He had to stay there to do it.

Mr. GRISWOLD. So far as the Army was concerned, he was still in the Army and subject to orders. He himself requested his discharge. The point I bring out is this: I thoroughly approve of the man's record, but he is drawing $888 a year. He was a professional soldier. Thousands of other boys are not drawing anything like this amount, although they are just as much entitled to it as this man is, and they were not professional soldiers.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the recommendation of the Secretary of War in connection with this matter. Because of his being wounded and gassed, and on account of his wonderful war record, the Secretary of War comes back with a recommendation to our committee that, since he was wounded in action and served with an honorable record, they suggest that the resolution be changed so as to extend to this officer the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Was he an emergency officer or a Regular officer?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. He was a Regular officer.

Mr. BLANTON. If he were a Regular officer, what rights has he under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. He has none.

Mr. BLANTON. Then that phase is out of the question.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. That is out of the question.

Mr. BLANTON. I was wondering in that connection, if he had been an emergency officer——

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. No; never.

Mr. BLANTON. With that kind of a record he would certainly have been retired, because there have been many emergency officers retired for imaginary reasons—for instance, "social inaptitude", and things of that kind.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I agree with the gentleman. Because of his wonderful individual record, this Government would make no mistake in granting this gentleman permission to appear before a retiring board, to consider his application to be placed on the retired list of the Army without any back pay or allowances.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. As the gentleman from Texas stated, had the beneficiary of this bill been an emergency officer, in view of the findings by the Veterans' Administration, there is no doubt but what he would have been retired as an emergency officer, and that he would today be drawing retired pay as an emergency officer.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. Every one of them who were actually disabled in service as emergency officers have been put back on the rolls. There are approximately 2,000 of them back on the rolls now. There are about 5,000 emergency officers who have been dropped and they were dropped because their evidence and the records in the Veterans' Bureau showed they were not disabled in the service.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. At the time of his resignation I assume that this officer would have been eligible to retirement if he had made application at that time?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. He let it go and did not.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman know why the captain took this particular method of getting out of the Army instead of asking at that time for retirement?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. He took it, sir, for this reason, and if you knew the man, you would not dispute it for one moment. I know the man and the members of this committee had an opportunity to see him and hear his story. He did not want anything and did not ask for anything until the last possible moment, and it now seems to me he is entitled to have from this Government the relief which he is asking.

Mr. KVALE. If the gentleman will permit, as I recall, he did not believe at the time that his condition was so serious or that it would be permanent.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. That is true, and he is now all shot to pieces.

Mr. HOPE. This man was suffering from the same injury at the time of his resignation and his physical condition was the cause of his resignation.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes; but it was gradually growing worse.

Mr. HOPE. But it was the same disability?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

IDA F. WATERMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 311, for the relief of Ida F. Waterman.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he is willing to accept an amendment to insert the usual proviso at the end of the bill, and I also direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that we again have the question of a proper title for a bill of this kind.

We have passed several measures this afternoon purporting to be for the relief of deceased soldiers. That, of course, is absurd. Now, we have one presumably for the relief of the widow of a soldier, although her name is not mentioned in the bill itself.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It seems to me we ought to ask the Judge Advocate of the Army and the Judge Advocate of the Navy to suggest a proper title for bills of this kind so the title may be indicative of what the bill actually is.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. We have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If we follow the practice adopted this afternoon, at the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY], the proper title would be "for the relief of Martin Henry Waterman, deceased." I do not think this is appropriate, but it is what we have done today and if the gentleman has no objection, I shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I do not see what we gain by the amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is simply to make the title suggestive of what the bill is. I think the proper title would be "to correct the military record", and so forth.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. You cannot come to the relief of a man after he is dead, can you?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I raised that point earlier in the afternoon, but gentlemen on the other side insisted his title. It is not of any importance to me. However, I do think we should have a uniform practice.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. If it is not of any importance, why not withhold the amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think in a bill of this kind it would be more appropriate to say "for the relief of the widow of Martin Henry Waterman", or the estate, or the next of kin, or something of that sort.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Perhaps it would.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This woman's name does not appear in the enactment anywhere. I assume she is this man's widow, but we really ought not to guess at it. The bill says nothing about this woman and we do not know who she is.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. What amendment does the gentleman desire to offer?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I want the title changed in some way so that it will have a proper title.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Why not say for the relief of the heirs of so and so?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Something of that sort would be satisfactory to me. Will the gentleman accept such an amendment?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I will accept the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, Martin Henry Waterman, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on the 21st day of February 1891: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "21st" and insert "2d."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, being the usual proviso at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: At the end of the bill strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, changing the title to read, "For the relief of Martin Henry Waterman, deceased", which is the practice we followed today. It may be silly, but at least it will be consistent.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I agree with the gentleman it is silly even though consistent. I would say that if you offered an amendment changing the title to read, "For the relief of the heirs of Martin Henry Waterman", it would be consistent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Amend the title so that it will read, "A bill for the relief of Martin Henry Waterman, deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was order to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES C. SCHILLING

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 588) for the relief of Charles C. Schilling.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, the committee amendment provides that no bounty, back pay, pension, or "amounts" shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act. That is not the usual language. The usual language is "pension or allowances."

Mr. GRISWOLD. This is a bill introduced by my predecessor 4 years ago. I know very little about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. GRISWOLD. This man, as I understand, was in the Army in Nebraska.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. What was the Army doing in Nebraska?

Mr. GRISWOLD. He was at Fort Robinson and had trouble with his teeth, took narcotics and became a drug addict. He deserted April 20, 1902, and was discharged in 1904 at Fort Bliss on account of his previous desertion.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. What is this bill for? Does he want a pension?

Mr. GRISWOLD. No. I do not think he wants a pension.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Then I withdraw my reservation.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles C. Schilling, who was a member of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 2d day of July 1904.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 9, after the figures "1904", insert Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or amounts shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment with the following amendment: Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "amounts" and insert the word "allowance."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HENRY M. BURNS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 890) for the relief of Henry M. Burns.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Henry M. Burns, who was a member of Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 7th day of October 1913: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH TIBE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 912) awarding the Distinguished Service Cross to Joseph Tibe.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LT. COL. CLAUDE M. STANLEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 1352) to allow the Distinguished Service Cross for service in the World War to be awarded to Lt. Col. Claude M. Stanley.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I reserve the right to object. I want to ask a question. My understanding is that under the law providing for the award of the Distinguished Service Cross by the President eliminated Congress from awarding the Distinguished Service Cross.

Mr. THURSTON. I understand the limitation which would authorize the War Department to extend recognition for distinguished military services expired by operation of law. I would like to explain the merit of this case. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. It would award the Distinguished Service Cross to Lt. Col. Claude M. Stanley, who bears a long and honorable record of military service. It is recommended by the commanding officer of the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Infantry, and also by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, a brigade commander, Forty-second Division, the present Chief of Staff, for gallantry performed by Lieutenant Colonel Stanley in France.

He also served in the Spanish War, and as the report discloses, has the endorsement and recommendation from at least six or eight field officers who served in the Rainbow Division.

I have letters here from Colonel Judah, of Chicago; Colonel Garrett, of Kansas City; Colonel Talbott, of Dallas, Tex. He says:

> I think it is a wonderful tribute to Colonel Stanley, but I think it is a d—— shame that it is being done 10 years after the war is over. This is no reflection on you, Congressman, but on the War Department itself.

Then Colonel Bare, of Atlanta, Ga., says:

> It gives me a great deal of pleasure to enclose a statement regarding the activities of our mutual friend, Col. Claude W. Stanley, of Corning, Iowa. I trust you will be able to secure for Colonel Stanley the Distinguished Service Cross, which he so justly earned.

It happens that the brigade commander under whom Colonel Stanley served is the present Chief of Staff of the United States Army, and I call attention to the concluding paragraph of his recommendation, in fact, a citation, on page 8 of the report, wherein he says:

> His gallant resourcefulness and courage have justly earned for him the award for which he is here recommended.
>
> DOUGLAS MACARTHUR,
> Brigadier General, General Staff, Commanding.

Of course, this was a National Guard regiment, and we know that the civilian soldiers do not have the information in regard to obtaining recognition for merit that prevails throughout the regular organization. In view of the fact that he has the recommendation and endorsements of 8 or 10 of the field officers of his own brigade, in his own division, plus the recommendation of the Chief of Staff, and in view of the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously recommended it, it seems to me that this soldier, even at this late day, is entitled to this recognition.

Mr. GRISWOLD. My understanding is that this officer did perform some very distinguished services, and that he received great honors, among others the Silver Star decoration, and that at the time the matter was before the board he was recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross, but the board passed on it and did not give him the Distinguished Service Cross, but did give him the Silver Star decoration. I am wondering whether, at this late period, after these events are all over, we would not be creating a dangerous precedent in saying that Congress can override the board that had the evidence before it, and confer further honors that the law never contemplated being conferred at the time it was passed.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; if we enter the field of comparable discussion, we would find that many men in the military service and some in the civil branch were granted this distinction, men who were never in France or who never served in the war zone.

Mr. GRISWOLD. This board was actually sitting over there in France and took cognizance of all these facts.

Mr. THURSTON. And this board was composed wholly of men who were in the regular service.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Oh, please do not make that distinction. I resent that.

Mr. THURSTON. I take it, General MARTIN, that they were gentlemen of high repute in their organization, but I have had occasion to serve in a modest capacity in two wars, and I know that the men who served in the volunteer forces did not have the information and were not always cognizant of their rights, and the time expired, and after you have read over the numerous recommendations made by the field officers who served with this veteran in France, plus the present recommendation of the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, who has been accredited this highest position in our military command, surely, sitting here as a jury, relying upon expert testimony, we are bound by the evidence that has been adduced in this case.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I understand that this application for the Distinguished Service Medal came before this particular board and was turned down. Is that the case?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not understand that that is the case.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes; that is the case.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Then I object. I hate to object to these things, but if he came before the board that considered all applications and was turned down, it ought to remain so. You cannot make fish of one and fowl of another.

Mr. GOSS. As I recall it, the other day the House passed the so-called "Hoeppel bill", which dealt with this question of the Distinguished Service Cross and the Distinguished Service Medal in lieu of certificates and merit. Is that correct?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes; but the Hoeppel bill would hardly affect the matter that we have before us now, in my judgment.

Mr. GOSS. That is what I want to know. Would the Hoeppel bill that was passed this week affect this?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not so understand it would.

Mr. GOSS. Has this man ever been cited with the certificate of merit?

Mr. THURSTON. No. The facts are this veteran did not know of his right to have this award until after the limitation had expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. As I recall this bill, the colonel was turned down by the examining board for this, and after having been turned down by the examining board Congress should not come along and overrule the finding of that board.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. If you do that, you will have hundreds of cases here of this kind. You will have every fellow who was in the war coming here.

Mr. THURSTON. Nevertheless, I do not understand that we have vested in any committee of Regular Army officers or any adjunct or unit of the War Department the sole right to dispose of such matters. When a department acts unjustly or fails to meritoriously act, appellate jurisdiction is vested in the Congress, and in view of the uncontradicted testimony that is before us as to the meritorious service that this man rendered, supplemented by the endorsement of the highest ranking military man we have in our Government, it seems to me that if this body would act as any other body charged with the duty of making a fair finding incident to a given service, they would not only be warranted but required to grant this officer the recognition suggested by the Chief of Staff of the United States Army and the House Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman know of any precedent for action of this kind? That is, any precedent for Congress awarding the Distinguished Service Cross after he has been turned down by the regular board of the Army, organized for that purpose?

Mr. THURSTON. I am not familiar with War Department precedents.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHARLES T. MOLL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3985, for the relief of Charles T. Moll.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles T. Moll shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 9th day of August 1901 and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ANNUAL REPORT OF ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN (H.DOC. NO. 133)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the requirements of section 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Alien Property Custodian on proceedings had under the Trading with the Enemy Act for the year ended December 31, 1933.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS (H.DOC. NO. 245)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an annual appropriation in the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and/or of the commissions established by that committee.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Enclosure: Report.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—SUGAR (H.DOC. NO. 246)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered printed:

To the Congress:

Steadily increasing sugar production in the continental United States and in insular regions has created a price and marketing situation prejudicial to virtually everyone interested. Farmers in many areas are threatened with low prices for their beets and cane, and Cuban purchases of our goods have dwindled steadily as her shipments of sugar to this country have declined.

There is a school of thought which believes that sugar ought to be on the free list. This belief is based on the high cost of sugar to the American consuming public.

The annual gross value of the sugar crop to American beet and cane growers is approximately $60,000,000. Those who believe in the free importation of sugar say that the 2-cents-a-pound tariff is levied mostly to protect this $60,000,000 crop, and that it costs our consuming public every year more than $200,000,000 to afford this protection.

I do not at this time recommend placing sugar on the free list. I feel that we ought first to try out a system of quotas with the threefold object of keeping down the price of sugar to consumers, of providing for the retention of beet and cane farming within our continental limits, and also to provide against further expansion of this necessarily expensive industry.

Consumers have not benefited from the disorganized state of sugar production here and in the insular regions. Both the import tariff and cost of distribution, which together account for the major portion of the consumers' price for sugar, have remained relatively constant during the past 3 years.

This situation clearly calls for remedial action. I believe that we can increase the returns to our own farmers, contribute to the economic rehabilitation of Cuba, provide adequate quotas for the Philippines, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands and at the same time prevent higher prices to our own consumers.

The problem is difficult but can be solved if it is met squarely and if small temporary gains are sacrificed to ultimate general advantage.

The objective may be attained most readily through amendment of existing legislation. The Agricultural Adjustment Act should be amended to make sugar beets and sugarcane basic agricultural commodities. It then will be possible to collect a processing tax on sugar, the proceeds of which will be used to compensate farmers for holding their production to the quota level. A tax of less than one half cent per pound would provide sufficient funds.

Consumers need not and should not bear this tax. It is already within the Executive power to reduce the sugar tariff by an amount equal to the tax. In order to make certain that American consumers shall not bear an increased price due to this tax, Congress should provide that the rate of the processing tax shall in no event exceed the amount by which the tariff on sugar is reduced below the present rate of import duty.

By further amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Secretary of Agriculture should be given authority to license refiners, importers, and handlers to buy and sell sugar from the various producing areas only in the proportion which recent marketings of such areas bear to total United States consumption. The average marketings of the past 3 years provide on the whole an equitable base, but the base period should be flexible enough to allow slight adjustments as between certain producing areas.

The use of such a base would allow approximately the following preliminary and temporary quotas:

	Short tons
Continental beets	1,450,000
Louisiana and Florida	260,000
Hawaii	935,000
Puerto Rico	821,000
Philippine Islands	1,037,000
Cuba	1,944,000
Virgin Islands	5,000
Total	6,452,000

The application of such quotas would immediately adjust market supplies to consumption, and would provide a basis for reduction of production to the needs of the United States market.

Furthermore, in the negotiations for a new treaty between the United States and Cuba to replace the existing Commercial Convention, which negotiations are to be resumed immediately, favorable consideration will be given to an increase in the existing preferential on Cuban sugars to an extent compatible with the joint interests of the two countries.

In addition to action made possible by such legislative and treaty changes, the Secretary of Agriculture already has authority to enter into codes and marketing agreements with manufacturers which would permit savings in manufacturing and distributing costs. If any agreements or codes are entered into, they should be in such form as to assure that producers and consumers share in the resulting savings.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

OLD-AGE PENSION SYSTEM

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules (H.Res. 249) for printing under the rule:

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration House Resolution 249, reports the same to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be adopted and the resolution as amended do pass.

House Resolution 249

Whereas under modern methods of mass production by the use of machines it is constantly becoming more difficult for persons of middle age and old age to secure employment; and

Whereas honest and industrious workers who have contributed to the wealth and productivity of our Nation are entitled to better consideration in their old age than as objects of charity; and

Whereas it is now widely believed that many of the poor-relief systems in operation in the United States are an inadequate, incompetent, and, at the same time, very costly method of providing for the aged; and

Whereas 27 States, as well as the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, have by statutory enactment adopted systems of old-age assistance which are granted to certain of their aged population; and

Whereas it may be desirable to provide a system of old-age assistance which will be uniform throughout the United States, and which will provide for the transient as well as the permanent resident; and

Whereas the most feasible and practical way whereby a system of old-age pensions can be made adequate and uniform throughout the United States is through assistance by the Federal Government, preferably under a system of contributory pensions; and

Whereas accurate and complete statistics as to the number of aged persons and as to the life expectancy of all persons are available; and

Whereas from these statistics actuaries can easily calculate the amount of contributions to a system of old-age pensions required and of the total cost thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the standing Committee on Labor be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed—

(a) To study and investigate—

1. The operation and extent of old-age assistance systems now in operation in the various States;

2. The establishment of a system of old-age contributory pensions for persons 65 years of age and over under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government or of any agency thereof, and the constitutional questions involved therein;

3. The actuarial problems involved in the inauguration of a contributory old-age pension system;

4. The amount of contributions and the cost required for a contributory system for the payment of pensions, beginning at 65 and at 70 years of age at amounts ranging from $25 to $50 monthly; and

5. The desirability of contributions exclusively from employers and employees or also from the Federal Government.

(b) To sit and act in the District of Columbia whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to consult such experts and actuaries, to request by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oath, to take such testimony, to secure such data and any and all other information, to have such printing and binding done, as it deems necessary; an oath or affirmation may be administered by any member of the committee.

(c) To require the services of such employees of the House of Representatives as are available and of the Federal Government as it may deem necessary and as the department or independent agency is able to dispense with.

(d) To report before the adjournment of this session of Congress, if possible; and if that should not be possible, then to file its report not later than January 3, 1935, before noon; and to recommend legislation establishing an old-age contributory pension system under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, if the committee deems such legislation appropriate.

MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight next Thursday, 1 week from today, within which to file minority views on the bill H.R. 3842.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MARLAND, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HIGGINS, for an indefinite period, on account of illness of his wife.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 2277. An act to establish fish and game sanctuaries in the national forests; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 2529. An act to promote conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 2633. An act to supplement and support the migratory-bird conservation act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds; for developing and administering such areas; for the protection of certain migratory birds; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 157. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1548), entitled "An act to supplement the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1161), as amended by the act of March 21, 1918 (40 Stat. 458)";

S. 284. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to School District No. 28, Deschutes County, Oreg.;

S. 1774. An act to provide for extension of time for making deferred payments on homestead entries in the abandoned Fort Lowell Military Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 2152. Granting certain property to the State of Michigan for institutional purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 9, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

343. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a bill to validate payments for medical and hospital treatment of members of Reserve Officers' Training Corps and citizens' military training camps, with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Claims.

344. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a bill authorizing the President to present the Distinguished Flying Cross to Air Marshal Italo Balbo and Gen. Aldo Pellegrini, of the Royal Italian Air Force; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

345. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency and supplemental estimates of appropriations pertaining to the legislative establishment, United States Senate, for the fiscal year 1933, $14,305.35, and for the fiscal year 1934, $167,000, amounting in all to $181,305.35 (H.Doc. No. 242); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

346. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to the appropriation for salaries and expenses, Forest Service, fighting forest fires, Department of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1934 (H.Doc. No. 243); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

347. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations pertaining to the legislative establishment, Library of Congress, for the fiscal year 1935, in the sum of $4,140 (H.Doc. No. 244); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BANKHEAD: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 249. Resolution to direct the standing Committee on Labor to make a study and prepare legislation for the establishment of a uniform, national old-age pension system on a contributory basis; with amendment (Rept. No. 663). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2339. A bill for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery; with amendment (Rept. No. 632). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2340. A bill for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas; with amendment (Rept. No. 633). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2431. A bill for the relief of certain newspapers for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department; without amendment (Rept. No. 634). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2432. A bill for the relief of Homer J. Williamson; without amendment (Rept. No. 635). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2438. A bill for the relief of Ruby F. Voiles; with amendment (Rept. No. 636). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2518. A bill for the relief of Blanch Broomfield; with amendment (Rept. No. 637). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2556. A bill for the relief of John L. Hoffman; without amendment (Rept. No. 638). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2641. A bill for the relief of Joseph A. McCarthy; with amendment (Rept. No. 639). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2651. A bill for the relief of Frank W. Childress; without amendment (Rept. No. 640). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2666. A bill for the relief of D. F. Phillips; without amendment (Rept. No. 641). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2669. A bill for the relief of Paul I. Morris and Beulah Fuller Morris; without amendment (Rept. No. 642). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2673. A bill for the relief of Ada T. Finley; without amendment (Rept. No. 643). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2802. A bill for the relief of Albert H. Jacobson; without amendment (Rept. No. 644). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3056. A bill for the relief of James B. Conner; with amendment (Rept. No. 645). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3066. A bill for the relief of William J. Ryan, chaplain, United States Army; without amendment (Rept. No. 646). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3130. A bill to extend the benefit of the United States Employment Compensation Act to Frank A. Smith; without amendment (Rept. No. 647). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3146. A bill for the relief of John W. Barnum; without amendment (Rept. No. 648). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3188. A bill for the relief of Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr.; with amendment (Rept. No. 649). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3293. A bill to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line; without amendment (Rept. No. 650). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3295. A bill for the relief of the estate of White B. Miller; with amendment (Rept. No. 651). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3459. A bill for the relief of the Franklin Surety Co.; with amendment (Rept. No. 652). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3463. A bill for the relief of Walter E. Switzer; with amendment (Rept. No. 653). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3502. A bill for the relief of the estate of William Bardel; with amendment (Rept. No. 654). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3504. A bill for the relief of Jose O. Enslew; without amendment (Rept. No. 655). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3630. A bill for the relief of the estate of Benjamin Braznell; without amendment (Rept. No. 656). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3851. A bill for the relief of Henry A. Richmond; with amendment (Rept. No. 657). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3911. A bill for the relief of Margaret Diederich; without amendment (Rept. No. 658). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3912. A bill for the relief of Roland Zolesky; without amendment (Rept. No. 659). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3913. A bill for the relief of the legal guardian of Nick Vasilzevic; without amendment (Rept. No. 660). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 3914. A bill for the relief of the George C. Mansfield Co. and George D. Mansfield; without amendment (Rept. No. 661). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

ADVERSE REPORT

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee: Committee on Ways and Means. House Resolution 250. Resolution requesting information in regard to war debts (Rept. No. 662). Ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4141) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post office and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1919, as amended by act of March 6, 1920, and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARKER: A bill (H.R. 7793) authorizing a preliminary examination of the Ogeechee River in the State of Georgia, with a view to controlling of floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. MEAD: A bill (H.R. 7794) to amend section 51 of chapter 2, title 45, of the Code of Laws of the United States of America; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Washington: A bill (H.R. 7795) providing for a survey of the Columbia River and Vancouver Lake, at Vancouver, Wash.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7796) providing for a survey of Elokomin Slough, sometimes known as "Cathlamet Slough", near the city of Cathlamet, Wash.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H.R. 7797) to authorize payment of claims for unauthorized emergency treatment of World War veterans; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. MOREHEAD: A bill (H.R. 7798) to provide for an exemption from processing taxes under the Agricultural Adjustment Act in the case of products to be used by State tax-supported institutions; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CARTWRIGHT: A bill (H.R. 7799) to make it unlawful to use the mails to solicit insurance against any perils, or to collect premiums on insurance, in any State without complying with the laws of such State by appointing an agent upon whom service of summons may be made; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H.R. 7800) to amend the Radio Act of 1927, as amended, by the addition of a new section to follow section 28 of said act; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

By Mr. PIERCE: A bill (H.R. 7801) to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H.R. 7802) to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SCHAEFER: A bill (H.R. 7803) authorizing the city of East St. Louis, Ill., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: A bill (H.R. 7804) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to certain hospitals; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MEAD: A bill (H.R. 7805) to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. CROSS of Texas: A bill (H.R. 7806) levying a tax of 20 percent, in addition to any tax now levied, on the profits derived from short sales of commodities and short sales and marginal purchases of stocks, bonds, and/or other securities; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H.R. 7807) to provide a penalty for the presentation of a false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McREYNOLDS: A bill (H.R. 7808) to authorize annual appropriations to meet losses sustained by officers and employees of the United States in foreign countries due to the appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H.R. 7809) to establish a board to examine the subject of clear height above the water of the bridge located at Fifty-seventh Street, New York City; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARTLEY: Resolution (H.Res. 258) to investigate the operation and leasing of the Port Newark Army supply base, N.J., for warehousing and terminal purposes to private commercial firms or individuals; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BLOOM: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 265) providing for the preparation and completion of plans for a comprehensive observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formulation of the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BECK: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 266) providing for the preparation and completion of plans for a comprehensive observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formulation of the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. McCORMACK: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 267) to authorize the several States to negotiate compacts or agreements to promote greater uniformity in the laws of such States affecting labor and industries; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to unemployment in the State of Wisconsin and requesting extension of the Civil Works Administration and the increase of Wisconsin's Civil Works Administration quota to at least 160,000; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to enact proposed legislation for the control of the grasshopper menace; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOEHNE: A bill (H.R. 7810) for the relief of Robert Denk; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRUMM: A bill (H.R. 7811) for the relief of Benjamin Lucas; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE of California: A bill (H.R. 7812) for the relief of Samuel S. Knox; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7813) to authorize the presentation of the Distinguished Service Cross to Walter H. Cobun; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARTWRIGHT: A bill (H.R. 7814) granting a pension to Georgia L. Spelce; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOBBINS: A bill (H.R. 7815) granting a pension to Margaret Albritton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi: A bill (H.R. 7816) for the relief of Oswald H. Halford, Hunter M. Henry, William C. Horne, Rupert R. Johnson, David L. Lacey, William Z. Lee, Fenton F. Rodgers, Henry Freeman Seale, Felix M. Smith, Edwin C. Smith, Robert S. Sutherland, and Charles G. Ventress; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: A bill (H.R. 7817) for the relief of Robert M. Kenton; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7818) for the relief of Earl Sykes, W. Ward Beaston, the estate of Noble Benson, David L. Seacord, and Mrs. Edith Carpenter; to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H.R. 7819) for the relief of Edward C. Sullivan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7820) for the relief of Guiseppe Rossi; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H.R. 7821) for the relief of Harry Warren Halterman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MARTIN of Oregon: A bill (H.R. 7822) for the relief of Hans Joseph Michael Merz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McLEOD: A bill (H.R. 7823) for the relief of Raymond A. Dehetre; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OLIVER of New York: A bill (H.R. 7824) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Carlo de Luca; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 7825) to extend the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, to James M. Harwood; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SECREST: A bill (H.R. 7826) for the relief of the Lower Commercial Bank, Lower Salem, Ohio; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H.R. 7827) granting insurance to Adelina N. Armistead; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7828) for the relief of Annie M. Ayer; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2180. By Mr. BAKEWELL: Resolution requesting the President of the United States to obtain from the Government of the German Reich, and specifically from its dictator, Chancellor Adolph Hitler, an explanation of its high-handed, autocratic, dominating, and unwarranted attitude toward persons of Jewish origin and extraction, which course of action distinctly violates Germany's express treaty obligations to respect the civil and religious liberties of the minority nationalities residing within its borders; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2181. By Mr. CULLEN: Resolutions unanimously adopted at a convention of the National Guard Association of the State of New York, Utica, January 20, 1934, in regard to drills; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2182. By Mr. CUMMINGS: Petition of the Willard Parent-Teacher Association, Willard, Colo., urging the passage of House bill 6097, providing for higher standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2183. Also, petition of the Irrigationists' Association of Water District No. 1, of the State of Colorado, desiring to maintain the Irrigation Division of the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering of the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2184. By Mr. FARLEY: Petition of F. J. Tibbitts, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and more than 12,000 other citizens of the Fourth Congressional District, for freedom of the radio, acting within their constitutional rights; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2185. By Mr. FORD: Resolution of the Young Democratic Clubs of Los Angeles County, advocating changes in the method of offering subscription to issues of Federal tax-exempt securities in the public interest; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2186. By Mr. HOLMES: Resolutions of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress in favor of proper consideration for granite in Federal construction projects; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

2187. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Resolution passed in San Antonio, Tex., on January 21, 1934, at a meeting of Forty et Eight, American Legion, favoring the four-point program of the American Legion; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

2188. Also, petition of George E. Hughes, department adjutant, the American Legion, Department of Texas, Austin, Tex., favoring the four-point program of the American Legion; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

2189. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Durkee Famous Foods, Inc., Berkeley, Calif., opposing the 5 cent per pound tax on coconut oil and sesame oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2190. Also, petition of the Joint Committee on Unemployment, New York City, concerning increase of purchasing power of the agricultural, industrial, and salaried workers of America; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2191. By Mr. McCORMACK: Petition of All-Dorchester Post, No. 154, Inc., 500 Columbia Road, Dorchester, Mass., Dr. Joseph J. Tierney, 44 Pearl Street, Dorchester, Mass., commander, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact into law legislation which would legalize a national lottery similar to the Irish and Canadian sweepstakes, the profits derived from same to be used solely for hospitalization of sick and wounded and disabled veterans of all wars of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2192. By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of thousands of citizens of Berks County, Pa., protesting to the Congress against certain wrongful interference with their rights in respect to radio broadcasts, and asserting that by threats, coercion, and other improper influence many radio stations have been prevented from broadcasting that which is in the public interest, thus depriving American citizens of the privilege of hearing that which they wish to hear; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2193. By Mr. SADOWSKI: Petition of the National Vocational Guidance Association of Detroit and vicinity, asking for direct Federal loans for public education; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2194. By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: Petition of teachers of 12 public schools of the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania, urging immediate Federal emergency relief for the public schools of the Nation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2195. By Mr. THOMASON: Petition of residents of west Texas, regarding the right of broadcasting over the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

2196. By Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts General Court, memorializing Congress in favor of proper consideration for granite in Federal construction projects; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

2197. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the City Fire Fighters Association of Washington, D.C., regarding the filling of any future vacancies arising in the District of Columbia fire department; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Carey	Gibson	McCarran
Ashurst	Clark	Goldsborough	McGill
Austin	Connally	Gore	McKellar
Bachman	Coolidge	Hale	McNary
Bailey	Copeland	Harrison	Murphy
Bankhead	Costigan	Hatch	Neely
Barbour	Couzens	Hayden	Norris
Barkley	Cutting	Hebert	Nye
Black	Davis	Johnson	O'Mahoney
Bone	Dickinson	Kean	Overton
Borah	Dieterich	Keyes	Patterson
Brown	Dill	King	Pittman
Bulkley	Duffy	La Follette	Pope
Bulow	Erickson	Lewis	Reed
Byrd	Fess	Logan	Robinson, Ark.
Byrnes	Fletcher	Lonergan	Robinson, Ind.
Capper	Frazier	Long	Russell
Caraway	George	McAdoo	Schall

Sheppard	Thomas, Okla.	Tydings	Wheeler
Shipstead	Thomas, Utah	Vandenberg	White
Smith	Thompson	Van Nuys
Steiwer	Townsend	Wagner
Stephens	Trammell	Walsh

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate by illness, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 257. An act to authorize full settlement for professional services rendered to an officer of the United States Army;

H.R. 276. An act to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the Congressional Medal of Honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.;

H.R. 311. An act for the relief of Martin Henry Waterman, deceased;

H.R. 363. An act for the relief of James Moffitt;

H.R. 371. An act for the relief of Peter Guilday;

H.R. 408. An act for the relief of William J. Nowinski;

H.R. 507. An act for the relief of John Thomas Simpkin;

H.R. 541. An act for the relief of John P. Leonard;

H.R. 588. An act for the relief of Charles C. Schilling;

H.R. 669. An act for the relief of Thomas T. Gessler;

H.R. 890. An act for the relief of Henry M. Burns;

H.R. 909. An act for the relief of Elbert L. Grove;

H.R. 1015. An act for the relief of Frank D. Whitfield;

H.R. 1403. An act for the relief of David I. Brown;

H.R. 1404. An act for the relief of John C. McCann;

H.R. 1413. An act for the relief of Leonard L. Dilger;

H.R. 1859. An act for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry;

H.R. 2021. An act to place Jesse C. Harmon on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;

H.R. 2032. An act for the relief of Richard A. Chavis;

H.R. 2040. An act for the relief of P. Jean des Garennes;

H.R. 2041. An act for the relief of Irwin D. Coyle;

H.R. 2074. An act for the relief of Harvey Collins;

H.R. 2176. An act for the relief of Victor Oscar Gokey;

H.R. 2287. An act for the relief of Warren Burke;

H.R. 2439. An act for the relief of William G. Burress, deceased;

H.R. 2509. An act for the relief of John Newman;

H.R. 2535. An act for the relief of Burton Bowen;

H.R. 2536. An act for the relief of Raymond C. Bogart;

H.R. 2670. An act for the relief of James Wallace;

H.R. 2743. An act for the relief of William M. Stoddard;

H.R. 3032. An act for the relief of Paul Jelna;

H.R. 3050. An act for the relief of William H. Stroud;

H.R. 3054. An act for the relief of Christopher Cott;

H.R. 3072. An act for the relief of Seth B. Simmons;

H.R. 3167. An act for the relief of Sue Hall Erwin;

H.R. 3423. An act for the relief of Benjamin Wright, deceased;

H.R. 3492. An act for the relief of Harry C. Anderson;

H.R. 3542. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to dedicate to the city of Philadelphia, for street purposes, a tract of land situate in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania;

H.R. 3553. An act for the relief of Harvey O. Willis;

H.R. 3985. An act for the relief of Charles T. Moll;

H.R. 3997. An act for the relief of Erney S. Blazer;

H.R. 4079. An act to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy;

H.R. 4266. An act for the relief of David Schwartz;

H.R. 4389. An act for the relief of Sylvester T. Moriarty;

H.R. 4423. An act for the relief of Wilbur Rogers;

H.R. 4438. An act for the relief of Tony P. De Young, alias Anthony Peter De Young;

H.R. 4962. An act for the relief of Joseph B. Lynch;

H.R. 5018. An act to correct the naval records of former members of the crews of the revenue cutters Algonquin and Onondaga;

H.R. 5201. An act for the relief of Luke Francis Brennan; and

H.R. 5218. An act for the relief of Felix Maupin.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 248. An act for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett;

S. 313. An act to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming;

S. 381. An act for the relief of Samson Davis; and

S. 727. An act for the relief of Francis N. Dominick.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS—WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN, JR., ET AL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to its order of February 5, 1934, the Senate will now proceed in the matter of the citations to show cause issued against William P. MacCracken, Jr., and others.

The Special Committee to Investigate Air and Ocean Mail Contracts, consisting of Mr. BLACK (chairman), Mr. KING, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. WHITE, were seated in the area in front and to the left of the Vice President's desk.

Seats were provided in the area in front and to the right of the Vice President's desk for respondents and their counsel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will submit his report.

The Sergeant at Arms (Chesley W. Jurney) submitted the following report:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

I beg to report that, pursuant to the instructions contained in the order issued on February 5, 1934, by the President of the Senate to the Sergeant at Arms, I made service of the citation therein contained on William P. MacCracken, Jr., L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, and Harris M. Hanshue on said day, and said persons are now present in response to such citation, with the exception of William P. MacCracken, Jr., who has addressed a communication to the Senate of the United States, which is now on the desk of the Vice President.

CHESLEY W. JURNEY,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the Senate receive the communication from William P. MacCracken, Jr.? Without objection, the clerk will read the communication.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., February 9, 1934.

To the Senate of the United States:

On February 6, 1934, I received from the Sergeant at Arms of your honorable body a citation to appear before the bar of the Senate on this 9th day of February 1934 to show cause why I should not be punished for contempt of the Senate on account of the alleged destruction and removal of certain papers from my files after a subpena had been served upon me, "as shown by the report of the Special Senate Committee Investigating Ocean and Air Mail Contracts."

I have the greatest respect for the Senate of the United States and would not knowingly or intentionally commit any act in contempt of its constitutional rights and powers. I am constrained, however, to deny the constitutional right of your honorable body to compel the attendance before its bar of a private citizen of the United States to there show cause why he should not be punished for an alleged past and completed act.

The Supreme Court of the United States has distinctly held that while each House of the Congress has implied power to deal directly with contempt so far as is necessary to preserve and exercise the legislative authority expressly granted, this being a power of self-preservation, a means and not an end, the power does not extend to infliction of punishment as such. It is, the highest judicial tribunal of our Nation has held, a power to prevent acts which in and of themselves inherently prevent or obstruct the discharge of legislative duty and to compel the doing of those things which are essential to the performance of the legislative functions. That Court has clearly announced the constitutional principle that punishment for completed acts is exclusively a judicial function and not a legislative one.

To appear at the bar of the Senate in response to the above-mentioned citation would be to give assent to the exercise by your honorable body of powers which do not constitutionally belong to it and to voluntarily aid in permitting it to violate rights guaranteed to me as a citizen of the United States under the Constitution of my country. This I respectfully decline to do.

On January 31, 1934, the Senate Committee on Ocean and Air Mail Contracts, by its subpena, commanded me to appear before it "instanter" and to "bring all books of account, bank pass books, canceled checks, check stubs, deposit slips, papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts."

Compliant to that subpena I appeared before your committee on the date of its issue, and on that date I produced and made available, to said committee to the best of my ability, knowledge, information, and belief, all papers in my possession in any way relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts, except those which under the law, as I understood it and as I was advised respecting it by counsel whom I had consulted, I was not lawfully at liberty to produce, because of the privilege which attached to them as communications between attorney and clients.

I made known to your committee the privilege of my clients in good faith, and I repeat, after having sought advice of counsel who at the time had no connection with or interest in the clients of mine whose papers were concerned.

I made known to your committee the name of every client of mine who had air mail contracts, and the fact that I had no clients who, known to me, had ocean mail contracts. At the committee's request, immediately following my appearance before it, I communicated with all of my clients who were concerned, by telegraph, informed them of the subpena, told them that the committee had requested me to inquire whether they waived their privilege and authorized me to make the documents available to the committee, and asked for telegraphic advice of their decision. The telegrams thus sent to my clients were, before they were sent, submitted to your committee's chairman and by him approved. A true copy of said telegrams appears in the record of the proceedings before your committee on February 2, 1934.

On February 1, 1934, I again communicated by telegraph to such of my clients as had not promptly responded to my first telegram, and urged them to expedite their decision and their advice to me with respect to their waiving the privilege referred to. A copy of this second telegram also appears in the record of your committee's proceedings of the 2d instant.

I recognize the power and right of your committee to issue the above-mentioned subpena and to compel my attendance before the committee as a witness, and to compel the production of relevant and material documents, to the extent that I could lawfully produce them without my clients' consent.

Late in the afternoon of February 2, 1934, the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate took me into custody, compliant to the command of an order or warrant issued by the President of the Senate directed to its Sergeant at Arms, pursuant to Senate Resolution 169 of this session. When said warrant was served the Senate had adjourned to reconvene on Monday, February 5, at noon, and my appearance at that time under said warrant was arranged for.

Immediately prior to the service of that warrant I had received from all of my above-mentioned clients waivers of their privilege and consent to the production by me of all papers in my possession relating to their air mail contracts. Had those waivers and consents not been communicated to me, I would not have been lawfully able to comply with the commands of the aforesaid warrant and would have sought release from arrest thereunder by judicial process. The privilege having been waived and no lawful reason being any longer in existence to require my declining to produce any document called for in the aforesaid subpena and warrant, I produced all of the same, to the best of my ability, knowledge, and belief, under the subpena's command, and they were taken into the custody of your Sergeant at Arms under the pretended authority of the aforesaid warrant.

The Senate's warrant of February 2, 1934, quoting Resolution 169, adopted that date, set forth that "the appearance and testimony and correspondence, records, files, and books" called for by the committee's subpena "are material and necessary in order that the committee may properly execute the functions imposed upon it, and obtain information necessary as a basis for such legislation as the Senate may deem necessary." And the command of the warrant was that I be brought before the bar of the Senate together with "the correspondence, memorandums, books, files, and records referred to, and then and there to answer such questions pertinent to the matter under inquiry with reference to facts regarding correspondence, memorandums, books, and files as the Senate may propound."

The privilege above referred to having been waived by those who alone had the power to waive it, I recognized that the legislative purpose declared by and the inquiries sought to be had as set forth in the above-quoted portions of the Senate's warrant were within the constitutional power of your honorable body, and I was ready to appear and to submit to whatever examination the Senate deemed appropriate in the premises.

I do not deny, but freely concede, the right and power of the Senate, or its committees thereunto authorized, to compel the attendance of witnesses, the giving of pertinent testimony, and the production of material documents. Likewise, and as freely, I concede the Senate's power to commit a recalcitrant witness to custody until, but no longer than, he agrees to, and does, testify or produce documents as lawfully required.

With the assistance of counsel I had prepared, and was ready to deliver to the Senate at its bar on the 5th instant, the following response:

WASHINGTON, D.C., February 5, 1934.

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN, JR., TO THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES IN RESPONSE TO WARRANT OF FEBRUARY 2, 1934

Mr. PRESIDENT: As stated in the report of your committee appointed under Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, second session, there was served on me January 31, 1934, subpena, copy of which is attached to the committee's report, marked "Exhibit A", which copy is printed on page 1852 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, proceedings of February 2, 1934.

In response to that subpena I appeared as a witness before the Senate Committee on Ocean Mail and Air Mail Contracts and offered to produce for the examination and use of that committee all documents in my possession relating to ocean and air mail contracts which, under the law, as I understand it, I was then at liberty to produce.

I am an attorney at law; as such I was retained by several corporations having contracts with the United States for the carriage of mail by airplanes. Among the papers relating to air mail contracts in my possession were communications from my clients to me. I understand the law to be that an attorney cannot produce or disclose any communication relating to the matter in connection with which he is employed made to him by a client. I understand further that this is not a privilege of the attorney, but a restriction upon him; that the privilege belongs exclusively to the client. I respectfully so informed the committee. At the committee's request, I communicated with all of my clients concerned by telegraph, informed them of the subpena, told them the committee had requested me to inquire whether they waived their privilege and authorized me to make the documents available to the committee, and asked for telegraphic advice of their decision. The telegrams thus sent to my clients were, before they were sent, submitted to your committee's chairman and by him approved.

My files were not subpenaed. Nor were my office files. Nor was any subpena issued for all of the papers in, or the entire contents of, my files. I have no such thing in my office as an air mail or ocean mail contract file. Folders in my firm's files which pertain to the business of clients who have or have had air mail contracts frequently contain papers in no way relating to the subject of such contracts. Before replying to my request for instructions regarding the production of papers relating to air mail contracts, which the committee's subpena called for, three of my clients requested an opportunity to examine the files containing such papers.

One of these requests did not come to me and I had no knowledge of it until after it had been made and acted upon by my partner. As to each of these requests the facts are as follows:

1. One made by Col. L. H. Brittin, of the Northwest Airways, Inc., did not come to me, nor did I have any knowledge of it until after it had been made and acted upon. Colonel Brittin had used my firm's office last summer for his own purposes and had, while there, I am informed, dictated several personal letters, which, I am further informed, had no relation to air mail and ocean mail contracts. I have no personal knowledge respecting such papers and therefore speak of them on information. Before answering the above referred to request Colonel Brittin requested my partner to permit him to look at the files, and, I am told, took therefrom his personal papers, which were in no way affected by or subject to the Senate committee's subpena.

2. Mr. Harris M. Hanshue, president of the Western Air Express, was sent one of the telegraphic requests to which I have referred. Before giving his consent to the production of papers relating to air mail contracts he informed me, by telephone, that he intended to send his secretary to my office to look over the papers in our files and to obtain therefrom some purely personal papers of his. Subsequent to that telephone message Mr. Gilbert Givvin, Mr. Hanshue's secretary, telephoned me that he was coming to my office pursuant to Mr. Hanshue's instructions. He came and I saw him personally. I produced for him the files and he took therefrom certain papers. At a hearing before your committee on the 2d instant I informed the committee that I would use my best efforts to have those papers returned, and they have since, I am informed, all been produced by Mr. Givvin and delivered to your committee. Through inadvertence, and without my knowledge, I have been informed, since the 2d instant, some papers the contents of which do relate to air mail contracts were included among the papers taken by Mr. Givvin as personal papers of Mr. Hanshue. These and, I am informed and believe, all papers which Mr. Givvin took from my office are, I repeat, now in the possession of your committee. Immediately after my appearance before the committee on the 2d I exerted, as I promised the committee I would do, my best efforts to have those papers returned.

3. Mr. Francis Scheetz, general counsel of the Ludington Air Lines, Inc., one of the companies to whom I sent the above referred to telegram, informed me that he felt that his duty to his client required that he should inspect the papers relating to his client before giving his advice as to whether the company should or should not waive its privilege in connection with those papers. Mr. Scheetz came to my office for that purpose on the 2d instant. He did not, however, inspect any of the papers in my office and his company has consented to their production.

Prior to the presentation to the Senate of the committee's report on February 2 I had received waiver of their privilege from 5 of 9 clients concerned; had communicated that fact to the committee; had produced all documents comprehended within the description of the committee's subpena, under that subpena, which concerned the clients who had waived their privilege and consented to such production; and had communicated with the four clients who had not answered my earlier telegrams urging them to expedite their decision and instructions to me.

At about the time that this honorable body ordered the issuance of its warrant I had received instructions from the four clients who up to the time of my last appearance before the committee on February 2 had not given me instructions, to the effect that they also waived any privilege pertaining to documents in my possession and consenting to my producing the same under the committee's subpena. I received the last of these instructions shortly prior to the service by your Sergeant at Arms of the warrant. As my clients informed me of their decision in the premises I promptly communicated the same to the chairman of your committee and to investigators employed by it.

There have now been produced, compliant to the command of the committee's subpena and the Senate's warrant, to the best of my ability, knowledge, and belief, all documents and records in my possession relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts.

I have twice appeared, compliant to the demand of your committee's subpena, before the committee, and I have never refused to answer any question propounded to me by any member thereof.

I have the greatest respect for the Senate of the United States and have at no time had any desire to disobey its processes or to appear to be in contempt of its authority.

There having been produced the documents which the committee's subpena and the Senate's warrant commanded the production of, and I having answered all questions propounded to me, and being ready to answer all material and pertinent questions which may be propounded by this honorable body or its committee, I respectfully ask to be discharged from custody of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

(Signed) WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, JR.

Although the Sergeant at Arms reported that I was in his custody, I was neither required nor permitted to appear before the bar of the Senate on the 5th instant, but after proceedings were had in the Senate on a report submitted by the special committee, I was, by vote of the Senate, ordered to be released from custody, and was thereupon forthwith released.

Your special committee had in its possession every document of which I then had any knowledge covered by its subpena. I have at no time refused to answer any question propounded to me by the committee. As fast as I received waivers and consents to the production of privileged communications I advised the chairman of your committee thereof and made available, under the subpena, all documents which it called for.

Since the 5th instant, some few papers relating to air mail contracts of a former client, dating back to matters occurring about 7 years ago, have been found and produced for the committee under the subpena.

Not having been discharged from my obligation to again appear as a witness under the committee's subpena, but having, as I understand, been only temporarily excused from attendance thereunder, I stand ready at any and all times required to appear and testify fully in respect of any matters pertinent and material to the subject of the committee's inquiry.

Being advised and convinced that the Senate's citation, the proposed trial of myself at its bar, and the assertion of power by it to punish me for an alleged consummated offense, are each and all beyond its constitutional powers, and are, on the one hand, an invasion of the functions delegated by the Constitution exclusively to the judicial power, and on the other, a plain violation of my constitutional rights, I am, with great regret, forced to deny the now asserted right of your honorable body in the premises and to seek protection under the Constitution in the courts.

Yours very respectfully,

WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, JR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will be printed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk a motion, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I move that an order for the immediate arrest of William P. MacCracken, Jr., be ordered by the United States Senate, directing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to take into custody immediately the body of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and bring him forthwith before the Senate to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be punished for contempt of the Senate, for the matters and things as shown by the reports of the Special Senate Committee on Ocean and Air Mail Contracts, and as directed in the citation previously served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the motion is now up for consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the able Senator from Alabama to state upon what specific grounds he asks for the arrest of Mr. MacCracken at this time.

Mr. BLACK. Upon the ground that he has been cited to appear, and has declined to appear; and I know of no other way to carry out the order of the Senate to determine whether or not he should be punished for contempt while he is not present.

I may state to the Senator that I do not believe it is indispensable that he should be present; but our committee is of the opinion that he should be brought before the Senate in order that he may show cause, if any he has, why he should not be punished for contempt. Upon the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho when the matter first came up, instead of ordering the arrest of the respondents, they were simply cited to appear. Now all have appeared except Mr. MacCracken, and I know of no way to obtain his presence except by an arrest. It is for that reason that I make the motion.

Mr. BORAH. The motion is for the purpose of bringing Mr. MacCracken before the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. To show cause why he should not be punished for contempt.

Mr. BORAH. The difficulty I have about the matter myself is that if he is going to be punished for contempt there must be some ground on which the contempt rests.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. What is that ground?

Mr. BLACK. The grounds are, as reported to the Senate in the two separate communications or reports from the Senate committee, that after a subpena had been served upon Mr. MacCracken to bring his files relating to ocean and air mail correspondence, and while the subpena was in full force and effect, Mr. MacCracken not only declined to bring such papers but permitted them to be removed and destroyed. It is my own opinion that after a subpena has been served to bring papers, if the papers are relevant—and I do not understand that any question is raised as to their relevancy—there could be no act which would show a more contemptuous disregard for the orders of this body than to permit the papers to be removed and destroyed.

That is the basis of the proceeding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the entering of the order? If not, the order will be entered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I presume the Senator from Alabama and other Senators in charge of this matter desire to suspend proceedings until a return has been made on the new order by the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Visitors will kindly retire, if they desire to do so. The Sergeant at Arms will ask visitors, if they desire to retire, to do so quietly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. There is great disorder in the galleries. It is impossible to hear what is transpiring in the Senate. I respectfully request that the Chair inform the occupants of the galleries that they cannot continue these demonstrations without interfering greatly with the proceedings, and instruct those at the doors of the galleries to inform those who are visiting in the galleries that if they will not maintain order they must be excluded from the galleries.

These proceedings are serious. They are important. We are glad to have the people in the galleries, but they should respect the rights we have in the Senate by such orderly conduct as they would manifest in their own homes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will respectfully request visitors in the galleries to refrain from audible conversation. Just a little conversation in the galleries, even in a whisper, interferes greatly with the proceedings on the floor of the Senate. The Chair also asks the Senate to be in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution urging the Civil Works Administration to make lime crushing for agricultural purposes an eligible project under the Civil Works Administration program

Whereas the application of crushed lime to soil for the proper treatment thereof is an important and necessary function in agriculture; and

Whereas the cost of crushed lime is largely made up of the labor cost in crushing this material, such cost at the present time being a burden to the farmers; and

Whereas under the present rules of the Civil Works Administration the crushing of lime for agricultural purposes is not an eligible type of project thereunder; and

Whereas work in lime crushing could be done during inclement weather of the present winter at times when other projects will necessarily be interrupted, the localities to furnish crushers and other equipment and to be reimbursed for the cost thereof by a nominal charge to farmers of not to exceed 25 cents per ton; and

Whereas thousands of acres of bluegrass pasture have been destroyed by the white grub, which has become a serious problem in Wisconsin and especially in the southwestern section thereof; and

Whereas alfalfa is one of the most effective repellents of the white grub pest, and crushed lime is essential to the successful growing of alfalfa: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That it is the sense of this legislature that lime crushing for agricultural purposes, subject to conditions such as specified herein, should be made an eligible type of project under the Civil Works Administration, and we respectfully urge the national administration to amend the regulations of the Civil Works Administration so as to include lime crushing as an eligible type of project thereunder; or, if statutory enactment is required therefor, we earnestly request the enactment by the Congress of such legislation as may be necessary to accomplish the desired result; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress, to each Wisconsin Member thereof, and to the Federal Administrator of the Civil Works Administration, Harry L. Hopkins, and the State administrator, Robert C. Johnson.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to substantially increase the estates tax and gift tax and allot a definite part of the proceeds thereof to an old-age pension fund and unemployment insurance reserve

Whereas the need for old-age pension because of the inability of many of those who have reached middle age and older to secure profitable employment, or retain their employment, and the need of unemployment insurance reserves because of the ever-increasing use of mass production machinery, which replaces man power, have become serious problems; and

Whereas sources other than general property, which is now overburdened by taxation, must be found to supply the necessary additional revenues to supply funds to carry out these needs; and

Whereas a substantial increase in the tax on large estates and gifts beyond an amount necessary to support, maintain, and educate the recipient and his family in accordance with the standard of living of such recipient or family, would provide a just and equitable method for securing the necessary revenue to provide for an old-age pension fund and unemployment insurance reserves: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to grade the estates tax and gift tax to provide for a substantial increase in the tax on amounts above that are reasonably necessary for the support, maintenance, and education of the recipient's family in accordance with the standard of living of such recipient or family; and to use the revenues produced by such increase to provide for an old-age pension fund and unemployment insurance reserves; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, to each Wisconsin Member thereof, and to Hon. Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, memorializing Congress to promptly enact legislation for the abolishment of the Federal gasoline sales tax and to surrender to the States exclusively the power to tax such sales in the future, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by the Vice President on the 5th instant, p. 1898, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution of the Westchester Realty Protective Association, Mount Vernon, N.Y., favoring the passage of legislation establishing a maximum interest rate of not to exceed 4 percent, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by New York Local Branch of the Catholic Central Verein of America, New York City, protesting against the passage of legislation permitting the dissemination of birth-control information and the transmission through the mails or by express of contraceptive material, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, of Rockaway Beach, N.Y., praying for the inauguration of more public works, rather than war works, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Sanitaria Springs and vicinity, in the State of New York, praying for the adoption of the so-called "stop alien presentation amendment" to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Geneseo (N.Y.) Rotary Club, favoring the passage of legislation placing motor carriers operating on the public highways in interstate and foreign commerce under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Parents League of New York, N.Y., protesting against the practices of block booking and blind selling in the motion-picture industry, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the McKinley Square Section, Bronx Division of the American Jewish Congress, New York City, protesting against the persecution of Jews in Germany, and favoring the adoption of Senate Resolution 154 (submitted by Mr. TYDINGS) opposing alleged discriminations against Jews in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Schenectady County (N.Y.) League of Women Voters, favoring, in the interest of peace, international action of a cooperative nature, such as closer participation in the activities of the League of Nations and World Court rather than unilateral action, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Jamaica (N.Y.) Jewish Center, favoring the adoption of Senate Resolution 154 (submitted by Mr. TYDINGS) opposing alleged discriminations against Jews in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens, being disabled veterans of the World War, of Brooklyn and vicinity, in the State of New York, favoring the adoption of Senate Resolution 154 (submitted by Mr. TYDINGS) opposing alleged discriminations against Jews in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution endorsed by the American League Against War and Fascism, of Yonkers, N.Y., favoring the inauguration of more public works rather than war works, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the solution of all international difficulties by peaceful means, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Schuyler County, N.Y., praying for the making of additional appropriation of $1,016,000,000 for the continuance of the C.W.A. program until May 1, 1934, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of John J. Welch Post, No. 381, the American Legion, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., protesting against discontinuance of the C.W.A. program on February 1, and favoring its continuation until spring, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 74) authorizing necessary funds to conduct investigation regarding rates charged for electrical energy and to prepare report thereon, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 281) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2694) for the relief of Anton C. Miller; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 2695) granting an increase of pension to Blaine E. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 2696) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2697) for the relief of Emma F. Taber; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2698) for the relief of James Corcoran;

A bill (S. 2699) for the relief of Simeon Poresky; and

A bill (S. 2700) for the relief of William H. Rouncevill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON:

A bill (S. 2701) for the relief of Charles Murphy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2702) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Civil Service.

(Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas introduced Senate bill 2703, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 2704) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Frederick L. Caudle; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 83) amending Public Resolution No. 118, Seventy-first Congress, approved February 14, 1931, providing for an annual appropriation to meet the quota of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM MORTGAGE CORPORATION ACT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask leave to introduce a bill and have it referred to the appropriate committee, and also to have printed in the RECORD a statement explaining the provisions of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2703) to amend subsection (b) of section 12 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes", approved January 31, 1934, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory statement submitted by Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas is as follows:

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 12 (B) OF THE FEDERAL FARM MORTGAGE CORPORATION ACT, PUBLIC, NO. 88, SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, APPROVED JANUARY 31, 1934

Under the provisions of section 12 (b) of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act recently passed by the Congress, and approved by the President on January 31, 1934, income from bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation were exempted from surtaxes. Since the passage of the act, it is the opinion of those who have considered the matter that this exemption should be removed, and that the holders of the bonds of the Corporation should not be accorded greater privileges, with respect to tax exemptions, than those enjoyed by the holders of direct obligations of the United States. Accordingly, an amendment to the act has been prepared, with the approval of the Treasury Department, which would eliminate the exemption of the bonds with respect to surtaxes. It should be stated in this connection that no bonds have as yet been issued under the provisions of the act.

The Farm Credit Administration will offer no objection to the adoption of this amendment.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H.R. 257. An act to authorize full settlement for professional services rendered to an officer of the United States Army;

H.R. 311. An act for the relief of Martin Henry Waterman, deceased;

H.R. 363. An act for the relief of James Moffitt;

H.R. 371. An act for the relief of Peter Guilday;

H.R. 541. An act for the relief of John P. Leonard;

H.R. 588. An act for the relief of Charles C. Schilling;

H.R. 890. An act for the relief of Henry M. Burns;

H.R. 1015. An act for the relief of Frank D. Whitfield;

H.R. 1403. An act for the relief of David I. Brown;

H.R. 1413. An act for the relief of Leonard L. Dilger;

H.R. 1859. An act for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry;

H.R. 2032. An act for the relief of Richard A. Chavis;

H.R. 2439. An act for the relief of William G. Burress, deceased;

H.R. 2509. An act for the relief of John Newman;

H.R. 2670. An act for the relief of James Wallace;

H.R. 2743. An act for the relief of William M. Stoddard;

H.R. 3032. An act for the relief of Paul Jelna;

H.R. 3050. An act for the relief of William H. Stroud;

H.R. 3054. An act for the relief of Christopher Cott;

H.R. 3072. An act for the relief of Seth B. Simmons;

H.R. 3492. An act for the relief of Harry C. Anderson;

H.R. 3553. An act for the relief of Harvey O. Willis;

H.R. 3985. An act for the relief of Charles T. Moll;

H.R. 3997. An act for the relief of Erney S. Blazer; and

H.R. 4423. An act for the relief of Wilbur Rogers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H.R. 276. An act to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the Congressional Medal of Honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.;

H.R. 507. An act for the relief of John Thomas Simpkin;

H.R. 669. An act for the relief of Thomas T. Gessler;

H.R. 1404. An act for the relief of John C. McCann;

H.R. 2021. An act to place Jesse C. Harmon on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;

H.R. 408. An act for the relief of William J. Nowinski;

H.R. 909. An act for the relief of Elbert L. Grove;

H.R. 2040. An act for the relief of P. Jean des Garennes;

H.R. 2041. An act for the relief of Irwin D. Coyle;

H.R. 2074. An act for the relief of Harvey Collins;

H.R. 2176. An act for the relief of Victor Oscar Gokey;

H.R. 2287. An act for the relief of Warren Burke;

H.R. 2535. An act for the relief of Burton Bowen;

H.R. 2536. An act for the relief of Raymond C. Bogart;

H.R. 3167. An act for the relief of Sue Hall Erwin;

H.R. 3423. An act for the relief of Benjamin Wright, deceased;

H.R. 3542. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to dedicate to the city of Philadelphia, for street purposes, a tract of land situate in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania;

H.R. 4079. An act to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy;

H.R. 4266. An act for the relief of David Schwartz;

H.R. 4389. An act for the relief of Sylvester T. Moriarty;

H.R. 4438. An act for the relief of Tony P. De Young, alias Anthony Peter De Young;

H.R. 4962. An act for the relief of Joseph B. Lynch;

H.R. 5018. An act to correct the naval records of former members of the crews of the revenue cutters Algonquin and Onondaga;

H.R. 5201. An act for the relief of Luke Francis Brennan; and

H.R. 5218. An act for the relief of Felix Maupin; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL CONSTRUCTION BILL

Mr. BONE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 6604), an act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY—RESERVATIONS

As in executive session,

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed reservations to the St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty, and give notice that I will offer them at the proper time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The reservations submitted by Mr. DIETERICH intended to be proposed by him to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

RESERVATION

The United States ratifies this treaty with the distinct understanding that the United States Government, by act of Congress or authority delegated by act of Congress, shall retain the right to specify the amount of water to be diverted through the Chicago Drainage Canal to supply the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway: Provided, That said amount shall not exceed 10,000 cubic feet per second, except in emergency in which case the withdrawal is to be governed by section 2, article 8, of said treaty.

RESERVATION

The United States ratifies this treaty with the distinct understanding that an investigation be made by the Joint Board of Engineers of the water supply of the Great Lakes above Niagara Falls and of the water supply of the St. Lawrence River above the International Rapids for the purpose of estimating the quantity of water supplying the Great Lakes from watersheds draining into said Lakes from the Dominion of Canada and the quantity of water draining into said Lakes from the watersheds within the United States, and that each of the high contracting parties shall have the right to the use of the waters for power purposes at Niagara Falls and at the International Rapids in proportion to the amount of water supplying said Niagara River and said International Rapids from the said Dominion of Canada and the United States of America. In apportioning the said waters for power purposes at Niagara Falls the United States shall be charged with the diversion through the drainage canal at Chicago supplying the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway and the Erie Canal in the State of New York, and the Dominion of Canada shall be charged with the waters utilized for power purposes in the Welland Canal and whatever diversion might be made in the future from Georgian Bay.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial entitled "Too Many Churchills", appearing in the Washington Post for February 9, published in the RECORD.

In this editorial attention is called to the recent demand of Lord Churchill that England renounce the Treaty of London, so that she shall be free to build any type of ship she wants. This sounds very much like the "scrap-of-paper" talk which ushered in the World War. However, there is some hope for peace found in the present situation. Today whose who favor a navy-building race, such as is hinted at by Lord Churchill, speak before they act, whereas at the beginning of the World War the combatants acted before they spoke. Perhaps it is true to some extent that a barking dog will not bite. Those who deal out death with their blows do not ordinarily forewarn their opponents before they strike below the belt or cut in to stop the heart.

I believe we should all clearly realize that there is a vast difference between building toward treaty strength, as we now propose to do, and a wild spree of navy building without regard for our international commitments. Under these circumstances let us hold steady to our recognized agreements.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOO MANY CHURCHILLS

Winston Churchill, who was First Lord of the British Admiralty at the outbreak of the World War, said last November: "I have been described as a war monger. It is a lie. I labored for peace before the war, and if the naval holiday I advised had been accepted by Germany, the course of history might have been different."

Despite that tribute to the doctrine of limitation, Mr. Churchill demanded Wednesday in the House of Commons that England denounce the Treaty of London and leave herself free to build any type of ship she wants. Mr. Churchill explained his position by asserting that the failure to secure an arms agreement from Berlin had marked the break-down of the last attempt to limit arms by international agreement.

The present attitude of the former Chancellor of the Exchequer is representative of a great body of sentiment throughout the world. There are Churchills in every country demanding the abandonment of all limitations, even though most are willing to admit that the absence of any form of limitation made initiation of war in 1914 easier.

Against efforts to restore the old doctrine of unrestricted competition, far-sighted minds in every country will rise in opposition. It is one thing to feel that armament up to treaty limitations is desirable and quite another to maintain that all limitations should be removed. The world is now too much of a tinder box to encourage such additional sources of friction as new naval races would provide. The principle of limitation by international agreement, even though only partially successful, is the strongest bulwark yet set up against repetition of the disaster of 1914.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. AYRES of Kansas, Mr. TABER, and Mr. THURSTON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, two orders have been issued with regard to the printing of the record in the matter of the St. Lawrence Treaty. I ask that the order of February 2, to print 100 copies, without illustrations, for the use of the Senate, be rescinded, which would leave the last order in effect.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the able Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee tell us what particular order he refers to when he speaks of "the last order"?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada will be glad to answer the question.

In an effort to furnish the Senate with this record as soon as possible, and being informed that it would take considerable time to print the maps accompanying the report, the first order was to print it without the maps. The next order, made on February 6, was to print 100 copies with the maps.

Mr. LEWIS. And that has been done?

Mr. PITTMAN. The last order has been complied with, and for the benefit of the Printing Office we do not want the other order outstanding; that is all.

Mr. LEWIS. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the first order referred to will be vacated.

CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION APPROPRIATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the conferees appointed on behalf of the Senate on yesterday on the Civil Works appropriation bill (H.R. 7527), included the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. He is temporarily absent and asks that another Senator be put in his place. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the next on the committee, may be substituted for the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the unfinished business of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the question presented now is upon an amendment of the Senator from Vermont which, in my opinion as the author of the bill, will render the bill nugatory; and I trust it will be defeated.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to make a very brief statement with regard to the amendment. For that purpose may the amendment be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the period and the quotation marks and to insert after the word "State" the following:

which remedy includes the right of such public utility to a stay of such order pending final adjudication as to the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I call attention to the part of the bill which the amendment affects, as follows:

That the first paragraph of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, no district court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of an administrative board or commission of a State, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with any such order, where jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States, where such order (1) affects rates chargeable by a public utility, (2) does not interfere with interstate commerce, and (3) has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State."

This amendment will clarify the third condition here stated. It has already been commented that the third condition is a breeder of disagreement and confusion, because it leaves to the court before whom this question arises a discretion in every case. It calls for a decision in every case as to whether there then exists an efficient remedy at law or in equity in the courts of such State.

The amendment proposes to remove from this clause the ambiguity in it; to remove from this clause the opportunity for courts in one State to pass upon the question in one way and courts in another State in another way by definitely providing that if an injunction or stay is had in the courts of the State, that will be an adequate remedy within the meaning of the third provision. In other words, the amendment prevents the utility having a choice of two courts, as has been complained of, and, under the terms of the Federal Code, prevents the Federal courts interfering with the retention of jurisdiction by the State courts.

If the amendment should be adopted, the only difference between the bill in its amended form and the bill without the amendment is that protection will be afforded to all parties pending final adjudication as to whether the new rates ordered are confiscatory. Without the amendment the owners of utilities would suffer irreparable loss. The amendment accomplishes everything that the proponents of the bill desire, except that it precludes the possibility of confiscation occurring and becoming effective pending the decision of the question whether the order was in contravention of the Constitution.

With this amendment in the bill, all that is claimed as merit for the bill will be accomplished and much of the harm which we claim the passage of the bill would create will be removed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, before we vote on this rather important piece of legislation, I desire to make a few remarks that may be of some interest. I have listened with a great degree of interest to the arguments by the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. There are no two Senators in this body whom I hold in higher regard. I have attempted to follow the argument which has been advanced, and to my mind it does not satisfy.

Before we change procedure that came into existence with the foundation of the Government itself, I believe we should have substantial facts or substantial evidence upon which we might act, and I have failed to hear it.

Two cases have been mentioned over and over. I believe Senators will find in the record, in the evidence given at the hearings, in the speeches or references that have been made to the subject during the last year, the case from Montana and another case from Kentucky mentioned over and over.

I am going to make a statement, and I want the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to understand what I say. The Senator from Vermont said that the Montana case was an unusual case. I challenge either of the Senators mentioned to produce another case like it in the United States.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said there were many cases like it. There have been thousands of cases in the Federal courts involving the same subject and the same question; and if another case in the United States could be produced where a decision similar to that in either of these two cases was rendered, the two able and distinguished Senators would certainly have brought it to the attention of the Senate. The reason why they cannot produce another case, the reason why they have been unable to find another case, is that the thing pointed out by those who have argued in favor of the bill cannot happen unless some lawyer is very derelict in his duty. To say that a suit may be instituted in the State courts and prosecuted through all of the State courts, and, when it is finished there, the litigant can go back and start in the Federal courts and go through all of the Federal courts, is a statement that at once convinces me that the two distinguished statesmen have grown gray in the service of their country in Congress, but they have forgotten court procedure.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Do not the courts hold that the Federal courts and State courts are different sovereignties, that one can proceed in either of them, and no plea is good one against the other?

Mr. LOGAN. I should say to the Senator from Louisiana that perhaps there is enough law to that effect so we may state that there are such cases. But I say now that there has been no case; and I challenge the Senators, before they ask the Senate to accept their argument about that one case and vote to change procedure, that they should at least bring forth the other cases which they say exist.

I do not say that some lawyer may not at times make mistakes. I do not say that it may be that the State courts had no jurisdiction. I do not say that a case could not be dismissed without prejudice and that one could go to some other court, but I do say that the harping continuously on the Montana case, one case out of a thousand, one case out of ten thousand, one case out of hundreds of thousands since the foundation of the Government, and saying that because there was a miscarriage of justice in one case the courts should be denied jurisdiction in similar cases, is not a sufficient argument to satisfy my mind that we ought to pass the bill.

I desire to make a reference to another case. There have been two cases presented here. The other case is the Kentucky case. I happen to have been the attorney in that case; and if that case is as bad as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska thinks it is, perhaps I am not as good a lawyer as I thought I was, because I won my case. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the statements of the Senator from Nebraska on that question in order to show how far he misunderstands proceedings in court at this time.

The Kentucky case was one, as he very correctly told the Senate, where there was a taxicab company in a small city, not a rich and powerful corporation—oh, no; it was a poor company, so poor that it could not pay the expenses of its attorney or pay him a fee. The money was on the other side. I had to go into the Federal courts in order to get protection for these poor, humble friends of mine. How did I do it? I am going to tell the Senator from Nebraska how it could have been avoided, if he wants to avoid a thing of that kind. That is not a difficult matter.

This little company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Kentucky. The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, which is our highest court, and of which I had the honor to be a member—I was chief justice of that court when I resigned—back in the old oxcart days, far, far back in the past, before there were automobiles, or hard-surfaced roads, or anything of that kind, announced it to be the law that a railroad company had no right to make an exclusive contract with a firm or a company or a man who desired to enter its grounds and solicit passengers to ride with him from the depot up to the hotel or to any other point. The court said that was against public policy.

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, notwithstanding the decision, never had anything upon which it could be based, no reason for the opinion at all, no reason to say that the railroad company could not use, as it pleased, property it had bought and paid for. But later the court, with a good deal of perversity and pertinacity, adhered to its own opinion.

Let me say to my good friend from Nebraska that I was trying to help the public in Kentucky. I was trying to find some relief from an intolerable situation, and the very fact that the Senator from Nebraska says that he would have agreed with the State court only convinces me the more that he has forgotten what is going on in the States. He has been here too long to know what the needs of the country are so far as simple matters are concerned.

In every depot, at every railroad station in Kentucky, let me say to the Senate, when a traveler got off the train he was besieged by a mob of howling dervishes trying to get him to go riding in a taxicab with them, grabbing the handbags or baggage of men and women and running over them, and there was no way to stop such conditions.

When I looked into the law and found there was no chance in the State court, representing my client, as I thought I had the right to do, I said, "We will go somewhere else." So we dissolved the corporation, reincorporated in the State of Tennessee, and then because the lawyers representing the other fellows thought that one could not get away from the State courts, we made an effort to enjoin others from interfering with the rights we had under the contract. The district court said we were right, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit said that we were right, and the Supreme Court of the United States said we were right.

If we had wanted to accomplish the object contended for by the Senators who favor the bill, how could we have done it in that case? It was the simplest thing in the world. For 40 years the legislature had had an opportunity to write an act of one sentence saying that "it shall be unlawful for a railroad company to grant an exclusive privilege to a taxicab company", and then the Federal court would have been compelled to follow the statute as construed by the State court.

There is hardly a question raised here that cannot be settled in that way. We do not have to overturn our courts. We do not have to deny jurisdiction. We do not have to strain the Constitution and probably invade constitutional rights in order to keep out of the Federal courts.

This is the law, as I understand it. The Federal courts will always follow the decisions of the State courts in the construction of statutes and constitutional allegiance in a State, and if the Senators desire to have cases kept out of the Federal courts, the only thing that is necessary is to have the statutes prescribe what they want, and allow the State courts to interpret it.

The reason in the taxicab case for the Federal courts taking jurisdiction was that in matters of general law; that is, where there is no statutory provision, and where there is no constitutional provision, but it is a matter of general law, the Federal courts do not consider themselves bound by any decisions of the State courts.

Let us go just a little farther. Let us see what we would be doing when we passed this bill, if we should pass it. I sometimes have entire sympathy with what is sought to be accomplished by legislation, but realize that we are going about it in the wrong way. There is no attack on the power companies. That is a smoke screen. It is not an attack on the power companies, as was so ably argued by the senior Senator from Nebraska. It could not be. If there has been delay, and if there has been corruption and fraud, it is the courts that are responsible, and not the power companies. If the courts delay justice, if the courts prevent justice, then it follows as a matter of course that the attack is upon the courts, and not upon the litigants in the courts.

Let us see, then, whom we would be attacking if we passed this bill. In the first place, we would attack the district judges throughout the United States. I desire to take this opportunity to say that in my humble judgment we are apt to have in district Federal judges as good citizens, men of as high standing, as high character, and as loyal to their country, as we have in our State courts. Why should that not be true? Do we believe that the Senators of the United States deliberately recommend to the President of the United States for appointment men who will go out to play the tyrant and deny justice to the people? That is what we would say if we passed the bill. We would say that our Federal courts are a harbor, that they are a haven of safety for those who desire to prevent justice. That is what we are asked to say, Senators, when we are asked to vote for this bill.

We are asked to say that the Federal district courts are composed of men who cannot be depended upon, that our judicial system is corrupt. We will go even further than that if we shall pass this bill, let me say, for we shall be saying that Senators of the United States, who recommend those who are to be appointed judges to try cases involving power and other utility companies, including railroad companies, have so far forgotten the rights of the people that they recommend only men who will delay justice and be against the people and favor the utilities.

Not only that, but we have a Judiciary Committee here, made up of rather distinguished Senators, and we have a Senate that is called upon to confirm these appointments. Yet we say to the world that the Senate of the United States confirms men who will not do justice to the citizens of their respective States. It is going a long way when we undertake to condemn not only the judges but the Senators who recommend their appointment, and also the Senate as a body; and we go farther than that, for we say that the President of the United States appoints men and places them in positions where they almost universally deny justice, if it be a question of a public-utility company on one side and a question of the people on the other. I do not believe that we ought to do a thing of that kind; I do not believe we want to do a thing of that kind, because I do not believe that there is a single Member of the Senate who believes, generally speaking, that the judges of the United States district courts are corrupt; and, if they deny justice to those who need it most, it follows, as a matter of course, that they are corrupt.

Now let me invite attention to another consideration. I refer to all this talk about having two forums and compelling people to go into two courts. I do not want to detain the Senate long enough to make any remarks about that, but I wish to say that will not do at all; there is nothing to that contention. Let me make this statement: Oftentimes in our State courts—in fact, usually—I believe the judges are elected. In many of the States the names of the judges appear on the ballot along with the names of other candidates for political offices that are to be filled at the same election. I have seen men elected judges in districts where the chief issue was whether power rates should be reduced, whether telephone rates should be reduced. I know of one State where the question has been a live one for years. A circuit judge is elected along with other officials when the issue is whether utility rates shall be lowered; never is the issue whether those rates shall be increased.

I do not say that the circuit judges in our State courts do not accord justice when they have the opportunity to do so; I believe that our State courts are honest and conscientious; but, as plain thinking men, as citizens of a great Republic, as citizens as well as Senators who desire to uphold the integrity of our courts, are we going to say that men whose terms of office are perhaps limited to 4 or 6 years, and depend upon elections held by the people, because of that fact, are more honest and better qualified than are judges appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States? I do not believe it. I believe that the Federal judge, on the average, is a far better qualified man than is the inferior State court judge; I believe that the Federal judges are as honest, and I believe that they are as fair.

Now, let me challenge some more statements that have been made. It has been said that if we make this change it will expedite the business of trying suits where the people are arranged on one side and the utility companies on the other. I deny it, and no one has brought any information here that should convince any Senator that such a contention is true. A mere assertion is not proof. I say that the wheels of justice in the Federal courts are geared to a much higher speed than are the wheels of justice in the State courts. Senators may examine the record—any of them who are sufficiently interested may get the information—and they will find that such cases as we are talking about are tried more speedily in the Federal courts than they are tried in the State courts. The last opinion I wrote before I came to Washington, and probably the last one I shall ever write, was a decision in a tax case where the State was proceeding to collect money in taxes from a railroad company.

I found that the case was filed in 1918, and, as I recall, I wrote the opinion in 1930 in the State court. With the State primarily interested, it took 11 or 12 years before that case was decided. Even the Montana case, which has become as famous in law as Man-of-War was famous as a race horse, according to the last heard of it, had only been pending for 6 years. I mention this fact to show those who are interested in the question on what little evidence we are asked to overturn the existing order and deny this jurisdiction granted to the district Federal courts in 1879. I state again that we shall get much more expeditious service, we will reach the end of cases in the Federal courts, as conditions are today, quicker than we will reach the end in the State courts.

Does litigation cost a great deal more in the Federal courts? Oh, no; there is no difference in that respect. I am not speaking as one who does not know what he is talking about. I will remind the Senate that I practiced law not only in my State but in other States, and not only in State courts but in the Federal courts, and I know what I am speaking of when I say that the cost in the Federal courts is not any greater than it is in the State courts. We cannot afford to dwell alone upon the things that are bad in any system and, because they keep on coming into our mind, destroy the entire tree because, perchance, it has a dead limb or a dead branch.

There is another consideration which I desire to mention in addition to the question of cost. I think that under our present Federal judiciary system we can find a place to try our cases without going very far. It was quite a problem in the old days, when there were no good roads, and the Federal courts probably met only at one place in a State, but they meet now all over a State; their meeting places are almost as numerous as are those of the State circuit courts. I do not know how it is in the West, but I do know that today in the South and in the Central States the Congress, time after time, has provided the places where Federal courts shall be held. Every town wants a court held there because eventually it will get a Federal building, and since the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. have started, I expect we will have many requests for new Federal buildings, and, perhaps, some of them are being erected. I do not know as to that.

Mr. President, I should like to refer to another matter that has been argued here, and which involves, I think, a plain mistake and the drawing of wrong conclusions. It is said that if we take these cases away from the Federal courts it will relieve the congestion in those courts. We do not need now to relieve any congestion there. Since prohibition has been repealed the Federal courts are not going to have very much to do; but let me remind Senators that the State courts are more burdened with business and are more congested than are the Federal courts; and if we transfer this jurisdiction entirely from the Federal courts to the State courts we are but increasing the burden of the State courts. There is no reason that I can see why we ought to increase the burden on the State courts when, to my certain knowledge, in nearly every State in the Union—I dare say there is hardly an exception—all of the highest courts of the respective States are much further behind in their work than is the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States is more nearly up with its work than is any State court of which I know.

Here is another matter to which I would call attention, and I think it most important. We very well know, notwithstanding what may be said by the eminent Senator from Nebraska or the eminent Senator from California, that if a man has a right to go to a Federal court he is going there and we cannot keep him out of it. He may be delayed for a while, but if he has a good lawyer, if the laws have been construed more favorably to his client in the Federal court than in the State court, and if he has a constitutional right to be protected which he thinks can be better protected in the Federal court than in the State court, he will go to the Federal court.

What happens? It is admitted, as I understand, that there is nothing to prevent the carrying of a case to the Supreme Court of the United States from the State courts. If we deny a lawyer the right to go into the Federal court in the beginning, and he thinks there is a Federal question that must be determined, we will find him coming to the Supreme Court of the United States until the burdens of that Court will be increased so that it will be unable to keep up with its work.

Mr. President, there are, of course, many other reasons why this bill ought not to be enacted. I am trying to talk about the facts, and now I want to call attention to the Constitution. The Senator from Nebraska talks right smart about constitutional lawyers—I mean privately, not in the Senate—and he does not think that lawyers ever agree about the Constitution. I do not believe there can be very much difference among lawyers on the point that we are now discussing. I am willing to concede, as I must concede, that under the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case referred to by the Senator from California the Congress, if that opinion is the law and is to be upheld, has the right to do what it pleases as to the jurisdiction of the Federal district courts. That is what the Court held in the case——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was prompted to ask that very question a while ago—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to hear the conversation, and I hope we may have order, so that we can hear the interruption and the reply.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was just going to ask the Senator a question on the point he is now raising. Unless the jurisdiction of a Federal court is fixed by the Constitution itself, Congress may change or limit that jurisdiction. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; that is correct, certainly. I desire to say, however, that the case of Kline against Burke Construction Co. is a strange case, and it appears to have been written by the Supreme Court when it had overlooked certain constitutional provisions. It is in conflict with other cases on the same subject. It is apparently in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution.

I think there are two kinds of inferior courts. There are what we call legislative courts, such as the Court of Claims, the Tariff Commission and other commissions, and the Court of Customs Appeals. Legislative courts, of course, are limited in their jurisdiction by the act of Congress.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator is not going to exclude our Federal courts from the category of legislative courts?

Mr. LOGAN. I am.

Mr. LONG. He will make a big mistake if he does that, because the Supreme Court of the United States wrote the rule of reason into the antitrust law——

Mr. LOGAN. I am talking about what the law is.

Mr. LONG. They announced the law.

Mr. LOGAN. The Constitution provides it. The Supreme Court has said there are legislative courts that are different from those mentioned in the Constitution. Let me tell the difference. It is very simple. Courts created under the general power of the Congress to enact laws, to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution, are legislative courts. Courts that are created under article III of the Constitution, under the authority of the Constitution itself, which vests a judicial power in the Government, are constitutional courts and they are as distinct from legislative courts as it is possible for one thing to be from another.

There is no difference, so it seems to me—and remember that I have said that the Supreme Court has held differently in the Kline case—in the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts and the Supreme Court of the United States. The judicial power was created by the adoption of the Constitution, and the provision read in this way:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court—

But it did not stop there—

> In one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

So the judicial power found in the Constitution is vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may create, and when it creates any inferior court under article III of the Constitution the judicial power of the United States vests in that court so created, and no power on earth can keep it from vesting.

The judicial power invested in the inferior court is broader than that vested in the Supreme Court of the United States because the Supreme Court has only a limited jurisdiction. The questions over which it has jurisdiction originally are mentioned in the Constitution itself, and because of that fact the inferior courts have a broader jurisdiction than has the Supreme Court.

Let us reason about this subject for just a moment. It is rather simple, it seems to me. The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction over inferior courts. If we say that we can limit the original jurisdiction of the inferior courts, then, of course, we limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, and no Senator here will contend that we can do anything of that kind. If we say that we can take away from a Federal district court the judicial power vested in it by Congress or that we can limit that judicial power, it follows, as a matter of course, that we can take from the Supreme Court of the United States its appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that the constitutional provision is "such inferior courts as may be created by the Congress."

Mr. LOGAN. If that were true, we would have no difficulty. It happens to be an error of statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought I was quoting the Senator's own language.

Mr. LOGAN. The language is "as it may from time to time ordain and establish."

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. But it says "the judicial power shall be vested." It does not say we must so vest the inferior courts.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know. It says such courts as Congress may create. Does or does not the power to create a court include the power to define or to necessarily limit its jurisdiction? Does not creation imply the right to determine upon what the court shall pass? I am asking for information.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator might satisfy himself, but he could not satisfy me with a statement of that kind.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me make myself clear. I am not undertaking to determine the question. I have high regard for the Senator's eminent legal and judicial ability, and I am addressing myself to him more to attract him to a discussion of that question rather than to assert any positive attitude on the part of the Senator from Texas. I want the benefit of the Senator's eminent legal ability.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question in order to understand his viewpoint?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it not true that the jurisdiction of the inferior courts is defined by acts of the Congress and is not defined in the Constitution itself?

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Senator is in error and I think I can convince him if he will listen for a moment. There is such a thing as a judicial power in the United States Government. Nobody denies it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Judicial power and jurisdiction are almost entirely different subjects matter.

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator, of course, recognizes that fact. The Federal district court has only such jurisdiction as is defined by the Judiciary Act and amendments thereto. It is perfectly competent for Congress to modify that act. It has done that perhaps 100 times. It is also competent for Congress to repeal the act. Merely because the Constitution confers judicial power on the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time establish, I cannot understand how it can be contended that having once established a court and defined its jurisdiction Congress can never modify that jurisdiction or repeal it.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not contend that, may I say to the Senator. The Senator from Arkansas is bringing on a new argument, and that is the only basis on which the constitutionality of the measure could be upheld—that is, to asseverate the judicial power and jurisdiction—and upon that I think the Supreme Court might uphold the power to limit jurisdiction. In fact, I only say that the bill is of doubtful validity. I do not say that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the legislative department had not made the distinction as to citizens of other States in defining the jurisdiction of the Federal court, the right of the citizen of another State to sue in the Federal court never would have existed, would it?

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot agree to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator mean to say that under the judicial power jurisdiction, because of diversity of citizenship, was vested in the Federal court?

Mr. LOGAN. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Supreme Court, as the Senator must know, in the case to which he has already referred, held that the right of a litigant to maintain an action in a Federal court on the ground that there is a controversy between citizens of different States is not one derived from the Constitution of the United States unless in a very indirect sense.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I know the Court said that, but I think the whole opinion was written when they were nodding a little bit. [Laughter.] If that opinion is sound law, then we can do what we please—we can abolish the judicial power almost in its entirety.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I accept the Senator's challenge on that point as to a question of law. It is competent for the Congress to abolish every district court in the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator can go farther than that. If we can do that, we can abolish the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly not. I said every Federal district court.

Mr. LOGAN. I say, if we can abolish the Federal district courts, then we can abolish the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no; because the Supreme Court is established by the Constitution, and the Federal district court is established by law, which the Congress may repeal or modify whenever it chooses.

Mr. LOGAN. I take a different view of it. My idea is that Congress has no more right to fail to establish inferior Federal courts than it has to fail to confer power upon the Supreme Court. We must establish those inferior courts. We must establish those inferior courts, because the Constitution has said that the judicial power is vested in them, and there is a part of the judicial power that cannot vest anywhere else except in inferior courts. Therefore, if we are going to carry out the mandate of the Constitution, it is absolutely necessary and just as imperative that the Congress——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator. The provision in the Constitution for the establishment of inferior courts is not self-executing. The Senator must admit that. The Congress, in its discretion, may establish such inferior courts as it chooses or may establish no inferior courts. The mere fact that the Constitution gives the Congress the power to establish inferior courts does not compel the Congress to exercise that power.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the junior Senator from Kentucky yield to his colleague?

Mr. LOGAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it my colleague's contention, while the Constitution, in defining the three branches of the Government—legislative, executive, and judicial—says that the judicial power shall rest in a Supreme Court and such inferior courts as may be established from time to time by the Congress, that the Congress could have refused to establish the Supreme Court by failing to enact any law defining its membership or its qualifications?

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps that is true if we make the distinction between powers. If judicial power is not inherent in the Court and if it requires some legislative enactment to cause it to move, to make it alive and bring it into existence, then it is true we could absolutely leave the Supreme Court without any jurisdiction to determine anything.

Mr. BARKLEY. If Congress in establishing these courts and fixing their jurisdiction should say that, notwithstanding diversity of citizenship, no cause of action involving less than $3,000 should be removed from a State court into a Federal court, could we likewise limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts with reference to other matters not involving amounts of money?

Mr. LOGAN. That point is very well made. The fact that we have—and it has been accepted—limited the amount involved or stated the amount to be involved before there could be a transfer has indicated rather that we may limit the jurisdiction of the Federal district courts.

Here is the conclusion we reach if we follow the argument of the Senator from Arkansas—that if we have judicial power, we can have courts in which that judicial power is vested, but we can take away from those courts all jurisdiction and they become stagnant and able to do nothing. That is what is led to by the argument of those who favor limiting jurisdiction on constitutional questions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not arguing the merits of the bill but merely the legal question raised by my colleague. We have to keep in mind as a matter of law that the Constitution was seeking to divide the Government into three branches—legislative, executive, and judicial. It said the executive should consist of the President, and so on; that the legislative should consist of two branches, a House of Representatives and a Senate; and that the judicial should consist of the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as might be established. There was no attempt to say in the Constitution that all judicial questions that might arise among citizens of the country should be taken before either the Supreme Court or the inferior courts, but that such judicial power as the United States exercised as a Federal Government should be exercised by a Supreme Court and inferior courts.

Mr. LOGAN. I will read to the Senator what the Constitution does say about it, and I think he will see that he is in error.

In addition to the particular clause to which the Senator refers, the Constitution provides:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. * * *

Reading the next section:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority—to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

What does that mean? That the judicial power is vested in these courts when they are created. If we have a court, it has all of that power vested in it. If it be said that we can take away from the courts their jurisdiction, of course, we can take all of that power away from them and leave them without anything; and if Congress undertakes to say that the Constitution does not mean anything when it says that a suit between my friend from Texas here and myself may be tried in the Federal court, if Congress can say it shall not be tried there, it absolutely destroys this provision which says that the judicial power shall extend to these very cases.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. In connection with what is suggested by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] I desire to ask the junior Senator from Kentucky a question.

Conceding his contention as to the second section of article III, which reads—

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States—

And so forth.

Does that necessarily imply that the Congress has no power to determine the difference between the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, we will say, and the inferior courts?

In other words, suppose we limit the jurisdiction of a district court. If a citizen had a Federal question in his case, could he not still appeal from the State court to the Supreme Court, and would he not have a right to have that question finally determined there, and would not that meet the point which the Senator raises?

Further, let me ask the Senator this question:

Section 1 of article III says:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Is it not true that all that means is that whatever judicial power the United States exercises shall be vested in the Supreme Court and in such courts as Congress may ordain and establish? In other words, under that section, suppose Congress never had ordained a single district court, the Supreme Court being a constitutional court, could not citizens bring their controversies from the State courts finally to the Supreme Court, if the Supreme Court could be shown that any of their rights under the second section of article III were infringed?

Mr. LOGAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the judicial power of the United States is vested in Federal courts and not in State courts. Therefore, a State court, in passing on the questions mentioned here in the Constitution, would not be doing so under any authority that may have been granted by Congress, but under the authority granted by the States. So we in effect force the Supreme Court to take jurisdiction of a matter that has never been tried in one of the inferior courts which Congress was to establish. We are making a nisi prius court out of the Supreme Court of the United States, and I mentioned that a while ago as one reason why the bill should not be passed.

Let me say in conclusion, however, that I do not base my opposition to the bill solely upon the constitutional question. I am against the bill because I think it shows a disposition toward our courts that is unfair. I do not believe the bill will accomplish any of the purposes that are intended. I do not think there have been the abuses which have been pointed out, although there have been some abuses. I readily understand that. We never can make honest men of judges, however, if they happen to be dishonest, by passing some law limiting their jurisdiction.

This bill, if it should be enacted, will not bring any relief to anyone in any manner whatever. I do not think we are justified in going back and changing the procedure of courts that came into being with the Republic itself just in order to experiment, or because some case in Montana went wrong, or some case in Kentucky went wrong. I do not think we ought to place a stigma upon our courts and upon our other public officials by passing a bill which will grant no relief.

If the bill granted any relief, if it gave the people any rights, if it helped anybody, I can very readily see why we might well pass it; but all that has been said by the distinguished Senators who have argued for the enactment of the bill, everything that they have urged, has been without any facts to support it other than a case from Montana which was held up as a horrible example, and a case from Kentucky which was likewise held up as a horrible example. As to the assertion that the bill will save cost, nobody has brought anything here to show that it will save cost. As to the assertion that it will expedite the business of the courts, nobody has brought any facts here to establish that it will expedite their business. I think no reasons have been advanced why we should enact the bill, leaving out the matter of the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, pending a vote on the bill, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was on my feet addressing the Chair at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator did not address the Chair before he made the announcement. Several Senators were on their feet. The Chair regrets, however, that he did not know the Senator from Vermont desired recognition.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think everybody would be better satisfied if we could have the passage of the bill vacated, and have the question put over again.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, under the circumstances, if the Senator from Vermont wishes a quorum, I shall not insist upon the action standing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the Senate in passing the bill can be vacated by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Because of the situation in which the Senator from Vermont found himself, and what he says, I ask that the action of the Senate in passing the bill may be vacated, and that the Senator may call for a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the order is vacated.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Couzens	King	Russell
Austin	Cutting	La Follette	Schall
Bachman	Davis	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	Dickinson	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lonergan	Smith
Barbour	Dill	Long	Steiwer
Barkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Stephens
Black	Erickson	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Frazier	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	George	Murphy	Trammell
Bulow	Gibson	Neely	Tydings
Byrd	Goldsborough	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gore	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Hale	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hatch	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White
Connally	Hebert	Pope
Coolidge	Johnson	Reed
Copeland	Kean	Robinson, Ark.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

Are there further amendments to be proposed?

There being no further amendments, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, H.R. 7199, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1935.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7199) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Bureau of Navigation", on page 7, line 22, to increase the appropriation for maintenance, etc., of the naval training station at Newport, R.I., from $46,813 to $196,813.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 23, to reduce the appropriation for maintenance, etc., of the naval training station at Great Lakes, Ill., from $227,503 to $38,773.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, after the word "Navy", to strike out "$1,323,798" and insert "$1,285,073", so as to read:

In all, training, education, and welfare, Navy, $1,285,073.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, at the end of line 15, to reduce the total appropriation for the Bureau of Engineering from $15,564,127 to $15,553,800.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. I venture the assertion that there are many Senators who have not had an opportunity to examine the bill. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill kindly advise us as to any material changes in existing law and any increases over the preceding year, and what changes generally or specifically are made by the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there are no legislative provisions in the bill. As reported to the House, the bill contained no legislative provisions, and as reported by the Senate committee it contains no legislative provisions.

The increases reported by the Senate committee total $115,440. That amount is due almost entirely to one proposal, which provides for the opening of the Newport Naval Training Station.

There is one item of increase in the provisions for the marine service, an increase in the amount available for the transportation of troops, amounting to $55,000. When that $55,000 is added the amount recommended to be appropriated is approximately $80,000 under the amount estimated for that purpose by the Budget.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is there any increase in the personnel of the Marine Corps?

Mr. BYRNES. There is no increase as reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the number of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. H.R. 7199, the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator before he continues, Mr. President, if he will kindly answer the question as to whether the number in the Marine Corps is increased?

Mr. BYRNES. As I understand the estimate of the Budget, it did not provide for an increase, and there is no increase recommended by the Senate committee over the amount agreed to by the House. The amount provided by the House would permit an increase of 1,000.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether there are any commitments in the bill for capital ships at a later date, or for replacement of capital ships?

Mr. BYRNES. No. Those authorizations are contained in the bill which has been reported from the Naval Affairs Committee and is now on the Senate Calendar. The pending bill contains absolutely no authorization as to ships. It provides only for funds for carrying on the construction of ships now authorized. That amount is approximately $41,000,000, as I recall it.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if there was any provision for any appropriation for the construction of dirigibles.

Mr. BYRNES. No; there is no appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator explain to me why the item for the maintenance of the Great Lakes Training Station in Illinois is reduced to practically a negligible point? Is that in connection with a policy to disband the activities at the Great Lakes?

Mr. BYRNES. No. I will explain that situation to the Senator. At the Great Lakes Training Station during the last year and the year previous no recruits have been trained. That is also true of the Newport Training Station. There is no estimate in the Budget for the opening of the Great Lakes Training Station for the training of recruits. The House, however, added an amount referred to by the Senator in the item just adopted, and if that item is included it would necessitate increases in other items amounting to approximately $475,000. The committee determined that if an additional station is to be opened the Newport Station should be opened, because of the fact that its opening would necessitate an expenditure of not to exceed $225,000. We were informed there were no hospital facilities at the Great Lakes Training Station, and if that station were opened at this time it would necessitate the furnishing of hospital facilities at a cost of something more than $100,000 and necessitate a total increase of approximately $475,000.

The result of the action of the Senate committee is to provide an appropriation for the training of recruits at Newport. It does not provide for the training of recruits at the Great Lakes training station. Both items will then go to conference, and the conferees will have to determine whether either one of the two items will be retained in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are there any training centers other than on the seaboard?

Mr. BYRNES. No; not at this time. The question of transportation, which I assume the Senator has in mind, is not a vital one, the officials of the Navy Department calling attention to the fact that no matter where a man is trained, he must be transported to either the Atlantic Ocean or the Pacific Ocean to be placed upon a ship. So far as the Department is concerned, they state that they have ample facilities at this time for the training of the recruits who they anticipate will be trained during the coming year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So far as actual training is concerned, I apprehend that is true. The only thing I have had in my mind is that the Naval Reserve finds one of its greatest reservoirs of support in the Great Lakes Basin and in the tributary area, and it has constantly been urged upon me that it is a serious error in public policy to discourage the interest and activity not only of the Naval Reserve but of related naval interests throughout the great central section of the country. It would seem to me, from looking at the bill, as though the House of Representatives had concluded that if there is to be another station opened it should be in the central part of the country on the Great Lakes, and not another station on the seaboard, whereas it would seem to me that the Senate committee had concluded that if there is another station to be opened it should again be on the seaboard and not in the central portion of the country. Would that be a fair interpretation?

Mr. BYRNES. That is a fair statement of the facts, if not of the motives impelling the change in the bill. The committee considered the fact that the Great Lakes Training Station is now closed and the Newport Training Station is now closed and decided that if one were to be opened, and it cost only $225,000 to open the Newport Training Station, that it would be more advisable to open that one than to open the Great Lakes Station, which would cost, as I said, approximately $475,000 to open.

I repeat, that the position of the Department is that the two stations they have, one at San Diego and one at Hampton Roads, are sufficient for their needs for the recruiting that they anitcipate will be had during the next year. They state at this time, of course, that which we all know, that there is no difficulty in securing recruits; that men have been reenlisting, and that in their opinion it would not be necessary to open another station.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then why does the committee propose to open any new station?

Mr. BYRNES. It is discretionary as to whether they will open any; but I will say to the Senator from Michigan that my personal view is that neither one should be opened. By reason of the action of the Senate it will go to conference with the Senate advocating Newport and the House advocating Great Lakes, and that question can then be determined.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the criticism leveled against the manufacturers of airplanes concerning the production of airplanes, and the fact that so many of those, it is alleged, now owned by the Government for military and naval purposes, are practically valueless, I was wondering whether the committee gave attention to the question of seaplanes.

Mr. BYRNES. No; the committee gave no attention to the construction of planes, because the bill, as I said, contained no legislative provisions. The bill which has been reported by the Naval Affairs Committee I understand has some provision with reference to the construction of planes, where properly that question should be discussed. But this bill provides for no new construction. It does not purport to authorize such construction.

Mr. KING. I may say that I find an item on page 36 of $18,643,320 to cover the expenditures of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and the greater part of that is for the construction of new airplanes.

Mr. BYRNES. It "shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization carried in the Navy Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1934." That is the construction, but it does not authorize new construction. It provides funds for ships heretofore authorized.

Mr. KING. I find on the same page:

For new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts, and accessories, $6,131,000, of which amount not to exceed $2,400,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred—

And so forth.

The point I am trying to make is this: General Mitchell, in his testimony yesterday—and I think his testimony reflects the views of some of the experts in aeronautics—indulged in a very serious criticism of our airplane policy. He stated that the greater number of airplanes owned by the Government—by the War Department, particularly—were practically valueless. I was wondering what has become of the enormous sum, several hundred millions of dollars, appropriated during the past few years for aircraft of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, if the General is correct, that would be justified. That certainly is not the opinion of the experts of the Navy Department and the best minds that we have in the Department, and personally I do not share the view of the General, if that be an accurate quotation of his views, that we have wasted this money. From my observation, so far as the Navy is concerned, they have done remarkable work in the development of aviation and in the development of fighting planes. I do not believe that his statement is justified by the facts in the case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I submit an observation which is scarcely pertinent to this bill, but there ought to be a department of aviation, and the Aeronautical Service, both of the Army and the Navy, ought to be under one head instead of there being a division with multiplied officers, offices, and so forth, all of which makes for inefficiency as well as increased expenditure.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, the Senator knows that it is quite a big question and one which has been discussed for some years, but, inasmuch as we are strictly confining this bill to appropriations and not to legislation, I know the Senator would not want to have us legislate on that subject in this measure.

Mr. KING. I agree with that observation.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. I am not able to understand the situation with reference to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. As I understood the Senator, the naval authorities say they do not need that station there?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. DUFFY. The committee, however, suggests that an appropriation be made for the Newport station. Why did they not just strike out the appropriation for the Great Lakes station instead of transferring it to another station?

Mr. BYRNES. As I have stated, the Navy Department did not recommend the opening of either station. The House Appropriations Committee recommended the appropriation for the opening of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate, after quite an extensive hearing, took the opposite view and determined that the Newport station should be opened and not the Great Lakes Training Station. I was giving to the Senate the information that I thought was proper—that, so far as the Department was concerned, they did not advocate the opening of either station, nor was there any estimate submitted by the Bureau of the Budget for the opening of either station. By the action of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, it was recommended that for the Great Lakes Station an appropriation be made of $38,778, which would merely cover the maintenance of the station, so that if at a later date it was determined that it should be opened it could be opened, but no more than maintenance would be provided by the $38,778.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, at the end of line 14, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Construction and Repair from $13,688,333 to $13,709,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, at the end of line 4, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Ordnance from $10,546,152 to $10,546,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts", on page 21, line 3, after the word "pay", to strike out "$27,515,049" and insert "$27,634,522"; in line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,170,297" and insert "$1,289,770"; in line 6, after the word "observers", to insert a comma and "except not to exceed 56 gunnery observers"; and in line 10, after the words "in all", to strike out "$36,615,942" and insert "$36,735,415", so as to read:

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders (not to exceed 908 officers of the Medical Corps, 186 officers of the Dental Corps, 556 officers of the Supply Corps, 83 officers of the Chaplain Corps, 233 officers of the Construction Corps, 109 officers of the Civil Engineer Corps, and 1,461 warrant and commissioned warrant officers: Provided, That if the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers and officers in any staff corps holding commission on July 1, 1934, is in excess of the number herein stipulated, such excess officers may be retained in the Navy until the number is reduced to the limitations imposed by this act), pay $27,634,522, including not to exceed $1,289,770 (none of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by more than eight nonflying officers or observers, except not to exceed 56 gunnery observers, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy) for increased pay for making aerial flights; rental allowance, $5,589,216; subsistence allowance, $3,511,677; in all, $36,735,415.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 7, to increase the total appropriation for pay and allowances of naval personnel from $120,027,328 to $120,146,801.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 16, after the word "That", to insert a comma and "except for messes temporarily set up on shore for officers attached to seagoing vessels, to aviation units based on seagoing vessels, and to landing forces and expeditions"; in line 23, after the word "officers", to strike out "on shore" and insert "assigned to shore duty", and on page 24, line 3, after the word "Government", to insert a comma and "nor the sale of meals to officers by general messes on shore as regulated by detailed instructions from the Navy Department", so as to make the further proviso read:

Provided further, That, except for messes temporarily set up on shore for officers attached to seagoing vessels, to aviation units based on seagoing vessels, and to landing forces and expeditions, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay, allowances, or other expenses of any enlisted man or civil employee performing service in the residence or quarters of an officer or officers assigned to shore duty as a cook, waiter, or other work of a character performed by a household servant, but nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the voluntary employment in any such capacity of a retired enlisted man or a transferred member of the Fleet Reserve without additional expense to the Government, nor the sale of meals to officers by general messes on shore as regulated by detailed instructions from the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 18, to increase the appropriation for pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel from $137,320,519 to $137,439,992.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts", on page 28, line 16, after the words "Naval Establishment", to strike out "$7,664,496" and insert "$7,596,000", so as to read:

For equipage, supplies, and services under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, including stationery for commanding, executive, communication, and navigating officers of ships, boards, and courts on ships, and chaplains; commissions, interest, and exchange; ferriage and bridge tolls, including streetcar fares; rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards except for use of naval attachés and recruiting officers; accident prevention; services of civilian employees under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; freight, express, and parcel-post charges, including transportation of funds and cost of insurance on shipments of money when necessary, and ice for cooling drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals and shops at industrial navy yards), pertaining to the Navy Department and Naval Establishment, $7,596,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery from $1,894,666 to $1,965,130.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 24, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$203,500", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $203,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading of "Bureau of Yards and Docks", on page 34, line 15, after the word "employed", to strike out "$6,492,914" and insert "$6,459,250", so as to read:

For the labor, materials, and supplies necessary, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy, for the general maintenance of the activities and properties now or hereafter under the cognizance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, including accident prevention; the maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles for the Navy Department (not to exceed 10 in number) and the Naval Establishment not otherwise provided for; not to exceed $1,600,000 for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department, and part time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, of such engineers and architects as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $25 per diem for any person so employed, $6,459,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Marine Corps", on page 44, line 6, to strike out "$195,000" and insert "$250,000", so as to read:

For transportation of troops and applicants for enlistment, including cash in lieu of ferriage and transfers en route; toilet kits for issue to recruits upon their first enlistment and other incidental expenses of the recruiting service; and for transportation for dependents of officers and enlisted men, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 15, to increase the total appropriation for the Marine Corps from $5,961,325 to $6,016,325.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. By direction of the committee, I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 15, in the committee amendment, after the figures "$1,285,073", it is proposed to insert a comma and "and the money herein specifically appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for as one fund."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The purpose of the amendment is simply to make available the funds for training, education, and welfare for either one of the three purposes. It does not increase the appropriation, but it is necessary, for bookkeeping purposes, that it be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, line 21, after the words "Naval Reserve", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the cost of printing historical naval documents, including composition, clerical copying in the Navy Department, and other preparatory work shall be charged to the "Naval supply account fund" not to exceed $10,000 at any one time, and this fund shall be reimbursed from the receipts therefrom when copies are sold to the public by the Superintendent of Documents and from applicable appropriations when copies are issued to the several departments and establishments: Provided further, That the Superintendent of Documents is hereby authorized to sell copies to the public at the prorated cost, including composition, clerical work of copying in the Navy Department, and other work preparatory to printing without reference to the provisions of section 307 of the act approved June 30, 1932 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 44, sec. 72a); and that the "usual number" for congressional distribution, depository libraries, and international exchanges shall not be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have had no opportunity to read the hearings in respect to the controversy as to whether or not the station on the Great Lakes or the one at Newport should be opened. I am quite content to take the Senator's word for the physical situation as it exists. He says that the legislative result of this arrangement should be to put both propositions in conference. That is correct, of course.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to make it very plain for the RECORD, as it goes into conference, that, although the Senate has stricken out the Great Lakes item, it has been done without debate, without any serious attempt to explore the problem, and it has been done without any judicial determination of the two relationships. I hope that the problem may go to conference without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "$176,040" and insert in lieu thereof "$238,410."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, this amendment proposing to strike out, on page 38, line 14, the appropriation of $136,040 and to insert in lieu thereof "$238,410" represents an increase of $62,370.

The purpose of the amendment, sir, is to care for 20 civilian professors who were dismissed from the Naval Academy in 1932. Most of those professors had a service ranging over many years, some of them as much as 25 years or more. They were given notice of only 60 days, and some of them, as a matter of fact, notice of only a few weeks. A very great hardship was inflicted upon these men, who are men of family, and it was impossible for them to secure employment in the faculties of colleges throughout the country because the faculties of the colleges, as a general rule, are being materially reduced.

The amount of the appropriation involved is small, but it will have an effect, approximately, upon perhaps 100 people. The sum of $62,370 is the amount needed to provide the object sought to be accomplished.

The amendment further carries the provision that the civilian professors shall be reinstated in the positions which they heretofore occupied. The positions which they once held are now being filled by naval officers, and, though I make no criticism of the service that may be performed by such naval officers, the fact is that while in the teaching of technical subjects, of course, they are thoroughly prepared, when it comes to the question of cultural subjects, such as languages, mathematics, and history, I submit that naval officers have not had that preparation which enables them to take care of and to instruct these young men in the service.

It is a matter of justice that the amendment should be adopted, and I trust that the Senate may see fit to adopt it.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I merely wish to know whether it is not true that since these professors have been removed the American Association of University Professors has withdrawn recognition of the A.B. degree conferred by the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I take pleasure in answering the Senator from New Jersey, and thank him for his question; what he has said I understand is correct. I further invite the Senator's attention to the fact—and I think he served as a member of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy in 1933—that in the report of the Board of Visitors it is specifically recommended that civilian professors shall be maintained in their positions. I read from that report a criticism by Admiral Sims in which he says:

> Naval officer instructors who necessarily have no training as educators and who are changed every 2 or 3 years cannot achieve the desired results.

The report of that Board of Visitors further adds:

> In connection with this subject the Board recommends that at least the present ratio of civilian to officer instructors be maintained.

It further comments:

> That naval officer instructors who necessarily have no training as educators and who are changed every 2 or 3 years cannot achieve the desired results no matter how much the course may be extended.

And again—

> Manifestly, the academy is seriously handicapped by the officers' lack of training in the teaching profession, particularly, by the lack of knowledge and educational training on the part of those who select them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand that the answer to the question of the Senator from New Jersey was that the academy had been excluded from the college association as not being up to the standard?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is my understanding.

Mr. FESS. It would appear to me to be wholly indefensible and inexcusable for an institution supported by the Government, a technical institution, to do anything which would disqualify it to be ranked with other colleges.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Such is the opinion I hold.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope Senators who are listening will not consider the amendment offered by my colleague from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] as one that is prompted purely by local considerations. I think it is a larger matter than the welfare of the few professors—20 in number—who have been let out of the academy. Twenty persons may not be very many, but that is not the question here. The question is one of policy in the training of our naval officers.

Wars are fought with two things—trained men on the one hand and tried proper equipment on the other. The guns on our ships and the ammunition which they shoot are both tested before we go into war.

The naval officers, on the other hand, are the trained human element in the equation of war. What we are endeavoring to get the Senate to do here is to consider the importance of having the very best men available train our naval officers in fields apart from seamanship or care of guns or purely technical naval subjects. For example, 8 of these 20 professors were engaged in the school of languages. They spent their lives assimilating the languages which they taught to the midshipmen, not for a year or 2 years, but some of them have been going abroad, have attended foreign universities, and have become experts in the particular languages which they seek to teach to the midshipmen. Obviously, they are better qualified to teach foreign languages than are naval officers, whose contact with foreign languages is more or less perfunctory, who cannot have the background, the training, the knowledge of foreign languages possessed by men who have given up their entire lives to the assimilation and teaching of foreign tongues at the academy.

This is a far-fetched illustration, I admit, but it is one that is quite within the realm of possibility, nevertheless. We have fast airplanes. Why? So that when the enemy fleet is sighted the difference between victory and defeat may be the time limit with which information is conveyed to our fleet. Therefore, all nations have speedy scout planes so that the first to get the information of the enemy's whereabouts may have an advantage which the opposition fleet would not have. Let us suppose that a message couched in foreign language should fall into the hands of a naval officer. The speed with which he could translate that message in relation to some particular movement, in the landing of troops ashore in some foreign country, might mean the difference between the success or failure of that particular undertaking.

Therefore, so long as we are going to teach these subjects, so long as we are going to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for equipment, battleships, destroyers, submarines, and what not, is it too much to appropriate $70,000 to give the men who are going to man our naval vessels the best command of the battle situation that can be afforded to them? I think there is no real merit, neither is there sound logic or reason, behind the elimination of these 20 professors. The best training we can give to our naval officers is none too good to match the hundreds of millions of dollars or the billions of dollars which we have appropriated for efficient naval personnel and equipment.

I am going to ask my friend from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] in charge of the bill if he will not consent to take the amendment to conference, where it can be fought out, where these arguments may be considered, and where I hope it may be retained in the bill. In any event, will he not consent to take the amendment to conference?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the instructors of the Naval Academy number 48. The Department has not asked for the reinstatement of these instructors, but I have no objection to the Senate's adopting the amendment so it may go to conference and the matter may there be discussed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his fairness and broad vision in this respect. I hope the conferees will see fit to keep the amendment in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "$176,040" and insert in lieu thereof "$238,410."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment of the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 9, strike out "June 30, 1933" and insert in lieu thereof "June 27, 1933, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to reinstate the civilian instructors released subsequent to such date, and so much of the above amount as may be necessary for the payment of the instructors so reinstated shall be immediately available."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. There being no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 274, the bill, H.R. 6604, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read for information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 6604) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barbour	Bulkley	Carey
Ashurst	Barkley	Bulow	Clark
Austin	Black	Byrd	Connally
Bachman	Bone	Byrnes	Coolidge
Bailey	Borah	Capper	Copeland
Bankhead	Brown	Caraway	Costigan
Couzens	Hatch	Murphy	Steiwer
Cutting	Hayden	Neely	Stephens
Davis	Hebert	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Dickinson	Johnson	Nye	Thomas, Utah
Dieterich	Kean	O'Mahoney	Thompson
Dill	Keyes	Overton	Townsend
Duffy	King	Patterson	Trammell
Erickson	La Follette	Pittman	Tydings
Fess	Lewis	Pope	Vandenberg
Fletcher	Logan	Reed	Van Nuys
Frazier	Lonergan	Robinson, Ark.	Wagner
George	Long	Robinson, Ind.	Walsh
Gibson	McAdoo	Russell	Wheeler
Goldsborough	McCarran	Schall	White
Gore	McGill	Sheppard
Hale	McKellar	Shipstead
Harrison	McNary	Smith

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I regret to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to proceed to the consideration of the so-called "naval construction bill."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. Does the Senator from Utah desire the floor?

Mr. KING. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. KING. I will say very frankly that I am opposed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, is this a debatable question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Would the Senator from Utah object to having the motion disposed of and the bill taken up, or does he desire to discuss the motion?

Mr. KING. I am going to discuss the motion, and if we shall be defeated and the bill shall be taken up, we will discuss the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator is quite within his rights. I had hoped, however, that the bill might first be laid before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken about half an hour, he said:

Mr. President, the Chairman of the Special Committee Investigating Air and Ocean Mail Contracts, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], advises me that the committee is ready to proceed at least with some phase of the question previously under consideration, and I yield the floor.

[Mr. KING's speech is published entire on Mar. 1, p. 3459.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

During the delivery of Mr. KING's speech,

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me to interrupt him for the purpose of asking the Senator from Nevada a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN] if anything has been done by which he can authorize me to say to the Senators on this side who wish to speak on the subject of the St. Lawrence Treaty as to whether any arrangement has been made to indicate whether we can agree upon a date on which to vote? Senator WAGNER, of New York, informed me in the last few moments that if Senators in favor of the treaty feel that Wednesday or Thursday is a time satisfactory to them at which to take the vote it will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand the Senator from New York will be here on Wednesday or Thursday, but there are so many Senators who have to be absent in order to make speeches on public subjects in their own communities that I have found it very difficult to find a common adviser by which to ascertain when the important proponents and opponents of the bill can be present at the same time. I am hopeful we will find some date on which all of the important proponents and opponents of this treaty can be present. I hope we will get that worked out in a few days.

Mr. LEWIS. When the Senator from Nevada speaks of some date, does he hope that it will be some day next week? If so, I will communicate that to other Senators.

Mr. PITTMAN. I cannot say as to that. I again say that there are five or six Senators on either side of this question who insist they should be present; that there might be a miscarriage of justice if they should not be present, and that their duties elsewhere will require them to be absent on certain dates. If I can find any particular day on which these Senators can be here together, in order that the question may have proper discussion, I will notify the Senator from Illinois of that fact.

Mr. LEWIS. I can say nothing further. I thank the Senator from Utah for allowing this interruption.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend from Illinois that, in view of many rumors that are floating around the Chamber, I should think he would be very glad to have a postponement from time to time of the discussion and possibility of a vote upon the treaty to which he refers until the end of the session. I know he is a very earnest protagonist against the ratification of the treaty, and many of the Senators would join with him in seeking to have a vote upon the treaty postponed until some indeterminate period.

Mr. LEWIS. In other words, no vote at all, no treaty at all.

Mr. KING. The Senator can place upon my words any construction he wishes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah would not have anything to fear from a vote on the treaty right now.

Mr. KING. I do not have the assurance upon that subject manifested by my friend from Louisiana.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS—WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN, JR., ET AL.

[After the conclusion of Mr. KING's speech.]

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Couzens	King	Russell
Austin	Cutting	La Follette	Schall
Bachman	Davis	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	Dickinson	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lonergan	Smith
Barbour	Dill	Long	Steiwer
Barkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Stephens
Black	Erickson	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Frazier	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	George	Murphy	Trammell
Bulow	Gibson	Neely	Tydings
Byrd	Goldsborough	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gore	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Hale	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hatch	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White
Connally	Hebert	Pope
Coolidge	Johnson	Reed
Copeland	Kean	Robinson, Ark.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] occasioned by illness. I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the Sergeant at Arms is here, as I understand, and ready to submit a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will make his report.

The Sergeant at Arms thereupon submitted the following report:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

With reference to the order of the Senate I have been unable to locate William P. MacCracken, Jr. I went to his office and was told that he had not been there since 11 a.m. Having been told by Frank J. Hogan this morning that in case I wanted to locate William P. MacCracken, Jr., I could do so through him, I called Mr. Hogan's office, and was asked to go there. I went to his office and Mr. Hogan said that he would take me to William P. MacCracken, Jr., but that he would not tell me where he was; but that Mr. Hogan would produce him at a certain agreed time in a judge's chambers so that he could apply for a writ of habeas corpus. I asked Mr. Hogan to tell me where I could find Mr. MacCracken and he declined to do so. I have not been able to locate William P. MacCracken, Jr.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, while I do not know that it is necessary, as a precautionary measure I move that the report be accepted at this time, but that the Sergeant at Arms be given more time in which to apprehend Mr. MacCracken under the original order issued by the Senate, and that it may be continued in full force and effect for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the order of arrest be kept in full force and effect until the further order of the Senate, and that the Sergeant at Arms be given further time in which to execute the warrant.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there are three others who are charged with contempt of the Senate and have been cited to appear and show cause, I suggest that we proceed with those at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate and make response to the Senate.

The respondent, L. H. Brittin, and his counsel, Seth W. Richardson, Esq., and Alfons B. Landa, Esq., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

The respondents, Gilbert Givvin and Harris M. Hanshue, accompanied by their counsel, Frank K. Nebeker, Esq., and S. N. MacInnis, Esq., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Sergeant at Arms, have the respondents in this matter been brought into the Chamber?

The SERGEANT AT ARMS. Yes, sir; they are now present in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. L. H. Brittin, Mr. Gilbert Givvin, and Mr. Harris M. Hanshue, you have been brought before the Senate by its order to show cause why you should not be punished for contempt of the Senate, on account of the destruction and removal of certain papers, files, and memoranda from the files of William P. MacCracken, Jr., after a subpena requiring the production of such papers, files, and memoranda had been served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown by the report of the Special Senate Committee Investigating Ocean and Air Mail Contracts.

The clerk will read at this time Report No. 254, Seventy-third Congress, second session, parts 1 and 2, submitted February 2 and 5, 1934, respectively, and Senate Resolution 172, agreed to February 5, 1934.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

REPORT NO. 254, PART 1

(Pursuant to S.Res. 349 (72d Cong.))

Your committee, appointed and selected by the Senate, under Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, second session, report as follows:

(1) The committee has been engaged in public hearings and did on the 31st day of January 1934 cause to be served on William P. MacCracken, of Washington, D.C., a summons, a copy of which is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A", and which exhibit is made a part of this report.

(2) The said William P. MacCracken has appeared before this special committee, but has failed, refused, and declined to bring with him to the committee, or to make available for inspection, his correspondence and memorandums relating to air mail contracts.

(3) The said William P. MacCracken has not only failed, declined, and refused to bring such correspondence and memorandums to the committee, or to make it available for the committee's use, but has declined in an open session of the Senate committee, room 318, Senate Office Building, held on January 31, 1934, and has again declined at a public session of the committee, held on February 2, 1934, to bring said papers and correspondence to the committee and the said Mr. MacCracken admitted in open session of the special committee hearing on February 2, 1934, that between the date of the serving of the subpena and the time of his testimony, two certain files of correspondence concerning air mail had been removed from his office with his knowledge and consent.

(4) The said William P. MacCracken has based his refusal upon the claim that he is an attorney, and as such attorney has a right to determine for himself whether or not correspondence and memorandums with reference to air mail contracts, or what he designates as private and confidential communications, between himself and air mail operators whom he designates as his clients.

(5) The committee makes a report to this Senate and requests that the Senate, by proper resolution, take such action as the Senate deems wise to bring the said William P. MacCracken before the bar of the Senate and to require that William P. MacCracken produce papers and correspondence herein set out, in order that the committee may have available this material evidence to carry out the duties imposed upon your committee by the terms of the resolution under which it is acting.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

To WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, Jr., 1152 National Press Building, Washington, D.C., greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear before the Senate Committee on Ocean Mail and Air Mail Contracts of the Senate of the United States, instanter, at 12:30 p.m., at their committee room, 101 Senate Office Building, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject matters under consideration by said committee.

Bring all books of account, bank passbooks, canceled checks, check stubs, deposit slips, papers, memorandums, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To J. A. Bradley and L. F. Rittelmeyer, to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 31st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1934.

HUGO L. BLACK,
Chairman Special Committee on Investigation of Air Mail and Ocean Mail Contracts.

Service accepted 12:20 p.m. January 31, 1934.
WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, Jr.

REPORT NO. 254, PART 2

(Pursuant to S.Res. 349 (72d Cong.))

Your committee, appointed under Senate Resolution No. 349, Seventy-second Congress, asks to make this further partial report in connection with the performance of its duties under the resolution in addition to the previous report (no. 254) made February 2, 1934:

1. Subsequent to the service of subpena upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as set forth in Report No. 254 to this Senate, made on February 2, 1934, the committee issued a subpena duces tecum to Col. L. H. Brittin and to Gilbert Givvin, copies of which subpenas are hereto attached marked "Exhibits A and B."

2. On February 3, 1934, the committee met in room 318 Senate Office Building and Col. L. H. Brittin and Gilbert Givvin appeared before the committee and testified.

3. The evidence of Gilbert Givvin showed in substance that the said Gilbert Givvin is an employee of the Western Air Express, Inc., and that Harris M. Hanshue is an officer of the Western Air Express, Inc. That after service of the subpena duces tecum upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown in Report No. 254, the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., sent a telegram to Harris M. Hanshue, as follows:

"I have today been subpenaed to produce before the Black committee all papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relating to air and ocean mail contracts. Insofar as these involve confidential communications between us as attorney and client I have felt it my duty to assert, and I have asserted, the privilege which the law places around such communications. The privilege may be waived only by you as client. The committee has requested me to inquire whether you desire to waive this privilege and authorize me to make these documents available to the committee investigators. Please wire your decision.

(Signed) WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, Jr."

4. That after said telegram had been sent to the said Harris M. Hanshue and received by him, and after the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., had declined to produce his papers, memoranda, maps, correspondence, and telegrams relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts, before your special committee, the said Harris M. Hanshue communicated with Gilbert Givvin and directed him to proceed to the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and remove from the files of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., certain papers, memoranda, or correspondence contained in the files then under subpena of your committee. That thereafter the said Gilbert Givvin went to the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and did remove letters, telegrams, papers, and memoranda from the files of such papers contained in the Western Air file and did send such letters, telegrams, papers, and memoranda to another employee of the Western Air Express named Voorhes, addressing the same to the said Voorhes at the Essex House, New York City, which hotel was the New York living address of the said Voorhes and the said Harris M. Hanshue.

5. That after said files had been removed from the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., the said Harris M. Hanshue sent a telegram to William P. MacCracken, Jr., and sent a copy of such telegram to the chairman of this committee, stating that the Western Air Express, Inc., had no objection to the committee inspecting all papers in the Western Air Express, Inc., files in the William P. MacCracken Jr.'s office.

6. That on the 2d day of February 1934, the said Harris M. Hanshue sent a certain file of papers to Washington by the said Voorhes, which papers were turned over to the said Gilbert Givvin, and which purported to be the letters, telegrams, and memoranda removed from the files of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., but all of which were not identified by the said Gilbert Givvin before the committee as being the identical papers taken from the files of the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr. The evidence of the said Gilbert Givvin revealed that the said Harris M. Hanshue before directing Givvin to remove such papers told the said Givvin that the Senate committee was seeking the papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, and copies of telegrams in the files of MacCracken and that he, the said Hanshue, wanted certain papers removed therefrom.

7. The said Gilbert Givvin further testified before your committee on February 3, 1934, that he did not actually or physically remove any part of the papers, memoranda, maps, correspondence, and telegrams set forth in the subpena of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., but that said William P. MacCracken had said files in his own possession and made a decision as to which of said papers, memoranda, correspondence, and telegrams should be removed, and he, the said MacCracken, did actually remove said papers from the files himself and turn them over to the said Gilbert Givvin to be taken away from MacCracken's office and to be delivered to the said Hanshue.

8. On the 3d day of February 1934 Col. L. H. Brittin likewise appeared before your special committee and admitted that after he had received information that the Senate committee had served a subpena upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., to produce all of his papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, and copies of telegrams, as shown in exhibit A of the Report No. 254, made to this Senate, he, the said Col. L. H. Brittin, went to the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., and removed from the files of the Northwest Airways, Inc., in said William P. MacCracken Jr.'s office, certain letters and correspondence contained in such files.

At the time of such removal and prior thereto said L. H. Brittin was an officer of the Northwest Airways, Inc. The said L. H. Brittin admitted that after removing said correspondence he took it with him to his own office and there tore it into pieces and threw it into the waste-paper basket, and that it cannot now be obtained.

9. The said L. H. Brittin stated that he secured the said files in the office of William P. MacCracken, Jr., from his law partner, one Frederic P. Lee, who willingly delivered them to the said L. H. Brittin at said time and place. The claim made by the said L. H. Brittin before the Senate committee was that he had certain correspondence in these files of a personal and confidential nature and that he did not want it made public through the Senate committee, but since the correspondence has already been destroyed the committee is unable to prove the truth or falsity of this statement from the correspondence itself.

After said correspondence was destroyed by the said L. H. Brittin, he testified that he then gave his consent for the Northwest Airways, Inc., files to be inspected by the Senate committee.

The correspondence, papers, memoranda, and telegrams in the files of the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., constituted material and pertinent evidence for the committee to consider in connection with its investigation and recommendations for legislation concerning ocean mail and air mail Government contracts.

For the further information of the Senate there is attached hereto a stenographic report of the evidence before your committee, given by William P. MacCracken, Jr., L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, and J. A. Bradley. There is also presented to the Senate in a sealed envelop the letters, memoranda, and papers produced by Gilbert Givvin purporting to be the papers removed from said William P. MacCracken Jr.'s files and sent to S. W. Voorhes.

Your committee believes that it is proper to report the foregoing facts to the Senate in order that the Senate may determine whether or not any action shall be taken by the Senate with a view to proceeding against the said William P. MacCracken, Jr., Harris M. Hanshue, L. H. Brittin, Frederic P. Lee, and Gilbert Givvin in the nature of a proceeding for contempt or otherwise, or for such other and appropriate action as the Senate may deem it proper to take.

Respectfully submitted.

[Senate Resolution 172]

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue a citation directing William P. MacCracken, Jr., L. H. Brittin, Gilbert Givvin, and Harris M. Hanshue to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of the Senate on account of the destruction and removal of certain papers, files, and memoranda from the files of William P. MacCracken, Jr., after a subpena had been served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown by the report of the special Senate committee investigating ocean and air mail contracts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is Colonel Brittin present?

The respondent, L. H. Brittin, rose and stood in the area in front of the Vice President's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Colonel Brittin, you are one of the respondents in this proceeding. Have you anything to say in excuse or extenuation of your connection with or participation in the matters described in the report and resolution which have just been read?

Colonel BRITTIN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do you desire to make a statement?

Colonel BRITTIN. I have a statement here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before presenting that, according to the rule of the Senate, I will ask you to take the oath.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore thereupon administered to the respondent, L. H. Brittin, the following oath:

You do solemnly swear that the statements you shall make and the testimony you shall give in this matter now pending, being a matter of proceedings in the nature of contempt by the United States Senate against you, will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Colonel BRITTIN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You may proceed.

Colonel BRITTIN. I should like to have the clerk read this statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the statement.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE:

IN RE CITATION UNDER DATE OF FEBRUARY 5, 1934, DIRECTED TO L. H. BRITTIN

The above-named L. H. Brittin hereby respectfully submits to the Senate of the United States the following response to the citation and order to show cause issued by the President of the Senate under date of February 5, 1934, and returnable 12 o'clock noon on Friday, February 9, 1934.

That upon the record in this matter, the said L. H. Brittin respectfully asserts that the Senate of the United States is without lawful jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine the alleged matters and things contained in and referred to in the above-entitled citation as charged against and affecting the said L. H. Brittin, and is without jurisdiction to fix and impose punishment upon the said L. H. Brittin as set forth and referred to in the said citation, and that the said citation and the whole thereof and all proceedings thereon or in connection therewith is void.

II

Further responding, and without waiving his rights concerning the matters and things set up and alleged in the first paragraph of this response, the said L. H. Brittin respectfully advises the Senate of the United States that he, the said L. H. Brittin, is 57 years of age, and was born in the State of Connecticut, and is now a citizen and resident of the State of Minnesota. That he is an engineer by profession and was a United States soldier in the Spanish-American War with the rank of corporal, and was thereafter a United States soldier in the Great War, and was thereafter honorably discharged with the rank of lieutenant colonel; that said Brittin is a married man, now separated from his wife, and has no family of any kind.

That the said Brittin did, in 1926, organize an aviation company known as the Northwest Airways, Inc., a Michigan corporation, and later the Northwest Airways, Inc., a Delaware corporation, having their main office in St. Paul, Minn.; that these corporations were organized for the purpose of establishing, maintaining, and operating an airways system in general from the city of Chicago westward through the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Washington, and elsewhere. That the said corporations thereafter did consummate such purpose, and did construct, and are now maintaining, commercial airways line from the city of St. Paul, Minn., to the city of Seattle, Wash., through the States above mentioned; that such company is now transporting, under contracts and agreements with the United States, mails of the United States over said line between the cities of St. Paul, Minn., and Billings, Mont., and has been so engaged for more than 1 year last past; that, in connection with the operation of such airways the said Northwest Airways maintains a fleet of some 22 transport planes and operates and maintains suitable air fields and conveniences along the route of the said airway, and that the said system is in all respects, both in character and operation, a modern first-class commercial airway system. Said Brittin further states that he was an officer in the said Northwest Airways, Inc., until February 8, 1934, and held the position of executive vice president, with a salary of $12,000 a year, which constituted practically his sole income. That it has been a part of his duties as such official to attend upon and carry on the interests and duties of his said company in Washington, D.C., and that for several years last past he has been required to, and has spent, a large portion of his time in the city of Washington, for the purposes indicated, and that he was the sole representative of his company so employed. That his legal residence is in the city of St. Paul, Minn., and that he has no home or residence in the District of Columbia, but that when in said city, he has lived at various hotels and other public inns. That prior to the month of January 1934 he maintained no office of his own in the city of Washington, but transacted his office work either in his room at particular hotels, or in temporary quarters in the offices of various other persons in Washington. That in the spring of 1933 he carried on such office routine in the offices of MacCracken & Lee in the National Press Building in the city of Washington, and that thereafter and in the early fall of 1933, he left such offices and assumed a similar routine at the offices of Aeronautical Radio Institute, and that after remaining there approximately 3 months he removed to the office of a public stenographer in the Albee Building in said city, where he remained until occupation of his present office, at no. 1090 in the said National Press Building. That the office in said building now occupied by the said Brittin is the first office he has had in the city of Washington wherein to transact his business and that of his employer, and that at such office he now has a secretary and stenographer named Miss Stella Randolph. That the said office was first occupied by the said Brittin on the 22d day of January 1934. That prior thereto in connection with the officing arrangements at the various places mentioned above the said Brittin carried about with him papers, letters, and various documents which had come into his possession in connection with his affairs and those of his employer, and that he was accustomed upon changing his officing arrangements to take with him such papers and documents as aforesaid, and also at times stored them temporarily in the check rooms of various hotels. That upon opening up his said present office in the said National Press Building he removed thereto such accumulated papers and documents for the purpose of necessary examination, sorting, elimination, and filing in accordance with proper office practice. That since his installation in such new office quarters the said Brittin and his said secretary have been and up to the present time are engaged in, in part, examining, sorting, and tabulating the accumulation of papers and documents aforesaid which have come into the possession of the said Brittin under the circumstances as above stated, and that as such work has progressed a large number of said papers have been eliminated as duplicates or as unimportant or as generally obsolete and have therefore been eliminated from the mass of said papers and from the present filing system, and upon such elimination have been at intervals consigned to the waste-paper basket for removal in the usual and ordinary way. That the said papers thus eliminated and disposed of have consisted, in part, of matters relating to the affairs of the said Northwest Airways, as well as the personal affairs and interests of the said Brittin, and that the said files as now existing in said office contain likewise papers and documents relating to the affairs of the Northwest Airways, as well as the personal affairs and interests of the said Brittin.

That, with the exception of the time when the said Brittin maintained his office routine in the offices of MacCracken & Lee, as aforesaid, the said Brittin had no specific personal or professional connection with the said offices variously occupied by him or the persons occupying the same. That while the said Brittin was maintaining such office routine in the said offices of the said MacCracken & Lee the said firm was consulted by the said Brittin both with respect to the affairs of the Northwest Airways, Inc., and the personal affairs and interests of the said Brittin; and that such contacts with said firm were had by the said Brittin solely with William P. MacCracken, of the said firm. That by reason of the said professional employment of the said firm by the said Brittin for the purposes indicated, there accumulated in the offices of the said firm such papers and documents as came into existence by reason of, or related to, the professional services extended by said firm to said Brittin, and that the said papers and documents aforesaid remained in the offices of the said MacCracken & Lee while the said Brittin carried on his office routine in the said offices, and at all times thereafter so far as the said Brittin is advised.

That in addition to the papers and documents which were the result of consultation between the said Brittin and the said firm, and while using such offices as aforesaid, the said Brittin himself prepared, conducted, and formulated in such offices many letters, telegrams, and other documents, both in connection with the affairs of Northwest Airways, Inc., and with the affairs and interests of the said Brittin personally, which said papers and documents last referred to had no connection with the firm of MacCracken & Lee, and were not in anywise associated with any of the work or activities of the said firm, but were the affairs of the said Brittin alone, either as an officer of the said Northwest Airways, or personally, and were not intended to come into the possession or control of said MacCracken & Lee or form a part of any papers, records, or files in the possession of said firm or in its office; as to all of which papers it was at all times the intention of the said Brittin to take the same away with him, if and when he should change his office arrangements and assume an office routine elsewhere. That if any of the said papers or documents above referred to found their way into any of the papers, records, and files of the said MacCracken & Lee, that the same were there present inadvertently and without such intention on the part of the said Brittin or anyone else.

The said Brittin further states that he was absent on official business in the Dominion of Canada between January 16, 1934, and January 21, 1934, and that upon his return to Washington from Canada on January 21, 1934, did not return to his new office in the National Press Building until Monday morning, January 22, 1934, at which time his said secretary took up her duties in said office.

That the said Brittin, while in Canada, was informed by employees in the office of the Northwest Airways in St. Paul, Minn., that representatives of the Senate investigating committee had presented themselves at St. Paul, and had requested a delivery of files of the Northwest Airways and its officials in St. Paul. That the said Brittin immediately advised the St. Paul office to turn over and deliver to such representatives any and all files, papers, and documents there present without reservation, and that as he is informed and believes all of said files were presented to the said investigators, and that the same have been fully investigated, and every purpose of the Senate investigating committee in connection therewith has been fully expedited and consummated; that so far as the said Brittin is informed and believes, such files as have thus been delivered contain all material correspondence, papers, and documents with respect to the business and affairs of the said Northwest Airways, Inc., of whatever kind or nature, whether relating to ocean or air mail contracts, or otherwise, existing since the organization of the company.

That the said Brittin conducted no business with the said firm of MacCracken & Lee, and had no contacts or conferences with either member of said firm, for a long time prior to Brittin's return from Canada to Washington on January 21, 1934. That following such return and up to the present time said Brittin has had no contact, conference, or conversation, personally or over the telephone or otherwise, with the said William P. MacCracken, except a chance conversation, in passing, in the National Press Building concerning an inquiry of said MacCracken concerning a fee due him from the said Northwest Airways. That any matters of papers and documents concerning the Northwest Airways, or the affairs of the said MacCracken & Lee, or of the said Brittin, have at no time since January 1, 1934, and long prior thereto, been discussed with the said William P. MacCracken, directly or indirectly, or with his said partner, Frederick Lee, except as hereinafter set forth.

III

That said Brittin further states to the Senate that on or about Thursday, February 1, he became advised, through the newspaper and general report, that Mr. MacCracken had been called before the Senate committee, and that it was probable that various documents and files in the office of the said MacCracken would be required and requisitioned by the said committee. That thereafter, without consultation with anyone, acting solely on his own initiative, and without mature reflection, the said Brittin conceived the idea that it was possible that there might be personal papers and documents inadvertently present among the papers and documents of the Northwest Airways, Inc., in the said office of the said MacCracken & Lee, on account of the somewhat loose and general way in which the said Brittin had looked after his papers in said office while carrying on a business routine therein, and which personal papers ought to be removed and not be made public in connection with the examination of the papers of the Northwest Airways by the Senate committee. That the said Brittin immediately sought to get in touch with the said firm, and, failing therein, immediately went personally to the offices of the said firm in the said National Press Building for the purpose of examining the papers and records of the Northwest Airways there present, to see whether there were included there among any personal letters, papers, or other documents belonging to the said Brittin and having no connection with the said Northwest Airways papers and documents properly belonging in the MacCracken & Lee file of the Northwest Airways as requested by the Senate committee.

That upon arrival at the office of MacCracken & Lee around midday on February 1, 1934, the said Brittin asked to see Mr. MacCracken and was advised by the office clerk that Mr. MacCracken was engaged. Thereupon the said Brittin asked to see Mr. Lee, and, upon being permitted to see Mr. Lee, he advised Mr. Lee of the purpose of his visit, stating he desired to examine the so-called "Northwest Airways papers" for the purpose of ascertaining whether they embraced any of his own personal papers or documents, and if so, he desired to remove such personal papers from the said file so that the same would not become public if and when the said papers properly in said file should come into the possession of the said Senate committee. That the said Lee advised the said Brittin that such request was proper, and thereupon the said Lee produced, or caused to be produced, the said so-called "Northwest Airways file", which consisted of various papers and documents contained in a folder aggregating approximately a couple of inches in thickness. That thereupon and in the immediate presence of the said Lee, and upon the desk of the said Lee, the said Brittin hastily examined such papers, and laid aside from said papers five or six papers which the said Brittin then and there believed and still believes to have been his personal, private property, having no proper place in the MacCracken & Lee file of the said Northwest Airways and having no relevancy or pertinency concerning the purposes of the said Senate committee in investigating affairs of the Northwest Airways, Inc. That such papers thus removed from the said so-called "file" were then handed by the said Brittin to the said Lee, who thereupon made a cursory examination thereof, stating that he desired to be sure that the papers removed were such papers as personally belonged to the said Brittin and were not papers properly in the possession of the said MacCracken & Lee, and that after an examination thereof the said Lee returned the said five or six papers thus referred to to the said Brittin, stating that it seemed proper to the said Lee for the said Brittin to have such papers, and as the said Brittin was in the habit of accepting the opinion of the members of the firm on legal matters, he thought that his action was perfectly proper, and thereupon put said papers in his pocket and left the office of MacCracken & Lee and returned to his own office. Thereafter, without further examination of said papers, deeming them to be of no interest or consequence to any other person than himself, said Brittin tore the same up and deposited them in his office wastebasket in exactly the same way as he had been accustomed to dispose of other papers currently discarded from his existing office accumulations.

The said Brittin further states that his own examination of the said papers thus removed and destroyed was of the most cursory character, and was only sufficiently made to enable him to conclude that the nature of the said paper was with respect to it being private and personal or otherwise. That the said Brittin knows that the same had no reference to airway matters transacted through the office of MacCracken & Lee affecting the air mail contracts of the Northwest Airways. That the entire visit to the said offices of the said MacCracken & Lee and the removal and destruction of the said papers occupied not to exceed 15 minutes and was done by the said Brittin in a hurry, on impulse, and on his own initiative, without any particular reflection concerning the equivocal effect or appearance involved in such acts, and without any intention, directly or indirectly, on the part of said Brittin to impede or obstruct the Senate or its committee in its investigation or in any proposed examination into the affairs of the said Northwest Airways, Inc., which it might be desiring to carry on. That the removal and destruction of the said papers by the said Brittin were wholly due to feeling on the part of the said Brittin that the said papers had no place in the MacCracken & Lee file of the Northwest Airways, and in the honest belief that said Brittin had a proper right to protect his personal papers from being made public, in the event the papers and files of the said MacCracken & Lee should be turned over to the said Senate committee. That the said Brittin was not under subpena to appear before the Senate committee until February 2, subsequent to the transactions aforesaid.

That the said Brittin on February 1, 1934, received a telegram from the said William P. MacCracken under date of January 31, 1934, but whether before or after his visit to the office of MacCracken & Lee on February 1, said Brittin is unable to state. That on February 2, 1934, the said Brittin advised the said MacCracken that he was fully authorized to deliver to the Senate committee any and all papers referred to in or covered by the request of said Senate committee.

Said Brittin further states that his action in removing the said papers and the destruction thereof was without the knowledge, consent, or approval of the said Northwest Airways or any officer thereof, and that the said Brittin is wholly and individually responsible for what was done.

The said Brittin further states to the Senate committee that he regrets very deeply having removed the said papers from the said office of the said MacCracken & Lee, and the subsequent destruction of the same, as herein alleged; that he now fully appreciates that it would have been proper and effectual to have exhibited such papers to the said committee with a personal request that the same be eliminated from the papers and files involved, but that he had never before been connected with, or involved in, any Federal investigation or procedure, and was inexperienced in connection therewith.

The said Brittin further states that he was endeavoring to make arrangements to institute a search through the waste-paper receptacles of the said National Press Building to recover such papers aforesaid; but before any steps could be taken to that end, he was advised that the Department of Justice had already undertaken the same task. For the foregoing reasons it is physically impossible for said Brittin to now produce said papers so taken.

The said Brittin further states that he has not consciously withheld from this response any material fact which would be relevant to the matter now before the Senate, and that, in accordance therewith, he presents the foregoing as his response to the order to show cause heretofore issued by the President of the Senate under date of February 5, 1934.

L. H. BRITTIN.

SETH W. RICHARDSON,
ALFONS LANDA,
DAVIES, BEEBE, BUSICK & RICHARDSON,
Counsel, Washington, D.C.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Columbia, ss.

L. H. Brittin, being sworn, says he has read the foregoing response, and knows the contents thereof, and that the same are true, of his own knowledge.

L. H. BRITTIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me February 9, 1934.

MARGARET H. ROEDY,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Colonel Brittin, the statement just read was your statement in this proceeding, was it?

Colonel BRITTIN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And under your oath?

Colonel BRITTIN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Mr. Givvin stand up?

Mr. Givvin rose and stood in the area in front of the Vice President's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Givvin, you have been brought before the Senate, by its order, to show cause why you should not be punished for contempt of the Senate on account of the destruction and removal of certain papers, files, and memoranda from the files of William P. MacCracken, Jr., after a subpena requiring the production of such papers, files, and memoranda had been served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown by the report of the Special Committee on Investigation of Air Mail and Ocean Mail Contracts.

Were you present when Col. L. H. Brittin was standing just now and there was read to him and to the Senate Report No. 254, Seventy-third Congress, second session, parts 1 and 2, submitted February 2 and 5, 1934, respectively, and Senate Resolution 172, agreed to February 5, 1934?

Mr. GIVVIN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do you desire to have them read again for your information?

Mr. GIVVIN. No, sir; I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Have you anything to say in excuse or extenuation of your connection with or participation in the matters described in such report and resolution?

Mr. GIVVIN. Yes, sir; I have a statement to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Givvin, will you please be sworn?

The respondent, Gilbert Givvin, was thereupon duly sworn by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You may make your statement. Do you desire to have it read, or will you read it yourself?

Mr. GIVVIN. If I may, I will read it myself.

Mr. Givvin then advanced to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. GIVVIN. My name is Gilbert L. Givvin. Mr. Hanshue has already——

Mr. President, I expected Mr. Hanshue to make his statement first. Shall I just make this statement as I have it written down here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. Givvin proceeded to read his statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, we cannot hear the statement in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. KING. It cannot be heard in the second row.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why not have the clerk read it?

Mr. KING. I suggest that the respondent request the clerk to read his statement, if that meets the views of the respondent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that is done, the Chair will state that Mr. Givvin expected that Mr. Hanshue would make his statement first, and he refers to what Mr. Hanshue has to say in the matter; so it will be understood that his statement relates to Mr. Hanshue's statement.

Mr. GIVVIN. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the statement will be read by the clerk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NOTES COVERING MR. GIVVIN'S TESTIMONY

My name is Gilbert L. Givvin. Mr. Hanshue has already truthfully stated my present and past connections with the Western Air Express. Since March of 1933 my office has been in Washington, D.C., and my duties have been those stated by Mr. Hanshue. On Thursday, February 1, I received notice that Mr. Voorhes had called me from New York, while I was away from the hotel. I then returned the call, and Mr. Voorhees told me that Mr. Hanshue wanted to talk to me. Mr. Hanshue told me that he had received a wire from Mr. MacCracken in regard to his files and that he wanted to have me go over and see Mr. MacCracken, look at the files, and see what was in the files, including his personal files. I phoned Mr. MacCracken and told him that I had received a phone call from Mr. Hanshue and wanted to know when I could come over to see him. He told me that he had not had lunch, that he would be busy after lunch and asked me to call him back about 4:30. At about 4:30 I called him, asked him if it would be convenient for me to come over, and he said that it would. Because of the weather I took a street car and arrived at Mr. MacCracken's office at about 5:10 p.m. Mr. MacCracken was engaged at the time I arrived at his office. Shortly after that the men who were in his office left. Mr. MacCracken came out, saw me, and brought me in his office. Mr. MacCracken asked me if I wanted to look over the Western Air Express files, and then rang for his secretary and asked her to bring them in. When the files were placed on Mr. MacCracken's desk, he took the top file, opened it on his lap and began to take out letters which he indicated, and which I believed, did not belong there. He hastily went through the entire file and as he found letters which neither he nor I regarded as being properly in the file, he laid them aside. After he had gone through the entire file in that way, I took the letters which he had removed from the file, rolled them up, put them in my pocket, and went back to the hotel. Just as I left, Mr. MacCracken said, "You understand, of course, if I am interrogated I will have to tell the committee about these." My reply was, "Yes; of course."

When I reached the hotel, I put all of the papers in an envelop, addressed it to Mr. Voorhes at New York City, had the necessary stamps put thereon, and dropped it in a box at the mail window.

On Friday evening, February 2, at about 7 p.m., I received a telegram from Mr. Voorhes to the effect that he was coming to Washington, leaving New York at 5:30 p.m. He arrived here a little after 10 o'clock and handed me a sealed envelop, which he said contained all of the papers which I had mailed up to him. The following morning I took the papers, without opening the envelop to Mr. Patterson's office. I remained in Mr. Patterson's office until about 11 a.m., when the committee convened, except for a period of about 20 minutes when I went out to get a cup of coffee and left the papers with Mr. Patterson's secretary. I then took the papers to the committee room, and after a while the committee began to assemble and I was soon called upon to take the stand. I laid the papers in the sealed envelop on the committee table, where they remained until I was requested to open the envelop and to testify with regard to some of the papers. I was examined at length, or for about 2 hours, by the committee, and told them all that I knew about the matter. My testimony appears in volume 36, report of the proceedings, and commences at page 5339 and ends at 5393. From the examination I made of the papers during the course of my examination, I am morally certain that they were the identical papers, and all of them, that I mailed to New York. At the time I received the papers from Mr. MacCracken I did not know that they were under subpena, and I did not realize that I was doing anything wrong in removing them from his office, but as I understand the matter now I am satisfied that I should not have taken them and very much regret having done so. I can only say that I felt at the time that if there was anything improper about receiving the papers, Mr. MacCracken would have advised me to that effect. I realize now that I made a mistake in considering that all the letters which were removed from Mr. MacCracken's files were personal in character, but this error was due to my long experience as a private secretary when letters of this character were always classified by me and by others in the office as personal letters as distinguished from company letters. I also realize that I made a mistake in not exercising my own judgment as to the papers to be removed from the files instead of relying upon the judgment of Mr. MacCracken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Givvin, the statement just read by the Chief Clerk was your own statement in this proceeding?

Mr. GIVVIN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And under your oath?

Mr. GIVVIN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Hanshue, please stand up.

Mr. Hanshue rose in the area in front of the Vice President's disk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Hanshue, you have been brought before the Senate, by its order, to show cause why you should not be punished for contempt of the Senate on account of the destruction and removal of certain papers, files, and memoranda from the files of William P. MacCracken, Jr., after a subpena requiring the production of such papers, files, and memoranda had been served upon William P. MacCracken, Jr., as shown by the report of the Special Committee on Investigation of Air Mail and Ocean Mail Contracts.

There has just been read in the Senate by the clerk Senate Report No. 254, Seventy-third Congress, second session, parts 1 and 2, submitted February 2 and 5, 1934, respectively, and Senate Resolution 172, agreed to February 5, 1934. Were you present, sir, when those reports and resolution were read?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do you desire to have them read again?

Mr. HANSHUE. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Have you anything to say in excuse or extenuation of your connection with or participation in the matters described in such report and resolution?

Mr. HANSHUE. I have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will you please be sworn, sir.

The respondent, Harris M. Hanshue, was thereupon duly sworn by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You may make any statement you desire.

Mr. NEBEKER. Mr. President, may I say that Mr. Hanshue has prepared a written statement. He is in very bad voice, and I am sure the Senate could not hear him; and I find, in looking through the statement, that there are some interlineations which in all probability would bother the clerk; so, if I may be permitted to do so, I should like to read the statement for Mr. Hanshue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. You may come to the desk and read it.

Mr. Nebeker thereupon stood at the Secretary's desk and read as follows:

My name is Harris M. Hanshue. I reside in Los Angeles, Calif. I am the president of Western Air Express and have been such ever since it was organized in 1925. I am 52 years of age and have been engaged in air transportation operations since the spring of 1926. I frequently visit New York City, and while there I make my headquarters at the offices of North American Aviation, 1775 Broadway. I was in New York on Thursday, February 1, of this year, and was stopping at Essex House, 160 Central Park South. Between 9:30 and 10 o'clock a.m. of that day I received a night letter dated January 31, 1934, from Mr. William P. MacCracken, Jr., which I now produce and read. It is as follows:

"I have today been subpenaed to produce before the Black committee all papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relating to air and ocean mail contracts. Insofar as these involve confidential communications between us as attorney and client, I have felt it my duty to assert and have asserted the privilege which the law places around such communications. This privilege may be waived only by you as client. The committee has requested me to inquire whether you desire to waive this privilege and authorize me to make these documents available to the committee investigators. Please wire your decision.

"WILLIAM P. MACCRACKEN, JR."

The papers, memoranda, correspondence, etc., referred to in Mr. MacCracken's night letter were those which had accumulated in Mr. MacCracken's files during the time that he was attorney for Western Air Express, from the inception of the company in 1925 until August 1926, and from January 1930 to about July 1932. During the time that Mr. MacCracken was attorney for the company it was my practice whenever I was in Washington, D.C., to make use of his office for the purpose of dictating letters, telegrams, etc., both of a personal character as well as such as were connected with the operation of the company. The correspondence, other than such as was of a personal character, consisted of the usual correspondence between the company and its attorney, Mr. MacCracken. I understood from Mr. MacCracken's night letter that there was no question as to my right to refuse to release him from the privilege which he claimed, but I did not desire to obstruct the committee in any way, and sometime between 10 and 11 o'clock a.m. called Mr. MacCracken by telephone. I told him that I had received his night letter, and I asked him when he would have to advise the committee in regard to the release. He told me that he thought I would have a day or two, and I asked him if Gilbert Givvin would have an opportunity to look through the files and see if in the files there were any of my personal papers. Mr. MacCracken told me that it would be all right for Mr. Givvin to look through the files and to have Givvin get in touch with him.

After completing the conversation with Mr. MacCracken I asked Mr. S. W. Voorhes, the traveling auditor of Western Air Express, then staying at the Essex House in connection with business of the company and who was present during my telephone conversation with Mr. MacCracken, to get Mr. Givvin on the wire. Mr. Voorhes put the call through to Mr. Givvin at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C., but Mr. Givvin did not answer. Between 12:30 and 1 o'clock Mr. Givvin returned the call and Mr. Voorhes turned the call over to me. I told Mr. Givvin that I had received a night letter from Bill MacCracken in regard to his files and that I had arranged to have him examine them and that I wanted him to advise me whether there was any correspondence of a personal nature in the files.

Mr. Givvin is the representative in Washington, D.C., in connection with matters which the company has from time to time with the Post Office Department concerning the flying of the mails, schedules, stops, delays in mail due to weather, and other causes, and accounting procedure; and with the Department of Commerce in connection with the airway, beacons, radiobeacons, and radio generally, weather, conditions of the flying fields, equipment, and rules and regulations of the Department in connection with personnel and the operation and maintenance of airplanes and engines. He has been employed in this capacity at Washington, D.C., since the spring of 1933. He was with me as secretary from the spring of 1931 until he came to Washington.

The next morning, February 2, 1934, Mr. Voorhes told me that he had received a package of correspondence from Givvin. I asked him what was in the package, and he said that he had not examined it, but it looked like some personal correspondence that was in MacCracken's files. Later on in the afternoon I learned that some report had been given out to the effect that the Western Air Express had taken papers from Mr. MacCracken's files, and I then, for the first time, made a hasty examination of the papers. They were in a bureau drawer in Voorhes' room. On glancing over the papers I saw that in the main, although addressed to my personal friends, they referred to business matters. I put the papers back into the original envelop and Mr. Voorhes and I took them to the offices of the North American Aviation to get a new envelop to send them back in because the old envelop could not be used. In my presence Voorhes put the papers in a new envelop, addressed it to Givvin, and sealed it. Upon consideration I thought it would be better instead of mailing the envelop to have Voorhes personally deliver it. Voorhes left the office hoping to catch the 4:30 train to Washington, D.C., with the understanding that if he missed that train he was to take the next train. Mr. Voorhes left New York on the 5:30 train. With the exception of the short time I was looking over the papers they were kept in Mr. Voorhes' room, and so far as I have been able to ascertain by diligent inquiry the only other persons besides myself who were in that room during the day were Voorhes, Charley Franz, division superintendent of Western Air Express domiciled at Denver, Colo., and A. E. Coblan, a newspaper friend of mine. I did not take a single paper out of the files, and to the best of my knowledge no one else did so, and certainly no one did so with my consent or under my instructions. Mr. Voorhes has told me that he was in the room after the receipt of the envelop all the time with the exception of two short intervals. While Voorhes was away the first time, Mr. Franz was in the room alone; and when he was away the second time, Mr. Franz, Mr. Coblan, and I were in the room. Mr. Voorhes and Mr. Franz are here and are available as witnesses.

Immediately after Voorhes left for Washington to take the papers, I wired MacCracken as follows:

"Re telegram. You are hereby authorized to permit Senate Air Mail and Ocean Mail Investigating Committee to inspect all papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relative to air mail contracts held by this company.

"WESTERN AIR EXPRESS, INC.,
"HARRIS M. HANSHUE, President."

At the same time I wired MacCracken I sent a wire to Senator BLACK, as follows:

"We have today sent the following telegram to William P. MacCracken, Jr.:

"'Re telegram. You are hereby authorized to permit Senate Air Mail and Ocean Mail Investigating Committee to inspect all papers, memoranda, correspondence, maps, copies of telegrams relative to air mail contracts held by this company.

"'WESTERN AIR EXPRESS, INC.,
"'HARRIS M. HANSHUE, President.'"

About an hour later I received the following wire from Senator BLACK, and also opened and read an identical wire from Senator BLACK to Voorhes:

WASHINGTON, D.C., February 2, 1934.

HARRIS M. HANSHUE,
The Essex House, 160 Central Park South:

Certain papers from the office of Mr. MacCracken have been sent to you. You are hereby notified to send these or bring these in the original package immediately to the Senate committee room no. 101, Senate Office Building. Please wire reply.

HUGO L. BLACK, Chairman.

A few minutes later two men came to my room and said they had a subpena from the Black committee directing me to appear before the committee and to return the papers. I told them that the papers mentioned in the subpena had been given to Mr. Voorhes, who was then on the train returning them to Washington. The gentlemen then withdrew the subpena and left my room. I thereupon wired Senator BLACK to the effect that I had issued instructions to return all papers immediately.

I want to make it perfectly plain that the papers were not removed from Mr. MacCracken's files at my request or with my knowledge. I did not know that they had been sent to New York until they arrived, and I ordered them returned as soon as I learned that they were wanted by the committee. I call attention to the fact that Mr. Voorhes was on his way to Washington with the papers before I received Senator BLACK's wire and also before the subpenas were brought to my room.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Hanshue, the statement just read is your statement made under oath, is it?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest that if there is any other evidence the respondents desire to offer in this connection they should be given that opportunity.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President, we are utterly at sea as to the procedure here. If the Senate desires to have Mr. Brittin testify or ask him any questions or desires that he be interrogated concerning any matters, he is here for that purpose. We are not forcing him on the Senate. We have made a statement under oath as to what we understand the facts to be. If the Senate is satisfied that properly represents Mr. Brittin's position, it satisfies us. If he is to be interrogated further by us, we are willing to interrogate him. If the Senate wishes to interrogate him, he is here for the purpose of any interrogation it wishes to make. We are at sea, as I have said, as to what the Senate desires by way of procedure.

Mr. BLACK. If Colonel Brittin desires to testify, there are several questions the committee would like to ask him.

Mr. BRITTIN. I will be very glad to testify, Senator BLACK.

EXAMINATION OF L. H. BRITTIN

By Mr. BLACK:

Question. Colonel Brittin, when you testified before the Senate committee several days ago you stated that you obtained from Mr. MacCracken's office certain letters of a personal nature—five or six letters—and that you later took them to your office and destroyed them. May I ask to whom those letters were addressed?

Answer. Senator, as I explained to the committee at the time you asked me that question, I felt that these were of a personal nature; they were not properly in Mr. MacCracken's files, and I felt that that question ought not to be asked me.

Question. Were they addressed to Mr. Lilly?

Answer. I do not know.

Question. You do not know whether they were addressed to Mr. Lilly or not?

Answer. What I want to say is this, that I am not familiar now to whom these letters were addressed. I examined them very casually and just took out of the files—they were papers and memoranda.

Question. Do you know whether any of them were addressed to Mr. Lilly?

Answer. I do not, Senator.

Question. Who is Mr. Lilly?

Answer. Mr. Lilly at one time was president of the Northwest Airways. At the present time he is one of the directors of the Northwest Airways.

Question. Did they have marked in letters with a pencil on any of them "MacCracken's copy"?

Answer. No, sir; I do not think they did. I do not remember any such thing.

Question. Will you look at this letter and see if that——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the witness not speak a little louder? It is very difficult to hear him over here.

The WITNESS. I will try to do so.

By Mr. BLACK:

Question. Will you look at the letter which is handed you [handing respondent a letter] and see if this is one of the letters that were taken from the files and torn up?

Answer (examining letter). This is one of my letters, Senator BLACK, to Mr. Lilly, but as to whether or not this came out of Mr. MacCracken's files, I do not know.

Question. Do you remember whether or not you did take any such letter as that out of Mr. MacCracken's files?

Answer. No, Senator; I do not. I should like to say, in explanation of that question this, that, as I stated in this answer of mine, I occupied Mr. MacCracken's office for a number of months; that I wrote there a great many letters and a great many memoranda of various character at various times. These papers—as I went out of town, went out of the city, made trips, and things of that kind, my papers found their way into Mr. MacCracken's files.

I also want to say that at various times I recovered these papers from the files. I asked the girls to gather up any stuff of mine that there might be around. On account of the fact that I did not examine these papers very carefully and read them through, just glanced at them in a cursory sort of a way, I am unable to tell you. I am sorry; I tried to recall that when I was before the committee, but was unable to do so.

Question. Will you look at that letter and see if you can identify who wrote in there with a pencil the name "MacCracken"? Do you recognize the handwriting?

Answer (examining letter.) This looks as though it was my handwriting.

Question. Is that your handwriting?

Answer. I think that the word "MacCracken" is my handwriting. I do not think the word "copy" is.

Question. What was the object in putting on that letter "MacCracken's copy"?

Answer. I do not think I wrote the word "copy", Senator; but the object probably in writing the word "MacCracken" on this letter was that this matter I thought it would interest him.

Question. Was it the object to show that that particular letter should be put into Mr. MacCracken's files?

Answer. No, Senator; this had nothing to do with Mr. MacCracken's files. It was not a proposition; this did not cover a matter that we were handling through Mr. MacCracken's office.

Question. Who wrote on that the word "copy"? Whose handwriting is that?

Answer. I do not know whose handwriting that is.

Question. It is also written with pencil, is it not?

Answer. It is also written with pencil; yes.

Question. Can you state that that letter was not one of the letters that you took out of the files?

Answer. I do not think that it was.

Question. Why?

Answer. Because letters of this—well, I did not examine these letters very carefully that I took out, but I do not think this is one of them.

Question. When you testified before the committee you did not state, did you, Colonel, that you had torn up any other letters the same day that you tore up the letters that came from Mr. MacCracken's files?

Answer. No; I did not. I did not testify to that at all. It never entered my mind. The letters I was tearing up in my office were in connection with the rearrangement of my files, in connection with the sorting of material that I brought in from check rooms and different places where I had been keeping it.

Question. What is the date of that letter?

Answer. The date of this letter is August 15.

Question. That is your letter, is it not?

Answer. Yes, sir; I wrote this letter.

Question. You wrote it?

Answer. I did.

Question. It relates to air mail contracts, does it not?

Answer. It relates to air mail matters of the Northwest Airways, Senator.

Question. I hand you another letter dated August 16, 1933, and ask you if you recognize that letter?

Answer. Yes, sir; I wrote this letter.

Question. Is that a letter that was also in Mr. MacCracken's file?

Answer. I do not think it was, Senator.

Question. Where was it?

Answer. It might have come from some accumulations of mine that were taken from other sources.

Question. But where did it come from?

Answer. I cannot tell you where it came from. I do not know.

Question. You only destroyed it 4 or 5 days ago?

Answer. I cannot help it. As I explained before, I moved into this office of mine, and for the first time in 8 years I had an office where I could file things to keep them. I got together the papers which I had been using and storing in various places and brought them together and eliminated some and set others aside as a basis for a filing system. I handled a great many papers here. I do not know—I cannot identify these letters and tell you exactly where they came from. I do not know.

Question. They are your letters, are they not?

Answer. Yes, sir; they are my letters. There is no question about that.

Question. Will you look at this letter of August 9, 1933, and see if that is your letter, and say to whom it is addressed and whether or not it is about air mail business?

Answer. Yes, sir; I wrote this letter.

Question. Is it about air mail business?

Answer. Yes, sir; this is about air mail business.

Question. You do not consider that personal, do you, Colonel?

Answer. I consider a letter of this kind, Senator, as a personal communication between me and the person to whom I wrote it. It deals with air mail matters. There is no question about that.

Question. To whom was it written?

Answer. It was written to a friend of mine.

Question. To whom was it written?

Answer. Must I answer that?

Question. Yes. We want to know to whom the letter was written.

Answer. Well, this letter was written to a personal friend. I am perfectly willing to give the committee the name of the man in confidence.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We cannot hear the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the witness try to speak a little louder? The Chair will ask the Senator from Alabama to repeat this question.

By Mr. BLACK:

Question. The letter is addressed "Dear Ben." Who is the gentleman to whom it was addressed? It is about air mail business, is it not?

Answer. It deals with air mail matters; yes.

Question. To whom was it written?

Answer. Senator, it was a letter to a private friend of mine, and I would prefer not to disclose his name.

Question. Colonel Brittin, it is about nothing in the world but air mail business, is it?

Answer. It deals with a proposal to rearrange our schedule. The man that I wrote that letter to had nothing—he had nothing to do with it.

Question. You were telling him about different schedules you were trying to get at the Post Office Department in order to increase the payments of your air mail contracts, were you not?

Answer. I was telling him about the schedules I had at the Post Office Department for the purpose of better developing the service in our part of the country.

Question. You were trying to get an increase of 952 miles per day in the schedule of the Northwest Airways, were you not?

Answer. I would have to look at the letter again to verify that.

Question. I hand you the letter again.

Answer. This letter proposes this. This letter does not cover increased pay to the Northwest Airways. It is this: I had in mind to propose that the Post Office Department authorize the Northwest Airways to take on this enlarged operation for 5 percent less air mail pay than we received in the month of May. What I was proposing there was the practicability of additional free service in our part of the United States.

Question. What I want to get at is in order that the Senate may understand the matter before I ask the question as to whom the letter was written. There is no subject of any kind or type mentioned in that letter except the air mail business or the extension of lines?

Answer. Yes.

Question. The Post Office contracts?

Answer. That is right.

Question. The letter relates solely to them?

Answer. Yes.

Question. To whom was it written?

Answer. It is a perfectly innocent matter. I wrote this to Mr. Ben Myers.

Question. Who is Mr. Ben Myers?

Answer. He is a friend of mine that was employed in the Post Office Department.

Question. Where?

Answer. In Chicago.

Question. In Chicago?

Answer. Yes. And I would like to say in connection with that testimony that Mr. Myers declined to give me the information which I suggested in this letter.

Question. Will you look at this letter of August 28, 1933, addressed to Mr. Lilly, and see if you recognize that as your letter?

Answer. Yes; I wrote this letter.

Question. You wrote that letter, to whom?

Answer. To Mr. Lilly.

Question. Is there anything in that letter of a personal nature, or is that with reference to air mail?

Answer. This is with reference to air mail.

Question. Will you look at this letter of September 28, 1933? Just before that, who is Mr. Lilly?

Answer. As stated previously, Senator, he was the president of Northwest Airways. He is now a director. [After examining letter:] Yes; I wrote this letter.

Question. To Mr. Lilly?

Answer. No, sir; to Mr. K. R. Ferguson.

Question. Who is Mr. K. R. Ferguson?

Answer. He is the traffic manager of the Northwest Airways.

Question. Is that also about air mail business?

Answer. It is more particularly about the passenger business on our lines. It has to do with the question of a consolidated ticket office for passenger business in Chicago.

Question. And it also has to do with conferences that have been held by employees at the Post Office Department here in Washington; does it not?

Answer. Yes; there is a single reference to that, but the principal subject of that letter is air passenger transportation.

Question. I send you now a letter of September 28, 1933, and ask you if you can identify it.

Answer. Senator BLACK, this is a copy of the letter you previously gave me.

Question. That is a copy of the same one?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. All right. I send you a memorandum and ask if you recognize the memorandum.

Answer (after examining paper). Yes; I wrote this memorandum.

Question. To whom is it written?

Answer. To myself. It is purely informative as a memorandum, private, for my own personal use.

Question. It pertains to an air mail program; does it not?

Answer. Oh, yes; it pertains to air mail, but it simply covers information that I put down on this as a reminder, as a plan of action.

Question. I send you a telegram dated September 19, 1933, to Mr. A. H. Brown, of Brown & Jones, Securities Building, Billings, Mont. I will ask you if you recognize that copy of a telegram?

Answer (after examining paper). Yes; I sent that wire.

Question. That was written, was it not, from the office of MacCracken & Lee?

Answer. Why, I would think so from the annotation down here at the bottom that the message is charged to an account which I had at their office, and which I reimbursed them every so often for; but it had nothing to do with any matters that were handled through Mr. MacCracken.

Question. Colonel Brittin, you recognize that, do you not, as one of the papers that was taken from that file?

Answer. No, sir; I do not.

Question. Where was it taken from?

Answer. I cannot tell you, Senator. I have been handling in the last 2 or 3 weeks, principally in the last 2 weeks, hundreds of papers. I do not know where that came from.

Question. You say you know that one did not come from there, do you?

Answer. You asked me if I thought—if this thing did come from there.

Question. Yes.

Answer. I said, "No."

Question. You said it did not?

Answer. No. Then you asked me where it came from, Senator, and I said I could not tell you.

Question. You could not say; but you do know, do you not, that it was originally in the office of MacCracken & Lee, because it was sent from there and charged to their account?

Answer. No, sir; it was not charged to their account in that respect. Now, I should like to explain something here.

I went in and out of MacCracken's office. I sent telegrams from there, telegrams that had nothing whatever to do with Mr. MacCracken's business; but as a matter of personal accommodation to me those telegrams were carried on a suspense memorandum at his office, and every once a month they were sent to my office at St. Paul, and my office paid the bill; but that had to do with telegrams. It had to do with postage.

Question. Well, it was written in his office, was it not?

Answer. Why, I wrote a lot of letters in his office; certainly.

Question. Was that telegram written in his office?

Answer. I do not know whether it was written in his office or not.

Question. What is your best judgment?

Answer. Why, I would make a guess that it was.

Question. Are you able to give the Senate the name of one person to whom any of these letters were written that you state you remember getting out of their file?

Answer. No, sir; I am not.

By Mr. KING:

Question. Did you examine these letters which you took out of Mr. MacCracken's office before you removed them?

Answer. Not very carefully, Senator.

Question. Did you examine them at all?

Answer. I just glanced at them.

Question. Do you not remember the names of any persons to whom they were addressed?

Answer. No, Senator; I do not. I recognize the fact that that is a weak answer, but it is the truth. I do not.

Question. Why did you remove these letters?—because, obviously, they are not personal in character.

Answer. Those—which letters? These here?

Question. Those that have been exhibited to you.

Answer. These were not removed from his office, I do not believe.

Question. Where did they come from if they were not removed from Mr. MacCracken's files?

Answer. I think, to make a guess, that they came from the accumulations of mine that I was assembling together in my office in 1090 National Press Building.

As stated in this response of mine, I had absolutely no office in Washington. I was living at these hotels. I was trying to carry on my correspondence in my hotel room. I went down to Mr. MacCracken's office and used his office for a while just exactly the same as I would use my hotel room. I used the office of Aeronautical Radio for a little while in exactly the same way.

Now, I accumulated papers at this place and that place and the other place. I even had them checked at some of the check rooms; and then I brought them together, and at last had an office of my own, and bought a file for this office, a three-drawer file, and one of these drawers I used to store stationery in and the other two to file my correspondence in; and I took all this mass of stuff that I accumulated from every place in Washington that I had been, and I sorted it out and eliminated a lot of it, tore it up, and threw it in the wastebasket. It never occurred to me that there was anything wrong with that. I had not been subpenaed. The papers in my office have been there, gathered together, since the time that I leased that office, and no demand had ever been made upon me for any of these papers. Now, I was engaged in the business of building the first filing system that I had ever had in this town for 8 years.

Question. You knew, did you not, Colonel Brittin, that Mr. MacCracken was under subpena, and that the subpena called for the production of all letters, correspondence, and memoranda in his office relating to air mail and ocean mail contracts?

Answer. I had no definite, specific, legal knowledge of that. I picked it up as I could, and then from this telegram that I received.

Question. Exactly; and so, when you went to his office for the purpose of removing certain correspondence, memoranda, and documents, you knew that Mr. MacCracken had been subpenaed, and that the subpena called for the production of the memoranda, correspondence, and documents that were in his office, did you not?

Answer. I knew whatever the information was that was given to me in that telegram. Then I went to Mr. MacCracken's office——

Question. You have answered my question, if you will pardon me, Colonel. You knew that the letters or correspondence which you took from his office related to air mail and ocean mail contracts, did you not?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Did you not read them sufficiently for that purpose?

Answer. No, Senator.

Question. What did they relate to, Colonel?

Answer. Well, they related to subjects that I wrote to my friends. In every letter, I suppose, that I have ever written in the last—certainly the last 6 years—I have always, probably, alluded in some way or other to the struggles that the Northwest Airways was making to develop a northern transcontinental line across the United States in competition with some of these others.

Question. Then you did examine the correspondence that you took from his office sufficiently to determine to what they related, did you not?

Answer. No, sir; I did not.

Question. Did you not state, just now——

Answer. No; if the Senator will pardon me, what I said was this: That I do not suppose that there is a letter that I have written in the last 6 years to my intimate friends that I have not mentioned in that letter in some way, along with other subjects, the fight that I have been making to try and carry Northwest Airways across the northern part of the United States, because this work of mine in trying to develop this company was so close to me that it was part of my life, and I went into—nothing occurred in the way of a letter or anything of that kind that I did not mention somewhere the struggle that I was making to try and build this company up to where I thought it ought to be.

Question. When were you in Mr. MacCracken's office last before knowing that he was under subpena?

Answer. May I refer to my notes?

Question. If your memory does not serve you. Did you keep notes of every time you went to Mr. MacCracken's office?

Answer. No. I made an investigation in the last 2 or 3 days to see if I could not find out from some source or other these dates because I have no memory for dates at all. This is about the only way I could do it.

Question. All right.

Answer (after examining notes). The last time I was in Mr. MacCracken's office was either January 31 or February 1; I do not know which.

Question. And when was it that you went in there and removed some papers?

Answer. January 31 or February 1; I cannot tell you which day.

Question. When were you in there before that?

Answer. Oh, I was not in there before that for a month or 6 weeks or quite a while before that. May I state what I was doing for the last——

Question. No; I am not interested in that. I am trying to find out when you were in Mr. MacCracken's office last before the day when you removed these papers from his office, or papers from his office.

Answer. I cannot tell you that; but I am very certain that it was considerably over a month or 6 weeks before that, because December 7 I traced down and found out that I left Washington to go to St. Paul. I stayed in St. Paul until the 6th of January.

Question. I am not inquiring about that. I am willing to accept your word as to that.

Answer. I am trying to answer the Senator's question in detail.

Question. When was it you dearned, with reference to the hour you went into Mr. MacCracken's office and took papers out, that these papers were under subpena and that he was under subpena to produce these papers?

Answer. Sometime the same day.

Question. Were you in Washington the day before—I mean, the day before you went into his office and removed papers?

Answer. Yes; I was in Washington the day before.

Question. You did not go in and take out any papers then?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Or the day before that?

Answer. No, sir.

Question. Were these the only papers that you have taken out of Mr. MacCracken's office within the past 5 or 6 months?

Answer. Yes, sir—oh, within the last 5 or 6 months?

Question. Yes.

Answer. No; I would not say that, but these are the last papers that I have taken out of Mr. MacCracken's office within the last 30 days, or something like that. Not within the last 5 or 6 months; no.

Question. Did you have any other papers in there other than those relating to the air mail?

Answer. Yes.

Question. I will ask you one more question: Can you give the name of any single person to whom any letter was addressed which you removed from Mr. MacCracken's files?

Answer. I am sorry, Senator, but I could not.

Question. Can you give the subject which was treated of in any letter, paper, or memorandum that you took from his file? Can you give the subject to which it referred?

Answer. I have a rather rough idea about the general purport or information of that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Louder.

The WITNESS. I have a general idea about what the purport of those were.

Mr. KING. That is all, Colonel, so far as I am concerned.

EXAMINATION BY COUNSEL FOR THE RESPONDENT

By Mr. RICHARDSON:

Question. A few questions, Colonel.

Answer. Yes, Mr. Richardson.

Question. How did you carry around from place to place this correspondence of yours during the time that you were doing this routine development?

Answer. Oh, I carried it in envelops, I carried it in packages, I carried it in brief cases, sometimes in paper bundles.

Question. Was there any distinction made in the office of MacCracken & Lee, Colonel, between your papers as being personal or being Airways papers?

Answer. No; I do not think there was. I think it was all dumped into the same general file. I think that anything that emanated from me, whether it was personal or not, I think, just as a matter of fact, they picked it up and they put it in the files; and when I came back I tried to recover what I felt was mine and went away with it.

Question. What files have you now in your office at 1090 National Press Building?

Answer. I have got a full and complete set of files now, the first time I have ever had it.

Question. Have you ever been asked to produce any of those files?

Answer. No, sir; not in any form, shape, or manner.

Reexamination by Mr. BLACK:

Question. Just one or two other questions, Colonel. I want to get this absolutely clear before the Senate. This date that you went down to Mr. MacCracken's office and got those papers was on the 31st of January or the 1st of February of this year; was it not?

Answer. That was my testimony, sir.

Question. Just about a week ago?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. Do you want the Senate to understand that at this time, a week later, you cannot remember the name of a single person to whom any single one of these letters was addressed that you took from the files?

Answer. That is absolutely true; and in explanation of that proposition I want to say this, that in going through these papers hurriedly I did not take the time to go into them in detail to establish that fact, but I did wish to go through them and recognize the fact that in a general nature they had no business in Mr. MacCracken's files, and they were there purely by accident. They had absolutely nothing to do with the Northwest Airways file of MacCracken & Lee. They had nothing to do with anything that we transacted through Mr. MacCracken's office, directly or indirectly.

Question. But they did have something to do with air mail?

Answer. There is not a letter that I have written in the past 6 years, as I stated before, that did not have in it some reference to the Northwest Airways, or the fight that our company was making to establish a line across the northern part of the United States in competition with the other lines that we were up against.

Question. May I not ask you, Colonel, if it is not true that the letters you removed were with reference to the efforts of the Northwest Airways to obtain the cooperation of the Post Office Department in forcing a sale of the National Parks Airways to the Northwest Airways?

Answer. I told you, Senator BLACK, that I do not know.

Question. You do not know whether they were or not?

Answer. No; I do not know. I cannot tell you who these letters were addressed to. I have repeated that time and again.

Question. Yes. Just one other question.

You testified before the Senate special committee on last Friday, did you not, that you took these particular letters that you got out of Mr. MacCracken's files, took them to your office, and tore them into pieces and threw them in the waste-paper basket?

Answer. I testified to this—that I took about a half a dozen letters out of Mr. MacCracken's files, which I felt had no place in his file, had nothing to do with any matters that we were transacting there. They had to do with the personal problems that I was confronted with. I took those down to my office, which was on the floor below, walked in, tore them into a few pieces, and threw them into my waste-basket exactly as I would do with any other piece of paper that I wanted to dispose of. I made no particular effort to try and cover them up or burn them up or destroy them or hide them or anything of that kind.

Question. You did think, however, when you testified before the committee, did you not, Colonel, that they had been destroyed so that they could not be recovered? You testified to that, did you not?

Answer. I testified to this, Senator. I cannot answer that question "yes" or "no", because it is not answerable "yes" or "no." I testified before the committee this—that I tore these letters up because I felt that they had no place in the MacCracken file and because I did not feel that I wanted these letters to be given a public examination.

Question. All right. You did not testify before the committee on last week, nor give any indication, did you, Colonel, that you had torn up any other air mail letters that day and thrown them into the waste-paper basket?

Answer. No, Senator; because it never occurred to me at the time that I was before your committee that a statement of that kind was germane, because I was not under subpena.

You never asked me for any of the letters that I had on file in my office at 1090 National Press Building. They have been there all along. Nobody had made any effort to investigate them, or asked for them, or showed any interest in them at all, so tearing them up I did not think was of any importance.

Now, may I add this in answer to your question, if you will permit me to make this statement? I had in mind this: That the investigators of your committee previously had gone to St. Paul; had asked our people up there for our complete files. They so advised me, I think, when I was in Canada; I do not know whether when I was at Montreal or I was at Ottawa that they told me about that. I told them to give your people every assistance. You took over up there in our St. Paul file all of the letters of the Northwest Airways—hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of them. It never occurred to me that in this file of mine down here, which largely is a duplicate of any material that could be up there, that there was anything there that you were particularly interested in. What I was interested in doing was taking this great mass of papers that I had at my office and reducing them down to something—to the germane things that would go into the filing system that I was trying to build.

Question. You stated before the committee, did you not, that some of these letters were addressed to your secretary?

Answer. No, sir.

Question (continuing). That you took from Mr. MacCracken's office?

Answer. No, no; I did not say that.

Question. Were you not asked this question?—

To whom were these letters addressed that you took out?
Colonel BRITTIN. They were purely personal.
The CHAIRMAN. To whom were they addressed?
Colonel BRITTIN. Some of them were to my secretary.
The CHAIRMAN. Where?
Colonel BRITTIN. In St. Paul.

Answer. Yes; that refers to probably one telegram or two telegrams; something like that.

Question. All right. Then were you not asked:

To whom were the others addressed?
Colonel BRITTIN. Perhaps one or two telegrams, personal memorandums, and I think a couple of letters to my secretary.

That was what you testified before the committee; was it not?

Answer. I testified before the committee—the only person that I mentioned, I think, in connection with my testimony before the committee, was that one or two of these telegrams may have been addressed to my secretary, Miss Stein, in St. Paul.

Question. What is the secretary's name?

Answer. Miss Stein—S-t-e-i-n.

Question. What is the first name?

Answer. Camille.

Question. It is your recollection now that a part of the papers that you destroyed on that day were telegrams or letters addressed to Miss Stein?

Answer. No. I am taking this position, that I think that in this—I rather feel that one or two of these telegrams may have been addressed to her. I am doing my best to try and resurrect this.

Question. These letters that I have shown you that were found by the investigators in the mail sack or in the waste sack at the National Press Building, that you have identified, are all with reference to conferences, in the main, with the officials of the Post Office Department in Washington, are they not?

Answer. They have to do with matters connected with the Air Mail Service of the Northwest Airways.

Question. Yes; and the efforts of the Northwest Airways to get the Post Office Department down here to cooperate with the Northwest Airways to coerce——

Answer. No.

Question (continuing). The National Parks Airways into selling to the Northwest Airways?

Answer. No, sir. We have never made any efforts to try and coerce anybody. Now, that raises a question which I feel that I have a right to talk about——

Question. Certainly.

Answer. Because I do not know anything about legal procedure. I am not a lawyer, but I feel that an answer should be made on that point.

The Northwest Airways, Senator, started out here from St. Paul and Chicago to build an air line across the northern part of the United States that should be owned and controlled in the territory that we served. Now, during the last 5 or 6 years we have been able, after very great struggle against competing forces that were a great deal bigger than we ever were, to push that line out to Billings. Now, when we got out to Billings it was necessary for us to try and carry this line on across to Seattle, across to Spokane, because the channels of trade across the northern part of the United States go east and west, and this line had been organized to carry that, and we wanted to carry this service down through the Minneapolis and St. Paul gateway. At that point, when we got to Billings, and we were planning our extensions across to Helena, across to Missoula, across to Spokane and Seattle, we came in contact with the National Parks Air Line. A little while before that the Mead investigating committee of the House had a very careful analysis made of all the air mail lines in the United States, and that report recommended that certain lines be extended and others be eliminated, because it said that certain lines were serving a very valuable public interest, and there were other lines which they felt were not. Now, as the channels of trade in that country go east and west, and not north and south, and flow through the Minneapolis and St. Paul gateway, the Northwest Airways was developing a service there which was of very great value to the Northern States. The Mead committee had recommended, through Dr. Crane, who was a professor of transportation in Harvard University employed by that committee, that the National Park lines, which run north and south, should be one of these lines which they felt was not so valuable in the general plan of the air mail map.

Therefore the Northwest Airways did this: We went to the Post Office Department and said that in crossing that territory we were willing to buy the National Parks Air Lines at a reasonable price, and we were willing, after we bought that line, to take a reduction of the number of schedules that were operated over that line from two round trips a day down to one round trip a day, and then after the Northern Transcontinental was lighted from Seattle across to St. Paul we would pick that up and turn it around.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules questions cannot be asked from the floor.

Mr. LONG. I desire to make a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. LONG. Perhaps I am wrong about it, but I submit that the present statement is not in connection with the proceeding for contempt. It is merely spreading air line propaganda.

Mr. BRITTIN. May I explain to the Senator?

Mr. LONG. I was addressing my point of order to the Chair.

Mr. BRITTIN. Senator BLACK raised this question, that I was trying to coerce—that the Northwest Airways were trying to coerce another air mail line.

Mr. LONG. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BRITTIN. So I responded to that particular thing, and I felt, Senator, under that condition I had the right to acquaint Senator BLACK with the facts. Now, that is the explanation of that.

By Mr. BLACK:

Question. May I ask you if the facts are correctly stated in those letters which you wrote to Mr. Lilly?

Answer. Certainly they are correctly stated.

Question. All right.

By Mr. KING:

Question. You stated a few moments ago, in answer to a question propounded by Senator BLACK, that some of the papers you removed you did not care to have made public, that you did not want them subjected to public examination.

Answer. Yes, sir.

Question. Then you did examine the papers sufficiently to determine that fact, did you not?

Answer. No; I just glanced at them and recognized the fact that those were of a peculiarly personal nature.

Question. Is it not rather remarkable you should determine they were papers you did not care to submit to public examination, and yet you do not know to whom they were written?

Answer. I admit that is perhaps rather remarkable, but under the circumstances, the conditions under which this work has been carried on and the conditions under which these papers have been handled are such that I will have to stand on that question.

Mr. KING. That is all I care to ask.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I would like to inquire whether the letters you have exhibited to the witness are all the letters your investigators found in the waste-paper basket that can be traced directly or indirectly to any origin with Colonel Brittin?

Mr. BLACK. We will have the investigators on the stand and let them testify fully before we finish.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and other Senators that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. BLACK. Before that is done, I desire to ask that the letters which were identified be printed in the RECORD in order that we may have them available for the session tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

SEPTEMBER 19, 1933.

A. H. BROWN, BROWN & JONES,
Securities Building, Billings, Mont.:

Reference my previous telegram. If the Spokane Chamber of ——— will insist that the early extension of the Northwest Airways to Spokane is the only air mail service that will adequately meet their requirements and if it will urge the Postmaster General personally to use his influence to induce the National Parks Airlines to sell out to the Northwest Airways on a reasonable basis, so that National Parks present north and south mileage, which is not needed, can be turned around by us to fill in the gap between Billings and Spokane, which is needed, and if it will insist at the same time that pending this arrangement no further extensions be granted to National Parks, as such extensions will only complicate negotiations, I feel that we will have won a hundred percent victory.

BRITTIN.

WASHINGTON, D.C., August 16, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. LILLY: Since wiring you the other day advising against the purchase of any new equipment until the question of our rates and service had been definitely settled, I have had an opportunity to feel out informally certain officials of the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department on the question of new fast equipment.

The Post Office Department assures me that our present equipment is entirely satisfactory to them for the lines we are now operating. They go so far as to say that personally they do not think we would be justified in spending money for new-type ships under existing conditions. It is perfectly true that the Department is encouraging transcontinental operators to acquire fast equipment and speed up their schedules because of the time that can be saved with fast ships on the long transcontinental routes. But they are distinctly not encouraging the operators of feeder and territorial lines to acquire this equipment, because the saving in time on these routes is not so necessary as on the long transcontinentals, and for the additional reason that many changes in service may occur on these feeder and territorial routes when they are adjusted to the new appropriation.

However, the Department feels that if the program outlined in my letter of August 15 is realized and the Northwest Airways utilizes the National Parks mileage to get through to Seattle after a lighted airway has been established between the Twin Cities and Seattle, that then new fast equipment should be installed on this run, so that mail can be carried between the Pacific Northwest and Chicago with the same speed that it is carried on the other two transcontinental routes. But until this lighted airway is completed and the new service established the Department feels that there is no real need for fast ships on the lines we are operating at present.

The Commerce Department seems also satisfied with our present equipment so long as we operate our present routes. In the event that we should get through to Seattle and get a fully equipped airway constructed between the Twin Cities and Seattle they would expect us to put on new fast equipment comparable to that used by the other two transcontinental lines. They feel that the Post Office Department has more to say just now about what type of ships should be used on the various air mail runs than the Commerce Department.

Regarding the Lockhead Orien ship, the Department experts inform me in confidence that it does not develop in actual airline operation the high speeds or weight-carrying ability claimed for it by its salesmen. They state that aerodynamically it is now entirely satisfactory, but that its probable cost of operation would be considerably higher than the manufacturer's estimate when it is operated on schedule service. They also advise that several new ships are now being developed which may prove very interesting to the air mail lines.

In inducing Mr. Cisler to recommend the program outlined in my letter of August 15, which is based on a minimum reduction of our air mail rates, I have contended that the Northwest Airways cannot survive a continued reduction of 25 percent in air mail rates. I have continually stressed the point that the company required a certain gross air mail revenue to live, and, that, irrespective of rates per mile, this gross amount was indispensable to our existence. I have insisted that as long as we remained a territorial line we could not develop enough mail and passenger revenue to take pro rata reductions with the transcontinentals. But that when we got to the coast and could develop the loads with the other lines we could then operate under the same system of rates that they did. At present our problem should be considered separately from that of the other lines.

Now, if, in view of this "plea of poverty" and our insistent urge for special rates and minimum reductions, we announce that we are reequipping part of our line with new fast ships before the Department has even decided whether or not this part of our system shall survive or not, we would certainly find ourselves in an anomalous position before the Department if we attempted to protest any reductions in rates or service.

The national publicity which reached Washington at the time we contracted for the Electra, to the effect that Northwest Airways had purchased a large fleet of new ships at an expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars and would establish fast service this fall between the Pacific coast and Chicago to compete with United for transcontinental business, had a rather unfortunate effect on certain officials of the post office who felt that our air mail rates were already too high.

The fact that no airway could possibly be built across the mountains by fall and the additional fact that the story as printed wholly ignored the question of an air mail contract led both Departments to assume that we were prepared to furnish our own aids to navigation and go ahead irrespective of an air mail contract.

It took a good deal of explaining to reconcile this publicity with our contention that we could not take substantial reductions in rates and could not operate free service.

I cite this instance to illustrate the very delicate balance that always exists between the Department, with its arbitrary powers to fix rates and service on a moment's notice, and the air mail operator.

The foregoing further explains my telegraphic reply to your recent inquiry.

Please treat this letter as entirely personal and confidential.

Sincerely,

L. H. BRITTIN.

WASHINGTON, D.C., August 15, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. LILLY: After numerous conferences, covering practically every phase of the problem of reducing rates and service on the Northwest Airways to conform to the curtailed air mail appropriation, Supt. Stephen A. Cisler assured me yesterday that he is willing to make the following recommendations to the Postmaster General:

First. That new mileage rates be established on the lines now being operated by the Northwest Airways that will give the company 5 percent less gross air mail revenue than it received in May 1933.

Second. That the Post Office Department immediately initiate negotiations for the purchase of the National Parks Airlines by the Northwest Airways, in accordance with authority granted to the Department in the Watrus Act to consolidate air mail lines in the public interest.

Third. That in the event the Northwest Airways acquires the National Parks Airlines, the Northwest Airways is to establish one round-trip schedule per day between Billings and Helena, with a stop at Livingston, and carry air mail gratis on this run.

Fourth. That in the event the Northwest Airways concludes this purchase, the present National Parks operation of two schedules per day will be reduced to one round-trip schedule per day between Great Falls and Salt Lake City at 45 cents per mile.

Fifth. That in the event the purchase is consummated, the Post Office Department agrees to have immediately constructed a fully equipped Federal lighted airway between the Twin Cities and Seattle, via Fargo, Bismarck, Billings, Helena, Missoula, and Spokane. This airway to be constructed under the Public Works program from funds made available by the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Sixth. That as part of the arrangement for the construction of this Federal airway the Post Office Department will see that provision is made in the next Commerce Department appropriation bill for the necessary funds to properly maintain this airway during the next fiscal year.

Seventh. That as soon as this airway is completed the Post Office Department will authorize the Northwest Airways to discontinue the National Parks service between Butte and Salt Lake City, and establish a new service between Helena and Seattle.

Eighth. That when the lighted airway has been completed and service between Helena and Seattle has been established, the Northwest Airways is to rearrange its schedules under the direction of the Post Office Department in order to provide through service between Seattle and Chicago that will materially expedite the mails moving through these centers, and, in so doing, the company is to receive a rate of pay for each mile flown that is comparable with that received by other transcontinental lines for similar service.

Ninth. That the foregoing eight provisions are to become effective upon the completion of the sale of the National Parks Airlines to the Northwest Airways on terms that are satisfactory to the Post Office Department.

In agreeing to recommend the foregoing nine points, Mr. Cisler states emphatically that the Post Office Department cannot grant the Northwest Airways a straight extension of 715 route miles from Billings to Seattle under the present appropriation.

He states that the Post Office Department cannot ignore the present National Parks service in western Montana, nor the fact that the United Airlines is now serving Spokane and Seattle.

He points out that he has been ordered to effect a 25 to 30 percent reduction in gross air mail expenditures, and that no program can be considered that does not provide its proper proportion of savings.

He insists that an offer to simply give additional service in lieu of a reduction in air mail pay does not meet the requirements of the Department and cannot be given serious consideration.

Every air mail line must do its share in reducing the Post Office expenditures for air mail service.

He points out that it would be very inconsistent to grant an important extension to the Northwest Airways at the same time he is reducing rates and service on every other air line in the United States.

He agrees that the northern transcontinental is an important project, but insists that after all it is a relatively small matter compared with the desperate problems confronting the administration and the Post Office Department.

He does not think the Department can afford to make a conspicuous exception of the Northwest Airways in comparison with the treatment it accords the other air mail lines.

He thinks that the best way to get the Department committed to an extension of our service to Seattle is to tie it up with some plan that will give the Department a substantial saving in air mail expenditures in our territory.

Mr. Cisler believes that the program outlined in my letter of July 14 is a practical solution of this problem, and with some minor changes he is willing to recommend it to the Postmaster General.

He realizes the importance of the Department initiating the negotiations, as otherwise it might develop into a bidding match between United and Northwest Airways for the National Parks line.

He assures me that the National Parks line will not be canceled if we buy it, and that the one schedule remaining can be used to fill in the gap between Helena and Seattle as soon as the lighted airway is completed.

Mr. Cisler states that he is very much opposed to canceling any air mail routes. He hopes to avoid taking air mail service away from any city that now has it.

He says that if this deal were put through, he would recommend that our present schedules would stand as they are at present.

He concedes that this transaction would definitely establish the Northwest Airways as the northern transcontinental line.

If this program were carried out, the Post Office Department would make the following saving in expenditures for air mail service:

The Northwest Airways air mail pay for May amounted to $74,712.68. If this were reduced 5 percent, it would amount to $70,976. The Post Office Department would therefore save $3,736.68 for the month and, if this month is taken as an average, $44,840.16 for the year.

National Parks Airlines received in May $28,056.83. If its present two round trips per day are reduced to one round trip at 45 cents per mile, it would receive $13,743 a month. The Post Office Department would therefore save in expenditures for air mail $14,313.83 for the month, or, if this month be taken as an average, $171,765.96 for the year.

The saving in air mail expenditures that would result from this consolidation of both lines would be $44,840.16 on the Northwest Airways and $171,765.96 on National Parks, or a total for both of $216,606.12.

This is about equal to a saving of 17 percent in post-office expenditures for air mail service on the combined systems.

I have no definite idea as to what the National Parks Airlines can be bought for, if the Post Office Department uses the power given it under the Watres Act to consolidate air mail lines in the public interest. The National Parks Airlines has 50,000 shares of stock outstanding. It is generally understood that the company shows a book value of $7 a share, or $350,000. I am informed that they have cash reserves of approximately $280,000, which would leave an investment in property and equipment, etc., undepreciated, in the neighborhood of $70,000. Thus far they have paid out about $60,000 in cash dividends.

In the past Mr. Frank has held his line at around a million dollars, but I understand that recently he has indicated that he would be willing to accept $12.50 a share, or $625,000. This would mean that the Northwest Airways would have to pay about $345,000 in addition to the National Parks' cash reserve of $280,000.

In view of the fact that air mail rates will probably be systematically reduced in the future, I believe the Post Office Department would be willing to attempt to induce Mr. Frank to lower his figure, particularly as the Northwest Airways is going to be required to immediately give up 50 percent of the newly acquired mileage and thereby reduce the earning power of the line. If this could be brought down to $10 a share, or $500,000, it would reduce the amount of money the Northwest Airways would have to put up to $220,000.

I do not know whether such a figure is possible or not.

In any event, negotiations should be initiated by the Post Office Department in order to avoid a costly bidding match between United and ourselves.

United is undoubtedly aware of the fact that if we purchase this line we would use it to complete our northern transcontinental as soon as the lighted airway between the Twin Cities and Seattle is completed. If they could acquire National Parks, they would force us to come out in the open and ask for an extension of 715 miles without competitive bids. This would be a large extension in comparison to our base line of 1,172 miles between Billings and Chicago. This would be a difficult thing for the Post Office Department to grant in the face of a consolidated opposition from United and the open antagonism of the National Parks allies in Montana.

I think the price would range between $10 and $12.50 per share based on a cash reserve of $280,000.

The cost of operating one round trip schedule per day on a daylight basis between Billings and Helena, with a stop at Livingston, is problematic. The route would be 197 miles long, or 394 schedule miles per day. It would connect with the schedules of the National Parks line; not with ours. Its purpose would be to connect both lines so they would be in fact one system. It would only be a temporary service. It would continue until the lighted airway was completed. No restrictions would be placed on the type of equipment used. It is understood that the service is to be operated as economically as possible. Such a service would probably be operated for less than $100 a day, or between $2,000 and $3,000 per month.

If the National Parks Airlines were reduced to one round trip per day at 45 cents per mile, it would produce a gross air mail revenue of approximately $13,743 per month, or substantially $165,000 a year.

If the Northwest Airways were to take over the National Parks Line, the latter's operating expenses could be reduced considerably, as we could dispense with their executive, operating, and traffic departments.

It might be possible to operate the National Parks Line in the neighborhood of $6,500 per month, or between $75,000 and $78,000 a year. This might possibly give us a profit of between $87,000 and $90,000 a year on the Great Falls-Salt Lake City route.

If the Post Office Department could induce Mr. Frank to accept some kind of an arrangement in consideration of the sale of his line in the face of a reduction in air mail rates by which the Northwest Airways could pay him the amount beyond his cash reserve 1 year hence, it would enable us to make up part of this amount from the earnings derived from his line for the period. This, however, may not be practicable.

Mr. Cisler states that he would not authorize air mail service between Billings and Seattle unless a lighted airway were provided between the Twin Cities and Seattle. He states that, irrespective of the cruising speed of modern ships, the Post Office Department would not be able to expedite mails to and from the Pacific Northwest without some night flying in this section of the country.

The distance between the Twin Cities and Seattle is 1,523 miles. The unit cost of building such an airway is $350 a mile. The total cost of the project would amount to $533,050.

The unit cost of maintaining such an airway, including teletype, is $145 per mile per year. Therefore, the cost of maintaining this airway after it has been built would amount to $220,835 a year.

Even though such a project were financed as a Public Works measure from the emergency funds provided by the National Industrial Recovery Act, it would require at least 18 months to complete it.

This would postpone the inauguration of the transcontinental service at least into the middle of the next fiscal year.

I have represented to the Post Office Department that the Northwest Airways cannot survive anything like a 25-percent reduction in air mail rates. I have filed a protest against the continuance of this 25-percent cut. I have followed the line of argument contained in my letter to Mr. Howes of July 14, supplemented by my more recent letter to Mr. Cisler of July 29, copies of which were sent you at the time they were presented.

In response to these rather insistent demands, Mr. Cisler discussed the matter with Mr. Howes and advised me late yesterday afternoon that he was willing to recommend the nine-point program outlined above, which was based on my letters of July 14 and July 29.

If this general program is satisfactory to you, I propose to go over the nine points again with Mr. Cisler so as to avoid any possibility of misunderstanding. Mr. Cisler and I will then confer with Mr. Howes, and Mr. Howes will be asked to call in Mr. Frank, who is now in Washington, and advise him to sell to us at a reasonable price. I will then report to you the price Mr. Frank will agree to sell for, and you can then decide whether you wish to proceed further with the negotiations or not.

I have an appointment with Mr. Cisler for Thursday morning.

Please wire, care MacCracken & Lee, 1152 National Press Building, Washington, D.C., if the foregoing suggestion is satisfactory to you.

L. H. BRITTIN.

MEMORANDUM

1. It is suggested that the president of the Northern Transcontinental Airway Association, of Spokane, Mr. R. L. Rutter, sponsor the move to get authorization for the Northwest Airways to carry air mail in and out of Helena, Missoula, and Spokane, gratis, for the balance of the present fiscal year.

2. That the Northern Transcontinental Airway Association write the Northwest Airways a letter stating the need for this service and inquire as to whether or not the Northwest Airways would be willing to grant this service to the cities of Helena, Missoula, and Spokane, gratis, until such time as funds may become available to pay for it.

3. That the Northwest Airways reply with a letter stating that in order to aid the cities of Helena, Missoula, and Spokane and provide the service desired by these cities and by the cities of Montana, North Dakota, and Wisconsin, the company is willing to accede to the request of the Northern Transcontinental Airway Association to render this additional service free for the balance of the present fiscal year.

4. The Northern Transcontinental Airway Association then write a letter to the following cities, reciting first the fact that they have asked the Northwest Airways to render this service, and, second, that the Northwest Airways have acceded to the request and enclose a form of resolution to be passed by the city council at each point; these cities are Spokane, Missoula, Helena, Livingston, Billings, Miles City, Glendive, Dickinson, Jamestown, Valley City, Bismarck, Grand Forks, Pembina, Fargo, Moorhead, Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Madison.

5. The Northern Transcontinental Airway Association also ask the chambers of commerce at these points to pass similar resolutions.

6. That Mr. Ford, of Spokane, and Mr. Taylor, of Glendive, both in Washington, be requested to represent the Northern Transcontinental Airway Association with the congressional delegations of these Northern States and with the Post Office Department, and that these resolutions be sent to them.

7. That Messrs. Taylor and Ford show these resolutions to the congressional delegations from Washington, Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin and arrange for a day on which these resolutions can be presented to the Second Assistant Postmaster General.

8. That on that day the congressional delegations appear before the Second Assistant Postmaster General, present these resolutions with a request that air mail be placed on the ships of the Northwest Airways between Billings and Spokane, and that later this service be extended to Wenatchee and Seattle.

I feel that this is the most effective way of presenting this situation. I do not think it should be obviously sponsored by the Northwest Airways. I think it should be inspired and directed by the Northern Transcontinental Airway Association.

WASHINGTON, D.C., September 28, 1933.

Mr. K. R. FERGUSON,
Northwest Airways, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn.

MY DEAR MR. FERGUSON: In reference to your letter of September 26, received this morning, I immediately telephoned Superintendent Cisler, at the Post Office Department, and asked him to request the American Airways, United Airlines, and Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., to continue the airline consolidated ticket office in the Palmer House in Chicago.

I pointed out the economies that have been realized from the operation of this joint facility and the unnecessary additional expense that would result if each airline was forced to maintain competitive individual ticket offices in the Loop district.

Mr. Cisler agreed with me that the air mail lines serving Chicago should be forced to continue the joint Palmer House office and promised to take the matter up with Mr. Howes when he returns to Washington, Saturday morning. If Mr. Howes concurs with Mr. Cisler, I have been assured that the Post Office Department will practically order the Chicago lines to continue the offices.

In the meantime, I strongly urge that "Chuck" Beard, who knows the consolidated ticket-office situation in Chicago better than anyone else, be instructed to quietly contact the management of the Palmer House confidentially and get from them a definite promise that in the event American Airways or United Airlines force the discontinuance of the consolidated office at the Palmer House that the Northwest Airways will have the absolute refusal of space and the telephone numbers. If this refusal can be secured at once, we will have until December 1 to decide whether or not we will move our present Chicago office to this space and operate a joint Northwest Airways and consolidated ticket office or whether some other plan would be more feasible. I rather think that the Palmer House would be willing to give us a very cheap rent for a year in order to continue this facility in their lobby. If this plan could be worked out, the Northwest Airways would have a very valuable ally in the Palmer House and would probably be in a position to realize a substantial amount in commissions from the sale of tickets to other lines. We would probably have the most advantageous ticket-office situation in Chicago.

I strongly urge that we protect ourselves by getting a definite refusal from the Palmer House at the earliest possible moment. I think Beard is the best man to handle this negotiation as he knows the Palmer House management intimately and is thoroughly acquainted with the value of the ticket office to this hotel.

As soon as Mr. Cisler gets a decision from Mr. Howes, I will report results.

Best regards,

L. H. B.

Dictated but not read.

P.S.—Please keep me advised on any new developments of this problem.

WASHINGTON, D.C., August 28, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. LILLY: After I sent you my brief report of Saturday, August 26, I had another conference with Superintendent Cisler later in the day.

Mr. Cisler stated in his conference that the Post Office Department desires to avoid any drastic reduction in air mail service due to the present reduction in appropriations. He expressed the hope that each operator will find some way to maintain the maximum amount of service possible. He stated, however, that he would oppose the discontinuance of any service unless he was convinced that it was absolutely unavoidable. In order to remove the desire of operators to discontinue the service in order to secure high rates, he has set a maximum of 45 cents per mile as the highest rate which any operator can get by discontinuing service. He assured me that if the Post Office Department is able to induce the President to return any part of the million dollars the administration arbitrarily deducted from the $15,000,000 appropriated for domestic air mail service by Congress, that it would be allocated to such lines as have made a real effort to maintain maximum service during the 10 months' curtailment period. He does not think that air mail lines which reduce their service materially in order to avoid the "temporary" low mileage rates resulting from the reduced appropriation should receive the same consideration in the event that the funds are later increased as those "that took the cut and maintained the service." Naturally, the Post Office Department wants to avoid the criticism that would probably follow a drastic reduction in domestic air mail service due to the economy policy of the Democratic administration and the Executive act of a Democratic President when the same administration is promoting a great national effort to encourage the development of every other kind of business.

Mr. Cisler also stated that if any service is actually curtailed by his approval that the announcement accompanying such curtailment should be to the effect that it is a "temporary suspension due to the economic emergency" rather than an actual "cancelation." The Department thinks that such "temporary suspension" will encourage the air mail communities throughout the country to bring pressure on the next session of Congress, which convenes in January, to grant an adequate domestic air mail appropriation for a permanent Nation-wide air mail system.

Mr. Cisler has evidently come to the conclusion that our three services a day between the Twin Cities and Chicago are entirely necessary, and that our Twin Cities-Billings and Fargo-Winnipeg services are indispensable.

He thinks that the only service we are now operating that can be disposed of without embarrassment is the Twin Cities-Duluth service.

Mr. Cisler states that he favors the following program:

(A) That the Duluth-Twin Cities service be discontinued with the coming of bad flying weather, about October 15, and that this discontinuance be accompanied with an announcement that the service has been "temporarily suspended" due to the lack of funds resulting from the necessity of curtailing Government appropriations in the present economic crisis.

(B) That the night air mail service (trips 6 and 7) be temporarily discontinued during the period of our worst flying weather in the months of December, January, and February, and possibly the first part of March, and that the service be reestablished at the expiration of this period.

(C) That the air mail stop at Rochester be discontinued on our westbound Chicago-Twin Cities afternoon service (trip 5) and that a stop be made on this run at Madison instead. This will permit us to operate this westbound afternoon schedule without changing its present departure time at Chicago via the direct line of lights between Chicago, Lone Rock, La Crosse, and the Twin Cities.

(D) That the Post Office Department will support our request that the Department of Commerce install immediately two additional beacons in the vicinity of Oregon and Attica, Wis., to connect Madison with Broodhead on the Chicago-Lone Rock-Twin Cities lighted airway.

(E) That the Post Office Department will also support our request that the Department of Commerce immediately establish a lighted intermediate field on French Island, near La Crosse, Wis.

(F) That, with the exception of substituting Madison for Rochester on our westbound afternoon schedule out of Chicago (trip

5) that no other changes be made in our Twin Cities-Chicago schedules.

(G) That the Post Office Department support our request that the Department of Commerce establish, as soon as possible, four beacons and a lighted intermediate field on the east end of the Fargo-Twin Cities route northwest of Minneapolis. It is doubtful, however, if this can be done immediately.

(H) That we immediately request the Post Office Department to establish winter schedules for our present service between the Twin Cities and Billings and Fargo and Winnipeg, so that these schedules can be flown with the minimum of darkness during the winter months. It is requested that these new proposed schedules be sent to me as soon as possible, and that I be advised as to the date on which the change should be made effective.

(I) That when Rochester is taken off our westbound afternoon service (trip 5) (see paragraph (C)), that Rochester be advised that our present 4:30 p.m. departure out of Chicago cannot be changed this year, as it now has direct connection with many important mail-carrying schedules from all parts of the country, and that the regulations of the Department of Commerce do not permit us to operate in darkness over unlighted airways. It should also be stated that service to Rochester is being continued on the only other schedule we have available, namely, our eastbound morning departure out of Twin Cities (trip 2). Please advise me at once as to the date on which change should be made.

(J) That the Post Office Department has not yet devised a system for billing under its new curtailed-allotment plan, but that this will be announced within the next few days.

(K) That the Post Office Department is not yet ready to announce the exact date for authorizing the air mail stop at Dickinson, N.Dak., but that this will be done as soon as the new curtailed allotment plan has been worked out with all of the domestic air mail lines. This announcement has been promised within the next 10 days. This stop will be announced about 2 weeks ahead of the day on which it is authorized, in order that the Post Office Department can realize on the revenue derived from the sale of stamps for first flight covers. In the past this has usually been large enough to cover the cost of transporting mail between the airport and the post office for a period of 2 years.

This conference gave me an opportunity to discuss our northern transcontinental project with Mr. Cisler in its relation to his curtailed allotment plan.

I was particularly anxious to determine the status of National Parks Airlines under these new conditions. I was very much afraid that National Parks Airlines would use this opportunity to extend their service in Montana, especially between Billings and Butte.

Mr. Cisler assured me that he would not approve of any proposal to put mail on the National Parks ships that are now flying a passenger service between Billings and Butte, Mont.

I took occasion to point out if National Parks took full advantage of its present opportunity to "temporarily suspend" one of their two daily round-trip schedules between Great Falls and Salt Lake City, Utah, they would reduce their operations to only 1,018 miles per day, or 30,540 miles per month, and if they receive an air mail allotment of $17,983.70 per month for this service during the 10-month curtailment period, they would have the benefit of the very high mileage rate of 58 cents per mile. As they would be able to practically cut their operations in half, this high rate would give them a high earning power which would be out of all proportion to the service they actually rendered in the public interest, and would be most unfair to the other operators who were forced to maintain service during this curtailment.

Mr. Cisler promptly informed me that he would not allow them to receive a rate higher than 45 cents per mile.

I then pointed out that if this were the case it would probably prompt the National Parks Airlines to ask for mail on their Billings-Butte passenger line, as this would add 400 schedule miles per day, or 12,000 miles a month, to their 30,540 single round-trip schedule miles, making a total of 42,540 miles per month, which would reduce their rate to about 42 cents per mile, which would be within the maximum.

I stated that this would be very disastrous to the northern transcontinental project, as it would be merely placing another obstacle in the way of its realization, and increase the amount which the Northwest Airways would have to pay for the National Parks Airlines. I stated that I did not think that such an act would be in the public interest of our section of the country.

Mr. Cisler promptly agreed with me and assured me that he would not approve of placing air mail on the National Parks line between Billings and Butte, Mont.

He went on to say that he would probably force the National Parks Airlines to continue its present two schedules per day during good flying weather and reduce to one schedule per day during the winter.

Mr. Cisler has been thoroughly converted to the idea of establishing a northern transcontinental line through the extension of Northwest Airways to Seattle.

But he is equally insistent that the only way this can be accomplished is for the Northwest Airways to acquire the National Parks Airlines so that the entire route between Chicago and Seattle can be operated by one company.

He stated that there was a time when he thought such a move might have been inadvisable, as he might have been forced to discontinue the National Parks Airlines route entirely if the Budget had succeded in its efforts to reduce the domestic air mail appropriation to $12,000,000. Now, however, with the domestic air mail appropriation set at $14,000,000 and the possibility of increasing the appropriation in the coming session of Congress, he felt that the National Parks line was permanent and that it could be used to fill in the gap between Billings and Seattle.

He thinks that the Northwest Airways should acquire and operate it in its present location, i.e., between Great Falls and Salt Lake City, until a fully equipped lighted Federal airway has been established between the Twin Cities and Seattle, when the present national-parks route can be turned around.

He especially stresses the necessity for such an airway as he insists that only with these facilities can the Northwest Airways maintain a real competing service between Seattle and Chicago against the United Airlines.

In spite of his friendship for our project, he will oppose any extension of the Northwest Airways to Spokane or Seattle unless we make provision for taking care of the National Parks Airlines. He agrees that the Post Office Department should aid us in every way in these negotiations and he thinks that the Northwest Airways should make every effort to give the National Parks Airlines a square deal. He has already advised President Alfred Frank, of the National Parks Airlines to "get together in some way with Northwest Airways." If National Parks Airlines is unreasonable in its demands, or declines to give our proposals any consideration, then I think he would be inclined to go along with us irrespective of the National Parks Airlines. Mr. Cisler makes it very clear that the Post Office Department "could not give us an extension very well" that would cross the National Parks line until we had exhausted every means of acquiring them "on some fair and reasonable basis."

He stated as a matter of fact that he could not allow any extension while service is being suspended on other air mail lines.

I feel that we should push our negotiations with the National Parks line as fast as possible as I feel that it is about the only way we will be able to get a quick extension through to the coast.

Under present conditions any general agitation for air mail service between Billings and Spokane or Seattle tends to aid the National Parks Airlines as much as it does the Northwest Airways, as Mr. Frank and Mr. Kremer are thoroughly alive to the advantage of lining up with public sentiment, and offering their line as the best opportunity to complete the route. They have repeatedly urged the Post Office Department to turn their line around and fill in the gap between Billings and Seattle. As long as the Post Office Department declines to permit us to cross the National Parks line, the only practical program available seems to be to either acquire the National Parks line or show the Post Office Department that National Parks will not entertain any reasonable proposition. If a reasonable proposition will not be entertained, than it resolves itself down to a fight for the extension. The Post Office Department makes it very clear that they hope this can be avoided, and that the Northwest Airways will acquire the National Parks Airlines as soon as possible.

Mr. Cisler states that he believes that a fully equipped Federal airway can be built between the Twin Cities and Seattle from funds made available by the National Industrial Recovery Act if the Post Office Department were in a position to go before the Administrator and state that arrangements had been completed to extend Air Mail Service over the entire route between Chicago and Seattle, especially if the Department could also state that this additional air mail service had been provided in such a way that it would not increase the Post Office Department's domestic air mail appropriation.

Mr. Cisler is equally sure that if such a project were authorized from the funds of the National Industrial Recovery Act and air mail over the route was assured, that the next session of Congress would not hesitate to appropriate funds to the Department of Commerce for the maintenance of the airway.

However, as pointed out in items fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth in my letter of August 15, the acquiring of the National Parks Airlines should be tied up in a definite agreement with the present Postmaster General that he will see to it that funds are provided for both the construction and maintenance of such an airway, as otherwise we would not be able to furnish the service, to secure the poundage, to warrant the schedules to support the line.

L. H. BRITTIN.

WASHINGTON, D.C., August 9, 1933.

MY DEAR BEN: I need a little help on a new idea.

I enclose a map I made the other day in Washington showing the way I think the schedules of the Northwest Airways should be rearranged.

Everyone in St. Paul, as far as I know, appears to favor it. In spite of the fact that a year ago when I presented this same plan before Mr. Daggett succeeded in getting everyone to oppose it. However, that is ancient history now.

We are now flying 4,640 miles a day (not including Pembina-Winnipeg).

The schedules shown on the map call for 5,572 schedule-miles per day (not including Pembina-Winnipeg).

This is an increase of 932 miles per day.

I have in mind proposing to Mr. Cisler that the Department authorize the Northwest Airways to take on this enlarged operation for 5 percent less air mail pay than we received in the month of May.

Our air mail pay in May (corrected) amounted to $74,712.68.

If this were reduced 5 percent, it would amount to $70,976.

The new program requires 167,160 schedule-miles in a 30-day month.

An average performance of 95 percent would reduce this to 158,802 miles per 30-day month.

If we divide $70,976 by 158,802 miles, we get an average rate of 45 cents per mile.

Whyatt estimates that the new plan would cost us $92,202.18 a month to operate (not including Pembina-Winnipeg).

Our air mail revenue would, as outlined above, amount to $70,976 per month.

Our passenger revenue averages around $13,000 a month.

Our miscellaneous revenue, other than mail and passengers, amounts to about $3,000 a month.

So our total revenue would be about $86,976 per month against a cost of approximately $92,202.18 per month.

This means a deficit of $5,126.18.

Now, some of this loss could probably be made up out of increases in passenger revenue due to the fact that we are offering the public more seat-miles, and some of it could probably be recovered by cutting our operating expenses here and there after we get the plan into operation. But I do not believe that it could be materially reduced with the type of equipment we are flying.

All in all, it might end with a deficit of $4,000 to $5,000 per month, or, say, red figure of from $48,000 to $60,000 per year.

This is bad, but not half so bad as the present 25-percent cut in air mail rates. This cut in air mail rates reduces our income by $50,000 a month This is more than the Northwest Airways can stand. If it continues much longer, it will either put us out of business or force us to sell to one of the larger outfits. Personally I feel that the big lines secretly favor this 25-percent cut on account of what it will do to the small operator. Any way you look at it, it is not a fair break for us, as it is practically confiscating our property.

Now, if we go to Cisler and offer him a 5-percent reduction in air mail pay in order to satisfy the general public demand for a reduction of some kind on every line, and at the same time give the postal users 20 percent more service, we are, in fact, accomplishing a 25-percent reduction, but we are doing it in a way to benefit the public and keep the only independent air mail line left in the United States in the air.

Personally I think this idea is very much in the interest of the public and one the Post Office Department ought to support.

Please think this over and let me know your reactions. Save the map as I only made 4 of ———— Paul, 1 is going to Cisler, 1 to you, and ————→ to ask you to give it back some day.

I ———— another ————→ in red the additional aids to ———— to maintain our present schedules. This map is going ———— of Commerce. We are trying to get these additional facilities put in as part of the national unemployment program.

Please treat this whole program as confidential.

It's just between you and me.

Best regards,

L. H. BRITTIN.

(New address: Care of MacCracken & Lee, 1152 National Press Building, Washington, D.C. Telephone: National 6167.)

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

During the progress of the contempt proceedings,

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings now before the Senate may be suspended for a few moments in order that the Senate may receive and have read a brief message from the President. I also ask unanimous consent that the present occupants of the Chamber be permitted to remain during the reading of the message.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The legislative clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Congress:

In my message to you last March proposing legislation for Federal supervision of national traffic in investment securities I said:

This is but one step in our broad purpose of protecting investors and depositors. It should be followed by legislation relating to the better supervision of the purchase and sale of all property dealt with on exchanges.

This Congress has performed a useful service in regulating the investment business on the part of financial houses and in protecting the investing public in its acquisition of securities.

There remains the fact, however, that outside the field of legitimate investment naked speculation has been made far too alluring and far too easy for those who could and for those who could not afford to gamble.

Such speculation has run the scale from the individual who has risked his pay envelope or his meager savings on a margin transaction involving stocks with whose true value he was wholly unfamiliar, to the pool of individuals or corporations with large resources, often not their own, which sought by manipulation to raise or depress market quotations far out of line with reason, all of this resulting in loss to the average investor, who is of necessity personally uninformed.

The exchanges in many parts of the country which deal in securities and commodities conduct, of course, a national business because their customers live in every part of the country. The managers of these exchanges have, it is true, often taken steps to correct certain obvious abuses. We must be certain that abuses are eliminated, and to this end a broad policy of national regulation is required.

It is my belief that exchanges for dealing in securities and commodities are necessary and of definite value to our commercial and agricultural life. Nevertheless, it should be our national policy to restrict, as far as possible, the use of these exchanges for purely speculative operations.

I therefore recommend to the Congress the enactment of legislation providing for the regulation by the Federal Government of the operations of exchanges dealing in securities and commodities for the protection of investors, for the safeguarding of values, and, so far as it may be possible, for the elimination of unnecessary, unwise, and destructive speculation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1934.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill.

It will be recalled that a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, of which the chairman of the latter has been chairman of the former, began hearings on April 11, 1932, on the subject of stock exchange and banking practices.

The inquiry has been practically completed. To date the printed testimony consists of some 19 volumes of over 8,000 pages. The grand total will consist of approximately 25 volumes of around 10,000 pages.

Hearings will be held on the bill now submitted.

The committee will make a full report as soon as the hearings by the subcommittee are closed.

The foundation for the legislation has been laid, and I now ask permission to introduce a bill on the subject covered by the President's message except so far as commodity exchanges are concerned. A separate bill respecting commodity exchanges is under consideration and may be submitted later.

I submit a statement regarding the bill now presented, and a digest of it, and ask that this statement and digest, together with the bill, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be accepted by the Senate and ordered printed in the RECORD, together with the statement and digest, and will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with the message of the President, which will also be printed.

The bill (S. 2693) to provide for the registration of national securities exchanges operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails and to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and, with the accompanying matter, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "National Securities Exchange Act of 1934."

REGULATION OF EXCHANGES USING THE CHANNELS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE MAILS NECESSARY IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST

SEC. 2. Transactions in securities as commonly conducted upon securities exchanges by means of the mails or instrumentalities of transportation or communication in interstate commerce are affected with a national public interest. Such transactions are carried on in large volume by the public generally and by persons engaged in the business of dealing in securities in interstate commerce. The prices established and offered in such transactions are generally quoted and disseminated throughout the United States and foreign countries as a basis for determining and establishing prices at which securities are bought and sold by investors in interstate commerce and in the several States and as a basis for establishing and determining the value of securities for the purpose of calculating the amount of taxes owing to the United States and the several States by owners, buyers, and sellers of securities. Such transactions involve the use of credit and affect the financing of trade, industry, and transportation in interstate commerce. Such transactions give rise at times to a large volume of speculation in securities, a considerable proportion of which originates outside the States in which the exchanges are located. At times the prices of securities on such exchanges are susceptible to manipulation and control and the dissemination of such prices gives rise to excessive speculation. By reason of such manipulation and control and excessive speculation, sudden and unreasonable fluctuations in the prices of securities on such exchanges occur. Such sudden and unreasonable fluctuations in prices coupled with excessive speculation and manipulation cause alternately unreasonable expansion and unreasonable contraction of the volume of credit available for trade, transportation, and industry in interstate commerce and divert credits available from their proper channels. Such unreasonable fluctuations hinder the proper appraisal of the value of securities by investors in interstate commerce and in the several States and the fair calculation of taxes owing to the United States and the several States by owners, buyers, and sellers of securities. Such unreasonable fluctuations constitute an obstruction to and a burden upon interstate commerce and upon the national banking and Federal Reserve System. Transactions in securities upon exchanges create a flow of securities in interstate commerce to and from the places where such exchanges are located. The national credit and the safety and stability of investment are intimately related to and affected by the prices for which securities are sold and offered for sale upon exchanges. National emergencies, which produce wide-spread unemployment and the dislocation of trade, transportation, and industry, and which burden interstate commerce and adversely affect the public welfare are precipitated, intensified, and prolonged by manipulation and control of prices and excessive speculation on exchanges. Regulation of transactions in securities conducted upon exchanges by means or instrumentalities of transportation and communication in interstate commerce or of the mails is imperative in the public interest for the protection of interstate commerce, and the national banking and Federal Reserve System.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. When used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

1. The term "exchange" means any board, market place, exchange, chamber of commerce, or association, whether organized or unorganized, however managed or conducted, and whether incorporated or unincorporated, where, or by means of any facility of which, contracts or offers for the purchase or sale of securities or other transactions in such securities are made; and includes the members of an exchange.

2. The phrase "facility of an exchange" includes its premises, tangible or intangible property, whether on the premises or not, any right to the use of such premises or property or any service thereof, including, among other things, any system of communication to or from the exchange, by ticket or otherwise, maintained by or with the consent of the exchange, and any right of the exchange to the use of any property or service.

3. The term "member" means any person who is permitted or has a right to use in person any facility of an exchange, for the purpose of making offers or contracts for the purchase or sale of any security thereon, or any firm of which a member is a partner.

4. The term "broker" means any person engaged in a business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others.

5. The term "dealer" means any person engaged in a business of buying and selling securities for his own account, through a broker or otherwise.

6. The term "specialist" means any person who specializes in the execution of orders in respect of any security or securities on an exchange and who commonly receives from other members of the exchange orders for execution in respect of such security or securities.

7. The term "issuer" means any person who issues or proposes to issue any security or who guarantees a security either as to principal or income; except that with respect to certificates of deposit, voting-trust certificates, or collateral-trust certificates, or with respect to certificates of interest or shares in an unincorporated investment trust not having a board of directors (or persons performing similar functions) or of the fixed, restricted management, or unit type, the term "issuer" means the person or persons performing the acts and assuming the duties of depositor or manager pursuant to the provisions of the trust or other agreement or instrument under which such securities are issued; and except that with respect to equipment-trust certificates or like securities, the term "issuer" means the person by whom the equipment or property is or is to be used.

8. The term "customer" means any person for whose account a broker or dealer effects any transaction in any security, or from whom a broker or dealer solicits such business, or to whom a broker or dealer extends credit on any security.

9. The term "person" means an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a trust, any unincorporated organization or exchange. As used in this paragraph the term "trust" shall include only a trust where the interest or interests of the beneficiary or beneficiaries are evidenced by a security.

10. The term "security" means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement, oil, gas, and other mineral royalties and deeds, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, or in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security", or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing, but the term "security" as used in this act shall not include any direct obligation guaranteed as to principal or interest by the United States.

11. The terms "buy" and "purchase" each include any contract to buy, purchase, or otherwise acquire, contract of purchase, attempt or offer to acquire or solicitation of an offer to sell a security or any interest in a security.

12. The terms "sale" and "sell" each include any contract of sale or disposition of, contract to sell or dispose of, attempt or offer to dispose of, or solicitation of an offer to buy a security or any interest therein.

13. The term "communication" means communication of any kind or description including written, oral, radiographic, radiophonic, telegraphic, or telephonic, or by ticker, television, or cablegram.

14. The term "Commission" means the Federal Trade Commission.

15. The term "State" means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, and the insular possessions of the United States.

16. The term "interstate commerce" means trade or commerce in securities or any transportation or communication relating thereto among the several States or between any foreign country and any State, or between any State and any place or ship outside the United States.

For the purpose of this act (but not in anywise limiting the definition of interstate commerce) a transaction in respect of any security shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if such transaction is part of that current of commerce usual in a security transaction whereby an order to purchase or to sell a security originates from a person in one State with the expectation that it will or may be consummated by the receipt on an exchange of an order to sell or purchase the same security originating from another person in another State, including, in addition to cases within the above general description, all cases where it is contemplated that a purchase or sale of any security will be preceded or followed by the shipment of such security from another State. Any security transaction normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such commerce through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove the transaction from the provisions of this act.

PROHIBITION OF THE USE OF CHANNELS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE MAILS TO UNREGISTERED EXCHANGES

SEC. 4. Unless an exchange is registered as a national securities exchange under section 5 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of communication or transportation in interstate commerce for the purpose of using any facility of such exchange to effect any transaction in a security or to report any such transaction.

REGISTRATION OF NATIONAL SECURITIES EXCHANGES

SEC. 5. (a) Any exchange may be registered with the Commission as a national securities exchange under terms and conditions hereafter provided by filing a registration statement in such form as the Commission may prescribe containing the undertakings, setting forth the information, and accompanied by the documents here below set forth:

(1) An undertaking to comply with, and to enforce so far as is within its powers compliance by its members and by issuers whose securities are registered thereon with any provision of this act and any amendment thereto and any rule or regulation made or to be made by the Commission thereunder.

(2) Such data as to its organization, rules of procedure and membership, and other information as the Commissicn may by rules and regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(3) Copies of its constitution, articles of incorporation with all amendments thereto, and of its existing bylaws or rules or instruments corresponding thereto, whatever the name, which are hereinafter collectively referred to as the "rules of the exchange."

(4) An undertaking to furnish to the Commission copies of any amendments to the documents or instruments mentioned in clause (3) of this subsection forthwith upon their adoption.

(b) If it appears to the Commission that the exchange applying for registration is so organized as to be able to comply with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations made by the Commission thereunder and that the rules of the exchange are just and adequate to ensure fair dealing and to protect investors, the Commission shall cause such exchange to be registered as a national securities exchange.

(c) The Commission shall enter an order either granting or, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, denying an application for registration as a national securities exchange within 30 days after the filing of the application, unless the exchange applying for registration shall withdraw its application or consent to the Commission's deferring action on its application for a stated longer period after the date of its filing. The filing with the Commission of an application for registration by an exchange shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof. Amendments to an application may be made upon such terms as the Commission may prescribe.

(d) No registration shall be granted unless the rules of the exchange provide for the expulsion and suspension of a member for conduct or proceeding inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade and declare that the violation of any provisions of this act or any rule or regulation made by the Commission thereunder shall be considered conduct or proceeding inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade.

(e) Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any exchange from adopting and enforcing any rule not inconsistent with this act and the rules and regulations of the Commission made thereunder and the applicable laws of the State in which it is located.

(f) An exchange may, upon appropriate application in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Commission and upon such terms as the Commission may fix, withdraw its registration.

MARGIN REQUIREMENTS ON LONG ACCOUNTS

SEC. 6. (a) It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or any person who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, directly or indirectly, to extend or maintain credit or arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit to or for any customer on any securities not registered upon a national securities exchange.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or any person who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, directly or indirectly, to extend or maintain credit or arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit to or for any customer on any securities registered on a national securities exchange in an amount exceeding at any time whichever is the higher of (1) 80 percent of the lowest price at which such security has sold during the preceding 3 years; or (2) 40 percent of the current market price. The Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe lower loan values as may be deemed appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors during any stated period of time or in respect of any specified class of securities.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to extend or maintain credit or arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit to any person (other than to a dealer to aid in the financing of the distribution of securities to customers not through the medium of an exchange) upon any security registered on a national securities exchange in an amount exceeding the amount which it is lawful for a member of a national securities exchange to lend to any customer on such security, unless the application for the loan is accompanied by a statement by the borrower that such security has been acquired by the borrower and paid for in full more than 30 days prior to the making of the loan. Any person who for the purpose of obtaining a loan makes such a statement which is false in any material respect, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this subsection.

(d) The Commission shall by rules and regulations prescribe the times at and the specific methods by which values shall be calculated for the purposes of this section, the time within which initial and subsequent payments shall be made by the customer, and the notice to be given and the method to be followed in closing out accounts, and no person who shall comply with such rules and regulations shall be deemed to have violated any provision of this section.

RESTRICTIONS OF MEMBERS' BORROWING

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or person who transacts a business in securities through the medium of such member, directly or indirectly—

(a) To borrow on any security registered on a national securities exchange from any person other than a member bank of the Federal Reserve System;

(b) To permit the aggregate indebtedness of such member or person to all other persons, including customers' deposits, to exceed such percentage of the net current assets owned by the borrower and employed in the business not exceeding 1,000 percent as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe;

(c) To use, if a broker, the capital employed in the business to carry or finance the carrying of securities for himself or for others than bona fide customers, excluding any partner or employee of such broker;

(d) To hypothecate or arrange for the hypothecation of more of any securities carried for the account of a customer than is fair and reasonable in view of the indebtedness of such customer;

(e) To hypothecate or arrange for the hypothecation of any securities carried for the account of a customer under circumstances that will permit the commingling of the securities of one customer with those of any other person without the written consent of such customer;

(f) To lend or arrange for the lending of securities pledged by or carried for the account of any customer without the consent of such customer and without crediting the interest received on account of such lending to the account of the customer.

PROHIBITION AGAINST MANIPULATION OF SECURITY PRICES

SEC. 8. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by the use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or of any facility of any national securities exchange—

(1) To effect any fictitious transaction in any security registered on a national securities exchange, or any transaction which purports to be a sale of any such security but involves no change in the beneficial ownership thereof;

(2) To effect, or to authorize another or others to effect for such person's account, transactions for the purchase and sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange at substantially the same time at substantially the same price, whether such transactions of purchase and sale be with the same or with different parties; except transactions made on the exchange as a matter of record only and appropriately recorded and reported as an "arranged transaction";

(3) To effect, either alone or in concert with one or more other persons, transactions for the purchase and sale of any security or securities registered on any national securities exchange for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of such security or securities or for the purpose of creating or with the expectation that there will be created a false or misleading appearance of active trading in such security or securities, or a false or misleading appearance in respect of the market for such security or securities;

(4) If a dealer, broker, or member, or a person in the employ of a dealer, broker, or member, to circulate or disseminate in the ordinary course of business information to the effect that the price of any security or securities registered on a national securities exchange will or is likely to rise or fall partly or wholly because of the market activity of any one or more persons, if the person disseminating such information has reason to believe that the circulation or dissemination of such information on his part may induce the purchase or sale of any such security in the expectation of such market activity;

(5) To circulate or disseminate information regarding any security registered on a national securities exchange which statement is, in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading in respect of any matter sufficiently important to influence the judgment of an average investor, if the person disseminating such information has reason to believe that the circulation or dissemination of such information on his part may induce the purchase or sale of such security, and does not prove that he acted in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable care had no ground to believe that the statement was false or misleading;

(6) To pay or cause to be paid directly or indirectly any consideration or anything of value to any person to circulate, disseminate, or finance the cost of circulating and disseminating, information to the effect that the price of any security or securities registered on a national securities exchange will or is likely to rise or fall partly or wholly because of the market activity of any one or more persons;

(7) To engage in any series of transactions or in any operation for the purchase and sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange which has the purpose or effect of pegging, fixing, or stabilizing the price of such security without having prior thereto reported to the exchange authorities and to the Commission such information regarding the purpose and nature of such transactions or operations, the details thereof, and the person or persons interested therein as the Commission by rules and regulations may prescribe as appropriate or necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors;

(8) To acquire substantial control of the floating supply of any security registered on a national securities exchange for the purpose of causing the price of such security to rise on the exchange because of such control of the floating supply;

(9) To effect by use of the facility of any national securities exchange—

(i) Any transaction in any security whereby any party to such transaction acquires any put, call, straddle, or other option or privilege of buying a security from or selling a security to another party to the transaction without being bound to do so; or

(ii) Any transaction in any security with relation to which he has, directly or indirectly, any interest in such put, call, straddle, option, or privilege; or

(iii) Any transaction in any security for account of any person who he has reason to believe has, directly or indirectly, any interest in any such put, call, straddle, option, or privilege with relation to such security; or if a member, directly or indirectly, to have or guarantee any interest in any put, call, straddle, option, or privilege in relation to any security registered on a national securities exchange.

(b) Any person who participates in any act or transaction in violation of subsection (a) of this section shall be liable to any person who shall purchase any security, the price of which may have been effected by such act or transaction, and the person so injured may sue in law or equity in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the difference between the price he paid for such security and the lowest price for which such security shall have sold on the exchange during the 90 days preceding and the 90 days following such purchase, and such additional damages, if any, as the person suing may prove that he sustained as a result of any such transaction.

(c) Any person who participates in a transaction or transactions in violation of subsection (a) of this section shall be liable to any person who shall have sold a security, the price of which may have been effected by such transaction or transactions, and the persons so injured may sue in law or equity in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the difference between the price for which he sold such security and the highest price for which such security shall have sold on the exchange during the 90 days preceding and the 90 days following such sale, and such additional damages, if any, as the person suing may prove that he sustained as a result of any such transaction.

(d) Every person who becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become liable was, and the other was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(e) No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under this section unless brought within 2 years after the discovery of the violation upon which it is based.

REGULATION OF THE USE OF MANIPULATIVE DEVICES

SEC. 9. It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by use of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce or of the mails or of any facility of any national securities exchange—

(a) To effect the sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange, which at the time of such sale was not owned by such person or his principal except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as appropriate or necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors;

(b) To use or employ or to execute or accept for execution any stop-loss order in connection with the purchase or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe as appropriate or necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors;

(c) To use or employ in connection with the purchase or sale of any security registered on a national securities exchange any device or contrivance which, or any device or contrivance in a way or manner which the Commission may by its rules and regulations find detrimental to the public interest or to the proper protection of investors.

SEGREGATION AND LIMITATION OF THE FUNCTIONS OF BROKER, SPECIALIST, AND DEALER

SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or any person who as a broker transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member to act as a dealer in or underwriter of securities, whether or not registered on any national securities exchange. It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange to act as a specialist unless registered as such with the exchange, subject to such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and it shall be unlawful for any specialist on a national securities exchange (a) to effect on the exchange any transaction except on fixed-price orders or (b) to disclose to any other person information in regard to orders placed with him which is not available to all members of the exchange. An exchange may provide that officers or employees of the exchange may perform the functions of specialists subject to such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe.

REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS FOR SECURITIES

SEC. 11. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person to effect any transaction in any security on a national securities exchange unless a registration is effective as to such security in accordance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations made by the Commission thereunder and unless such security has been issued.

(b) A security may be registered with a national securities exchange upon application by the issuer, by filing with such exchange and with the Commission such undertakings, information, and documents as the Commission may by its rules and regulations require in the public interest and for the protection of investors, together with such additional undertakings, information, and documents as the exchange may require. If the exchange authorities certify to the Commission that the security has been approved by the exchange for listing and registration, the registration shall become effective 30 days after the filing of such certification with the Commission: Provided, That if it appears to the Commission prior to the expiration of such 30 days that the application for registration does not comply with the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations made by the Commission hereunder, it may, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing within such period, enter an order denying the application for registration unless the issuer shall withdraw its application or consent to the Commission's deferring action on its application for a stated period longer than such 30 days.

(c) The rules and regulations of the Commission in regard to registration shall require—

(I) An undertaking by the issuer to comply with and so far as is within its power to enforce compliance by its officers, directors, and stockholders with the provisions of this act and any amendments thereto and with the rules and regulations made or to be made by the Commission thereunder and, unless the issuer is a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, not to lend any funds in the money market of any exchange or to any member thereof or to any person who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe;

(II) Such information as to the issuer and affiliates in respect of:

(1) The organization, financial structure, and nature of the business;

(2) Particulars regarding the terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of securities outstanding;

(3) Particulars regarding terms on which securities have been or are to be offered to the public;

(4) Particulars regarding the directors, officers, and principal security holders and underwriters, their remuneration and their interests in the securities of and material contracts with the issuer and affiliates;

(5) Particulars regarding remuneration to others than directors and officers exceeding $20,000 per annum;

(6) Particulars regarding bonus and profit-sharing arrangements;

(7) Particulars regarding management and service contracts;

(8) Particulars of options in respect of securities existing or to be created;

(9) Particulars regarding material contracts not made in the ordinary course of business, and material patents;

(10) Balance sheets for preceding years certified by independent public accountants;

(11) Profit and loss statements for preceding years certified by independent public accountants; and such other information as the Commission may by rules and regulations require as necessary and appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(III) Copies of articles of incorporation, bylaws, trust indentures, or corresponding documents, whatever the names, underwriting arrangements, and other documents of the issuer and affiliates which the Commission by rules and regulations may require as necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

A security registered with a national securities exchange may be withdrawn or stricken from listing and registration in accordance with the rules of the exchange and upon such terms as the Commission may fix, upon application by the issuer or the exchange to the Commission.

ANNUAL, QUARTERLY, AND MONTHLY REPORTS

SEC. 12. (a) Every issuer of a security registered on a national securities exchange shall file with the exchange and with the Commission, in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commission and in such form and in such detail as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe in the public interest and for the protection of investors—

(1) Such information and documents as the Commission may require to keep reasonably current the information and documents filed pursuant to section 11;

(2) Annual and quarterly reports, including, among other things, a balance sheet and profit-and-loss statement certified by an independent public accountant;

(3) Monthly reports, including, among other things, a statement of sales or gross income;

(4) Such other reports and at such times as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe in the public interest or for the protection of investors or with a view to insuring that the security holders' interests shall not be prejudiced by the use of information for the advantage of any special group or interest.

(b) The failure of an issuer to register information, documents, or reports as required by this section shall be ground for the removal of any of its securities from a national exchange by the exchange or by the Commission.

PROXIES

SEC. 13. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, by the use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of any facility of any national securities exchange or otherwise, to solicit or to permit the use of his name to solicit any proxy or consent or authorization in respect of any security registered on any national securities exchange unless at such time prior to such solicitation as the Commission shall by rule or regulation prescribe the persons named to exercise such proxy, consent, or authorization shall file with the Commission a statement, which shall be included as a part of every such solicitation, setting forth the purposes of the proxy, consent, or authorization, the persons to exercise it, their relations to and interest in the security, the names and addresses of the persons from whom similar proxies, consents, or authorizations are being solicited, and such further information, and in such form and detail as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any member of a national securities exchange or any person who transacts a business in securities through such member to give a proxy, consent, or authorization in respect of any security registered on a national securities exchange and carried for the account of a customer without a specific written authorization from such customer.

OVER-COUNTER MARKETS

SEC. 14. It shall be unlawful for any person singly or in concert with others to make use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of communication or transportation in interstate commerce for the purpose of making or creating, or enabling another to make or create, a market for any security, whether or not registered on a national securities exchange, without complying with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

TRANSACTIONS BY DIRECTORS, OFFICERS, AND PRINCIPAL STOCKHOLDERS

SEC. 15. (a) Every director, officer, or owner of securities, owning as of record and/or beneficially more than 5 percent of any class of securities of any issuer any security of which is registered on a national securities exchange, shall file with the exchange and with the Commission at the time of the registration of such security or at the time he becomes such a director, officer, or owner of securities the amounts of all securities of such issuer of which he is the record and/or beneficial owner, and within 10 days after the close of each calendar month, if there has been any change in his record or beneficial ownership during such month, shall file with the exchange and the Commission a statement indicating his ownership at the close of the calendar month and such changes in his ownership as have occurred during such calendar month.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any director, officer, or owner of securities, owning as of record and/or beneficially more than 5 percent of any class of stock of any issuer, any security of which is registered on a national securities exchange—

(1) To purchase any such registered security with the intention or expectation of selling the same security within 6 months; and any profit made by such person on any transaction in such a registered security extending over a period of less than 6 months shall inure to and be recoverable by the issuer, irrespective of any intention or expectation on his part in entering into such transaction of holding the security purchased for a period exceeding 6 months. Such suit may be instituted in law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction by the issuer, or by the owner of any security of the issuer in the name and in behalf of the issuer if the issuer shall fail or refuse to bring such suit within 60 days after request or shall fail diligently to prosecute the same thereafter. For the purposes of this subsection the profit shall be calculated on the sale or sales by such person of such security made at the highest price or prices and on the purchase or purchases made by such person of such security at the lowest price or prices during the 6 months' period irrespective of the certificates for such security received or delivered by such person during such period.

(2) To sell any such registered security, if the person selling does not own the security sold or if the person selling owns the security but does not deliver it against such sale within 5 days;

(3) To disclose, directly or indirectly, any confidential information regarding or affecting any such registered security not necessary or proper to be disclosed as a part of his corporate duties. Any profit made by any person, to whom such unlawful disclosure shall have been made, in respect of any transaction or transactions in such registered security within a period not exceeding 6 months after such disclosure shall inure to and be recoverable by the issuer unless such person shall have had no reasonable ground to believe that the disclosure was confidential or was made not in the performance of corporate duties. Such suit may be instituted in law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction by the issuer or by the owner of any security of the issuer in the name and in behalf of the issuer if the issuer shall fail to bring such suit within 60 days after request or shall fail diligently to prosecute the same thereafter. For the purposes of this subsection the profit shall be calculated on the sale or sales by such person of such security made at the highest price or prices and on the purchase or purchases made by such person of such security at the lowest price or prices during the 6 months' period irrespective of the certificates for such security received or delivered to such person during such period.

ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS, REPORTS, EXAMINATIONS OF EXCHANGES, MEMBERS, AND OTHERS

SEC. 16. Every national securities exchange, every member thereof, every person transacting a business in securities through the medium of such member, every dealer making or creating a market for securities through the mails or the use of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, shall make, keep, and preserve such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records and make such reports as the Commission by its rules and regulations may prescribe. The accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records of such persons shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the Commission as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate, and the cost of such examinations, including the compensation of the examiners, shall be fixed by the Commission and paid by the person examined. Any representatives of the Commission designated by it shall have access to the premises or any part thereof of any national securities exchange and the right to attend any meeting or proceeding of the exchange or any committee thereof.

LIABILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS

SEC. 17. (a) Any person who shall make or any person, including any director, officer, accountant, or other agent of such person, who shall be responsible for the making of any statement in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission, which statement is, in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading in respect of any matter sufficiently important to influence the judgment of an average investor shall be liable to any person (not knowing that such statement was false or misleading) who shall have purchased or sold a security the price of which may have been affected by such statement, and the person injured may sue in law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction for the damages caused by such statement, unless the person sued shall sustain the burden of proof that he acted in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable care had no ground to believe that such statement was false or misleading.

(b) In case the person injured purchased a security the price of which was affected by such statement, the damages shall be not less than the difference between the price for which he purchased the security and the lowest price for which it shall have sold within 90 days preceding and 90 days following such purchase.

(c) In case the person injured sold a security the price of which was affected by such statement, the damages shall be not less than the difference between the price for which he sold such security and the highest price for which it shall have sold within 90 days preceding and 90 days following such sale.

(d) Every person who becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution as in cases of contract from any person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become liable was, and the other was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation.

(e) No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under this section unless brought within 2 years after the discovery of the violation upon which it is based.

SPECIAL POWERS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 18. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out and to implement, administer, and enforce the provisions of this act, including rules and regulations governing the form and content of registration statements and reports for various classes of exchanges, members, securities, and issuers, and defining accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this act.

(b) The authority above given the Commission shall include, among other things, authority to prescribe the form or forms in which required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of accounts, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer; but insofar as they relate to any common carrier subject to the provisions of section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to accounts shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under authority of such section 20.

(c) The authority above given the Commission shall include, among other things, authority to prescribe such rules and regulations for national securities exchanges, their members and persons transacting a business in securities through such members, in addition to those specifically provided in this act, as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, and may by its rules and regulations more specifically define the form and procedure to be followed in carrying the provisions of this act into effect. The Commission, among other things, may prescribe the time and method of making settlements, payments, and deliveries, the time and method of calculating margin requirements, and the time and method of closing out undermargined accounts. The Commission, among other things, may by rules and regulations prescribe rules for the conduct of business on exchanges for the classification of members, for the election of officers and committees to insure a fair representation of the membership, for the suspension, expulsion, or disciplining of members, for the listing or striking from listing of any security with right of appeal by the issuer to the Commission, for the reporting of transactions on the exchanges and upon tickers maintained by or with the consent of any exchange, including the method of reporting short sales, sales of securities in default, in bankruptcy or receivership, and sales involving other special circumstances. The Commission may fix or prescribe the method of fixing uniform rates of commission, interests, and other charges, may prescribe minimum units of trading, rules limiting the manner, method, and place of soliciting business, rules for odd-lot purchases and sales, rules regarding minimum deposits on marginal accounts, and rules limiting or prohibiting the registration or trading in any security within a specified period after the issuance or primary distribution thereof, prescribe rules governing the carrying of accounts and to prohibit fictitious or numbered accounts and require the disclosure of the real and beneficial owners thereof. The Commission shall have power to fix the hours of trading, and, if the public interest in its opinion so requires, summarily to suspend trading in any registered security or upon any registered exchange for a period not exceeding 90 days.

(d) The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe.

(e) For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for the enforcement of this act, any member of the Commission or any officer or officers designated by it are empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Commission deems revelant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing. Such power of subpena and examination shall not abate or terminate by reason of any action or proceeding brought by the Commission under this act. The Commission shall have authority to investigate, and in its discretion to publish information concerning any facts, conditions, or practices which it may deem necessary and proper as an aid in the prescribing of rules and regulations or the recommendation of further legislation concerning exchanges. If any person subpenaed to attend any inquiry fails to obey the command of his subpena without reasonable cause, or if a person in attendance upon such inquiry shall without reasonable cause refuse to be sworn or to be examined or to answer a question or to produce any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records when ordered so to do by the officer conducting such inquiry, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable accordingly. Any officer participating in such inquiry and any person examined as a witness upon such inquiry who shall disclose to any person other than a member or officer of the Commission the name of any witness examined or any other information obtained upon such inquiry, except as directed by the Commission or an officer thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable accordingly.

LIABILITY OF CONTROLLING PERSONS

SEC. 19. (a) Every person who, by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, or who pursuant to or in connection with any agreement or understanding with one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise, controls any person liable under any provision of this act or of any rule or regulation made pursuant thereto shall also be liable jointly and severally with and to the same extent as such controlled person to any person to whom such controlled person is liable.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to do any act or thing which it would be unlawful for such person to do under the provisions of this act or any rule or regulation thereunder through or by means of any other person who is controlled by such person by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise or through or by means of any other person who is controlled by such person and one or more other persons by or through stock ownership, agency, or otherwise for the purpose of avoiding any provisions of this act or any rule or regulation made thereunder.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any director, officer, or security holder of any issuer of any security registered on a national securities exchange to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making or filing of any document or report required to be filed with the Commission under this act or any rule or regulation thereunder.

(d) If the spouse of a person subject to any provision of this act or of any rule or regulation thereunder, or a child or parent residing with such person, or a person holding in trust for such person money or property used in the transaction in question shall effect any transaction in a security which would be a violation of any such provision if effected by such person subject thereto, such person subject thereto shall be deemed to have violated such provision unless he shall sustain the burden of showing that the transaction was not effected with his approval or was not for the purpose of evading such provision.

INJUNCTIONS AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES: SUSPENSION OR WITHDRAWAL OF REGISTRATION OF AN EXCHANGE OR OF A SECURITY

SEC. 20. (a) Whenever the Commission, either upon complaint or otherwise, shall be of the opinion that in the public interest it should make an investigation to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act, or of any rule or regulation thereunder, it may investigate such facts, and it may, in its discretion, either require or permit such person, or any person making such complaint, to file with it a statement in writing, under oath, or otherwise, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the subject matter which it believes to be in the public interest to investigate.

(b) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule or regulation prescribed under authority thereof, it may in its discretion—

(i) Bring an action in any district court of the United States, United States court of any Territory, or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title. Any such criminal proceedings may be brought in the district wherein the violation complained of occurred;

(ii) After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, make an order suspending for a period not exceeding 12 months or withdrawing altogether the registration of a national securities exchange if the Commission finds that such exchange has violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations thereunder or has failed to enforce compliance therewith by a member or an issuer of a security registered thereon, or withdrawing altogether the registration of a security the issuer of which has failed to comply with the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations made thereunder;

(iii) After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, make an order suspending for a period not exceeding 12 months or ordering the expulsion altogether from a national securities exchange any member or officer thereof whom it finds has violated any provision of this act or the rules and regulations thereunder or has effected any transaction for any other person who he has reason to believe is violating in respect of such transaction any provision of this act or the rules or regulations thereunder.

(c) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this act or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

SEC. 21. All hearings shall be public and may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof or an officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

PUBLIC CHARACTER OF INFORMATION

SEC. 22. The information contained in or filed with any application, report, or document shall be made available to the public under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and copies thereof, photostatic or otherwise, shall be furnished to every applicant at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe.

COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

SEC. 23. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Commission may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree, affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

PENALTIES

SEC. 24. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act or any rule or regulation made thereunder, or any person who shall make, or any person, including a director, officer, accountant, or agent thereof, who willfully is responsible for any statement in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission, which statement is, in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading in any matter sufficiently important to influence the judgment of an average investor, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both, except that when such person is an exchange a fine not exceeding $500,000 may be imposed.

JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

SEC. 25. (a) The district courts of the United States, the United States courts of any Territory, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses and violations under this act and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this act. Any such criminal proceedings may be brought either in the district wherein the exchange involved is operated, or in the district wherein a transaction violating such provision was consummated, or in the district wherein an act or agreement to act constituting such violation was effected. Any such civil suit or action may be brought in any such district or in the district wheren the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts busness, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgment and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this act brought by or against it in the Supreme Court or such other courts.

(b) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, any of the said United States courts, within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides, upon application by the Commission may issue to such person an order requiring such persons to appear before the Commission, or one of its examiners designated by it, there to produce documentary evidence if so ordered, or there to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other records before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

EFFECT ON EXISTING LAW

SEC. 26. (a) The rights and remedies provided by this act shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist at law or in equity, except that this act shall supersede such laws of any State as are inconsistent with the provisions or purposes of this act and such laws of any State as provide for the supervision or regulation of the administration or conduct of business on any exchange which is licensed by the Commission.

(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to modify existing law with regard to the binding effect on any member of any exchange of any action taken by the authorities of such exchange to settle disputes between members or with regard to the binding effect of such action on any person who has agreed to be bound thereby or with regard to the binding effect on any member of any disciplinary action taken by the authorities of the exchange as a result of violation of any rule of the exchange, insofar as the action taken is not inconsistent with the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission thereunder.

VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS

SEC. 27. (a) Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person to waive compliance with any provision of this act or of any regulation promulgated pursuant thereto, or of any rule required by such regulation shall be void.

(b) Every contract made in violation of, or the performance of which involves the violation of, any provision of this act or of any rule or regulation thereunder shall be void as regards any cause of action arising after the effective date of such provision, regardless of whether the contract was made before or after such effective date.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES

SEC. 28. It shall be unlawful for any broker or dealer, directly or indirectly, to make use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of transportation or communication in interstate commerce for the purpose of effecting on an exchange situated in a place not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States any transaction in any security the issuer of which is a resident of, or is organized under the laws of, or has its principal place of business in, a place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States except in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe.

REGISTRATION FEES

SEC. 29. Every national securities exchange shall pay an annual registration fee for the privilege of doing business as a national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year or any part thereof. Such fee shall be paid to the Commission on or before March 15 of each calendar year. Such fee shall be an amount equal to one five-hundredths of 1 percent of the aggregate dollar amount of the sales of securities transacted on such national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year.

EMPLOYEES OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

SEC. 30. For the purposes of this act and of the Securities Act of 1933, the Federal Trade Commission may select, employ, and fix the compensation of such employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the transaction of the business of the Commission with respect to such acts without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 31. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 32. This act shall become effective on October 1, 1934, except that applications for necessary registrations under this act may be made to the Commission in accordance with its rules and regulations at any time on and after July 1, 1934: Provided, That section 30 shall become effective immediately upon the enactment of this act.

The statement and digest presented by Mr. FLETCHER to accompany the bill are as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

The bill just introduced for the regulation of securities exchanges is one of the series of steps taken and to be taken for the purpose of bringing safety to the general public in the field of investment and finance. The present step is made necessary by the misfortunes of great numbers of our people who have lost part, or all, of their savings through unregulated stock exchanges. Still more, this bill has been made necessary by the needs of the entire American public that the operation of the securities exchanges shall never again intensify a business depression, or help precipitate a business depression. In brief, we have already received ample evidence through the hearings of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, through countless letters addressed to the committee, and in many other ways that the unregulated operation of such great financial machines as the stock exchanges of the country can directly bring heavy losses to investors and can indirectly, by heightening the forces of a depression or by retarding incipient business recovery, affect great bodies of our workers and take from them, or keep from them, their opportunity to have work and to earn a decent living.

It is in the light of the interests of the general public that the bill was drawn. There was no desire to hurt the few hundred men who have been obtaining, year after year, princely incomes out of the pockets of the American people through the operation of exchanges not subject to Government regulation. But while there was no desire to hurt these few men, the bill was drafted on the theory that the interests of the general public are paramount and that an end must be put to any mulcting of the general public for the benefit of a few insiders. The consequence of this legislation is likely to be that the insider who has relied upon his ability to take advantage of the unprivileged outsider will suffer; but this is unavoidable if the American people as a whole are to be protected from such persons. Honest brokers have nothing to fear from the bill. Indeed, they are likely to gain by the cleaning-out process that will follow and by the elimination of unsavory practices, and perhaps by the elimination also of those who have engaged in such practices.

Many of the remedies for existing evils considered in the course of the preparation of this bill go far beyond the provisions incorporated in the bill. Many of the remedies considered but not incorporated in the bill are in themselves sound and desirable. It may be that before the bill is enacted into law a number of the remedies not contained in the present draft of the bill, and far more restrictive than its present provisions, will be proposed by various Members and accepted by the Congress. It should be explained at the present time that in now proposing a number of measures less advanced than those favored by many Members of the Congress, as well as by myself, the purpose has been to submit at the outset a program on which those holding various points of view might be able to reach an agreement. In short, what is now put before the Congress is a moderate or middle-of-the-road program. Of course, it will not be considered either moderate or middle-of-the-road by those who have had financial interests in the special privileges and unsound practices of the past. But when I speak of moderation I am speaking from the point of view of the great mass of the people, who are entitled to receive the prime consideration of the National Legislature.

While compromising on these matters of substance, and with respect to the nature or type of remedies proposed at the outset, there has been no compromise on the issue whether such remedies as are proposed shall become truly effective. In other words, the bill seeks to prevent those devices by which skillful financial lawyers have in past decades been able from time to time to thwart, to hinder, and to delay the will of the Congress. Whatever remedies are proposed in the bill are to be effectuated so thoroughly that there can be no escape for those persons who should not be permitted to escape. The bill goes as far as it reasonably can in assuring our citizenry that the moderate remedies proposed will be thoroughly effectuated.

The bill will, of course, decrease and discourage certain types of activity on the securities markets, and in that sense and to that extent will serve to affect and diminish the volume of stock-exchange activity. Although the bill does not prohibit all speculative activities on stock exchanges, its purpose is to make stock exchanges market places for investors and not places of resort for those who would speculate or gamble.

The purpose of the bill is to insure to the public that the securities exchanges will be fair and open markets. The bill seeks to protect the American people by requiring brokers on these exchanges, members of these exchanges, to be wholly disinterested in performing their services for their clients and for the American people trading on the exchanges.

Manipulators who have in the past had a comparatively free hand to befuddle and fool the public and to extract from the public millions of dollars through stock-exchange operations are to be curbed and deprived of the opportunity to grow fat on the savings of the average man and woman of America. Under this bill the securities exchanges will not only have the appearance of an open market place for investors but will be truly open to them, free from the hectic operations and dangerous practices which in the past have enabled a handful of men to operate with stacked cards against the general body of the outside investors. For example, besides forbidding fraudulent practices and unwholesome manipulations by professional market operators, the bill seeks to deprive corporate directors, corporate officers, and other corporate insiders of the opportunity to play the stocks of their companies against the interests of the stockholders of their companies.

The bill allows the use of ample credit in the conduct of stock exchanges. But it seeks to prevent the recurrence of those abuses which in the past have led to the absorption of the Nation's credit needed for trade and industry into a whirling, gambling stock market. The amounts that margin traders may borrow are limited. The amount of borrowed capital that brokers may use is likewise limited. Bootleg loans in defiance of Federal Reserve policy are brought within the ban of the bill. If the limitations imposed by the bill should not be deemed sufficiently restrictive—and I am sympathetic, indeed, with the view of many persons, both in and out of the Congress, that restrictions should be much higher than those outlined in the bill—there will be ample opportunity of amendment of the bill in the direction of even further protection of the interests of the general public and of trade and industry.

The evidence before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee has demonstrated that those in charge of stock exchanges in the past have not required adequate disclosure by persons and concerns listing or maintaining the listing of securities on the exchanges. At times the excuse has been advanced that exchange officials have not had sufficient power. There can be no question that the American public is entitled to have the fullest disclosure, as a condition to the listing of securities and as a condition to maintaining such listing on the public exchanges. The Federal Government has the power to require this full disclosure, and the bill is so written that the disclosure may now become assured to the great body of our investors.

The bill strikes at a variety of misleading and law-avoiding devices. The great evil involved in the abuse of proxies is dealt with by the bill. Men with small, and sometimes no, financial interest will be unable under this bill to solicit proxies without disclosing their real interest and all their side agreements and special privileges and special relationships, of which the stockholders of the companies should be fully informed. Economic bosses can no longer seek in the name of private enterprise to misuse positions of power and trust. The provisions of the bill on this subject strike the first blow at a system that has given a small and willful group of men control over the properties and savings of the great mass of investors.

The stock exchanges will be given opportunity to enforce the standards of conduct laid down in this legislation and such other standards consistent with it as they may deem proper. But if the exchanges fail in the future as they have failed in the past to maintain proper standards, the penalties of the criminal law and effective civil liabilities attach in order to insure that the standards laid down by the bill will be living standards and not a mere dead letter of the law. When this legislation goes into effect, privileged insiders who unjustly get money from the general public can be compelled to restore that money to those who lost it. The financial market places of this country will be cleansed and made safe for honest investors.

DIGEST OF STOCK EXCHANGE BILL

The first section provides that the act may be cited as the "National Securities Exchange Act of 1934."

Section 2 contains a declaration of the intimate relationship which prices of transactions on securities exchanges bear to transactions in interstate commerce, the danger of excessive speculation and the manipulation of such prices, and their effect upon the general credit of the country, especially with regard to excessive fluctuations. Transactions on stock exchanges are thus affected with a national and public interest which requires regulation of the conduct of business upon securities exchanges.

Section 3 contains definitions of important words used in the act, including "exchange" and "interstate commerce", and states that the "Commission" (which is given extensive powers in administration of the act) shall be the Federal Trade Commission.

Section 4 prohibits the use of the mails or interstate commerce for the purpose of effecting any transaction in a security on an exchange or of reporting such transaction unless the exchange has been registered as a "national securities exchange."

Section 5 provides a procedure for the registration of "national securities exchanges." Exchanges may be registered as such only if they furnish the Federal Trade Commission full information concerning their organization and rules and satisfy the Commission that they are so organized as to be able to comply with the provisions of this act and the regulations of the Commission.

Section 6 provides that all purchases made through members of exchanges must be secured by a margin of at least 60 percent of the current market price or 20 percent of the lowest price at which such security has sold during the preceding 3 years. The Commission is given authority to prescribe more rigid margin requirements at any time when it deems that this is appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. No person shall extend credit on any security which is traded on a national securities exchange without conforming to the margin requirements which this section imposes on members of such an exchange.

Section 7 places restrictions on borrowing by members of exchanges and dealers and brokers who act through them and on their use of customers' securities. They may not borrow on a security registered on a national securities exchange except from a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, and the total amount of their borrowing is limited. They cannot hypothecate or lend securities carried for customers except in accordance with the customers' consent and to a reasonable and fair extent.

Section 8 makes it criminal to manipulate the prices of securities on national securities exchanges. The devices expressly outlawed are:

(1) Washed sales.

(2) Matched orders.

(3) Any combination of purchases and sales made for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of the security or creating a false impression as to the market of such security.

(4) The spreading of rumors that prices will change in accordance with activities of manipulators.

(5) Disseminating misleading information regarding a security.

(6) Paying for the dissemination of information in aid of the operations of manipulators.

(7) Pegging the price of a security without informing the Commission as to all the details of the operation.

(8) Cornering the supply of a security.

(9) The use of options and trading against options.

Subsections (b) and (c) provide for civil liability of manipulators to persons injured by their market operations.

Section 9 prohibits short selling or stop-loss orders in connection with securities traded on national securities exchanges except in compliance with regulations which the Commission may prescribe. The Commission is also given power to forbid any other devices in connection with security transactions which it finds detrimental to the public interest or to the proper protection of investors.

Section 10 prohibits members and persons engaged in a securities business who act through members to be underwriters of securities or dealers, as distinguished from brokers. Members cannot act as specialists unless registered as such, and specialists may not execute orders except at fixed prices, nor can they disclose confidential information.

Section 11 requires registration of securities which are admitted to trading on national securities exchanges. Such registration must be made with the exchange and with the Commission. The Commission shall prescribe regulations regarding registration, which shall include disclosure of such details concerning the financial position of the company and other facts, similar to those required to be disclosed under the National Securities Act of 1933, as the Commission may prescribe.

Section 12 includes the further provision that annual, quarterly, and monthly reports must be furnished, keeping such information up to date.

Section 13 prohibits the use of the mails or interstate commerce in connection with proxies for securities registered on national securities exchanges unless such information with regard to the proxies and plans of the proxies shall be filed with the Commission, as the Commission may require.

Section 14 makes it unlawful to conduct any over-the-counter market for any securities except in compliance with regulations which the Commission may prescribe.

Section 15 compels the disclosure of the holdings and dealings of directors, officers, and principal stockholders in the securities of the corporation. Such persons are also prohibited to speculate in the securities of the corporation or to sell them short. Profits resulting from speculation shall be recoverable by the corporation.

Section 16 requires that every national securities exchange, its members, and brokers and dealers who transact business through such members, shall keep detailed accounts of all transactions. These records shall be open at all times to inspection by the Commission, which is also permitted to have its inspectors on the premises of exchanges and at meetings of exchange committees.

Section 17 imposes civil liability for false or misleading statements in any of the reports or records required under this act.

Section 18 enumerates various powers of the Commission. In general, it may make regulations for the carrying into effect of all provisions of the act and governing the conduct of business on exchanges as it may deem necessary. The Commission is also given extensive powers of investigation similar to those which it enjoys under the National Securities Act.

Section 19 provides that persons who control others subject to the provisions of the act and regulations thereunder shall likewise be subject themselves. Not only does it cover the usual devices, such as dummy corporations, but provides that when a member of the immediate family of a person forbidden to make a given transaction in a security effects such a transaction, the person forbidden shall have the burden of showing that the transaction was not an attempted evasion of the act.

Section 20 deals with the procedure for injunctions and prosecutions of offenses, which is similar to that under the Securities Act, and gives the Commission power to suspend the registration of an exchange or of a security for failure to comply with the provisions of the act and regulations thereunder.

Section 21 provides for public hearings, of which appropriate records shall be kept.

Section 22 provides that all information required to be given under the act shall be available to the public.

Section 23 provides for court review of orders as in the National Securities Act of 1933.

Section 24 provides for a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both, upon conviction of a violation of the act or regulations made thereunder, except where the offender is an exchange, in which event the maximum penalty is $500,000.

Section 25, dealing with jurisdiction of offenses and suits, contains provisions similar to those in the National Securities Act on that topic.

Section 26 provides that the rights and remedies furnished by this act shall be in addition to other legal rights and remedies not inconsistent therewith, and that the act shall not derogate from the binding effect of action taken by exchanges to discipline their members or settle disputes as long as such action complies with the regulations of the Commission.

Section 27 provides that no contract made prior or subsequent to this act shall alter the rights or remedies of any persons thereunder.

Section 28 gives the Commission power to restrict transactions in American securities on foreign exchanges.

Section 29 provides for registration fees to be paid by exchanges based on the value of sales transacted on such exchanges.

Section 30 empowers the Commission to engage employees as it shall deem necessary without regard to other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States.

Section 31 provides that a judicial decision as to the unconstitutionality of any portion or application of the act shall be confined thereto.

Section 32 provides that the act shall become effective on October 1, 1934, except that applications for registration may be received on and after July 1, 1934, and that section 30 shall become effective upon enactment.

CLAIM OF STELIO VASSILIADIS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I enclose herewith a report which the Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to a claim of Mr. Stelio Vassiliadis, former vice consul of Spain at Kiev, Russia, for expenditures made by him at that post from March 1, 1918, to the end of February 1920, in representing the interests of the United States at that post in the absence of the American consul, Mr. Douglas Jenkins, who was obliged to depart on account of war conditions.

I recommend that an appropriation in the amount suggested by the Secretary of State be authorized in order to reimburse Mr. Vassiliadis for the expenditures made by him during the above-mentioned period.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1934.

[Enclosures: Report of the Secretary of State with enclosures.]

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EDITORIALS ON GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a symposium of brief excerpts from certain American newspaper editorials on the subject of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Boston (Mass.) Transcript, January 11, 1934:

"The advocates of the seaway have failed to convince the country that it would fulfill the claims made for it.

"Subservience of the Senate in this matter would give color to the idea that it was content to act merely as the agent of the Executive."

Philadelphia (Pa.) Inquirer, January 23, 1934:

"If the Senate ratifies this treaty, it will hand to the United States a white elephant that will need to be fed constantly. The scheme cannot be made to pay."

Ogden (Utah) Standard-Examiner, January 15, 1934:

"This opposition to the St. Lawrence Treaty shows how varied and often conflicting are the interests of whole groups of people living within the boundaries of this country."

Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, January 21, 1934:

"The waterway to Europe is, theoretically, a great boon for our Northwestern farmers, yet this huge expenditure of money is to provide a passageway which is frozen up 6 months out of the year. If we were Canadians, we would agree with the Toronto Globe that it is a treaty 'which fairly bristles with satisfactory points.' But we are Americans and there is good reason why we should view the matter in a different light."

Scranton (Pa.) Times, January 16, 1934:

"As to the cost of the project there is wide disagreement. The Federal Power Commission places the cost at $272,453,000, to be reduced by a contribution from the State of New York to $182,726,250. But Senator WAGNER fixes the cost at $573,136,000. 'And this estimate', declares the Baltimore Sun, 'is far below that which has been made by many students of the subject.'"

Newport News (Va.) Press, January 12, 1934:

"And we are surprised that the President has approved such a project, regardless of what Canada may do if we refuse to go along with her."

Wheeling (W.Va.) Intelligencer, January 17, 1934:

"When the consequences are all taken into consideration, we may find that the money outlay would be the least cost of a water route to the Middle West."

Bangor (Maine) Commercial, January 16, 1934:

"There are plenty of arguments against ratification, perhaps one of the most effective with the Senators being that the terms of the proposed treaty are all in favor of Canada."

Philadelphia (Pa.) Inquirer, January 14, 1934:

"Conditions have changed materially since the treaty was negotiated, and the injury to American railways and to Atlantic ports would be correspondingly greater."

Newport News (Va.) Times-Herald, January 6, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty is virtually certain of defeat in the Senate, according to Associated Press reports from Washington today. The matter should not be allowed to rest there, however, and the seaway project ought to be removed conclusively from the immediate program of waterway development in the United States. That means, of course, there should be decisive defeat for this measure."

Indiana (Pa.) Gazette, January 15, 1934:

"One of the most dangerous elements that enters into the improvement of the St. Lawrence is the great volume of electricity that it is intended to generate by water power by that enterprise.

"That will take business from the coal mines and employment from men."

Norfolk (Va.) Ledger-Dispatch, January 6, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Treaty should be rejected if it is brought before the Senate."

Lincoln (Nebr.) Journal, January 16, 1934:

"It would seem this country's cost is too high compared to benefits accruing."

New Orleans (La.) Item, January 12, 1934:

"We have never yet seen an argument to justify the destruction of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway in order to promote a St. Lawrence waterway."

Wheeling (W.Va.) News, January 19, 1934:

"Why should our Government appropriate $272,000,000 to destroy their business and break down their value?

"More particularly, why should this Government appropriate $272,000,000 to divert commerce by way of the St. Lawrence River from lines established throughout the length of the United States?

"Why should we invest this sum of money to build up Montreal, Quebec, or some other Canadian port at the expense of Buffalo, New York City, Philadelphia, and Baltimore?

"There may be affirmative answers to these questions, but in the opinion of this paper the affirmative answers will be of a very doubtful force."

Galveston (Tex.) News, January 16, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence project holds possibilities of substantial benefit to the United States. We are convinced, however, that those advantages are not worth what it would cost, in money and sectional handicaps, to realize them under the Hoover treaty."

Philadelphia (Pa.) Commerce and Industry, January 1934:

"There is plenty of logic, and certainly in view of recent disclosures nothing unreasonable, in the demand voiced by some 500 delegates to the waterways convention called last month in Philadelphia under the leadership of Mayor J. Hampton Moore that further consideration of the proposed St. Lawrence Canal Treaty be postponed until an official economic survey of the project has been made by a competent unbiased United States commission."

Keyser (W.Va.) News-Tribune, January 12, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty, which calls for the expenditure of from one billion to half billion, depending upon whether proponents or opponents are doing the estimating, should not be ratified by the United States Senate."

Salem (Ohio) News, January 11, 1934:

"Unfortunately it has not been demonstrated by any competent authority that the vastly expensive task of opening the Great Lakes to ocean traffic is logical."

Wilmington (N.C.) Star, January 16, 1934:

"A special board of engineers created by the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1925 reported adversely upon the Great Lakes to the Hudson route, as did the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in 1927."

Binghamton (N.Y.) Press, January 10, 1934:

"Mr. Roosevelt will send a special message to Congress calling on the Senate to ratify the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty. There may be enough votes in the Senate to ratify, but there is not enough prosperity in the United States to afford the diversion of trade from American ports, American channels, and American bottoms, which the British control of the St. Lawrence project would inevitably bring about."

Brooklyn (N.Y.) Eagle, January 12, 1934:

"Our chief complaint is that the President's arguments in favor of spending large sums to facilitate the transportation of wheat and other goods through the St. Lawrence waterway do not fit in with his general program as it has been developed up to date. The St. Lawrence Rapids are not the real barriers to increased exports. Unless we get rid of other barriers there can be no benefit from developing this new waterway."

Canton (Ohio) Repository and News, January 11, 1934:

"Unfortunately, it has not been demonstrated by any competent authority that the vastly expensive task of opening the Great Lakes to ocean traffic is logical."

Clarksburg (W.Va.) Telegram, January 26, 1934:

"Objections to the treaty appear to be so numerous and so cogent that its consideration in the Federal Senate should proceed with due regard to all of them."

Wichita (Kans.) Eagle, January 12, 1934:

"America will spend $4 or $5 to Canada's $1 in developing the St. Lawrence waterway. But then no nation ever willingly goes 50-50 with Uncle Sam."

Norfolk (Va.) Virginia Pilot, January 12, 1934:

"The heart of the President's message is the plea that the St. Lawrence waterway is a national plan which should be considered nationally. That is a fair request. It is precisely on this broad ground that, in our opinion, the case for the waterway is weakest."

Parkersburg (W.Va.) Sentinel, January 22, 1934:

"We believe that the St. Lawrence Canal very well can wait until it is much more needed than it appears to be at the present time."

Beaver Falls(Pa.) News-Tribune, January 17, 1934:

"But just now with a new national policy inaugurated whereby the farmers are being subsidized to cut down their surpluses and the Government is coordinating the great railroad systems to prevent some of them from going into bankruptcy, one wonders whether or not such a gigantic waterway system, which will, of course, be subsidized by the Government, will be profitable."

Buffalo (N.Y.) Courier-Express, December 23, 1933:

"The Presidential support of the treaty obviously comes from Mr. Roosevelt's agreement with Chairman Walsh, of the power authority, an agreement probably dating back to his gubernatorial days, that only through the treaty can New York State get its chance to develop a great power project on the St. Lawrence. The President, we feel, has been poorly advised in this matter."

Greensboro (N.C.) News, January 19, 1934:

"Of the business, particularly within our own borders, that is left, what advantage is to be obtained from shifting it to the St. Lawrence waterway? Obviously there is the likelihood that a sizeable portion of it would go to British shipping. If foreign trade is retained or developed, the business would patently go to Canadian ports, as there are no major transocean shipping centers on the American side of the river, to the detriment of our own Atlantic port cities which are suffering from constricted commerce, as it is."

Jamestown (N.Y.) Evening Journal, January 8, 1934:

"Taxpaying organizations throughout the United States can justifiably protest against this enormous waste of resources."

Norfolk (Va.) Virginia-Pilot, January 9, 1934:

"The real point is that the St. Lawrence waterway program is of such doubtful merit at best, of such huge cost in any circumstances, and of such probable damage to establish port and transportation facilities, that it is open to attack from start to finish."

Charleston (W.Va.) Mail, January 17, 1934:

"A new threat faces West Virginia's coal industry.

"It comes at a time when some headway apparently is being made in getting this severely crippled business back on its feet.

"The threat resides in the proposed treaty between the United States and Great Britain providing for construction of the St. Lawrence waterway's projects linking the Great Lakes with the ocean."

Carbondale (Pa.) Leader, January 12, 1934:

"If the St. Lawrence seaway moved the Central States bodily to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the manufacturing cities on our East coast, to say nothing of the Gulf coast, would still have a substantial advantage in distance and in freight rates to the Pacific. No relief can or will come through the St. Lawrence."

New York (N.Y.) Times, January 12, 1934:

"The more immediate considerations were put with his usual succinctness by ex-Governor Smith, when he said in his report as a member of the National Transportation Committee, headed by the late President Coolidge:

"'I am opposed at this time to the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway, because it would be a waste of public funds. Present railway facilities are more than adequate to provide for everything which the proposed canal can accomplish.'"

Chicago (Ill.) Tribune, December 23, 1933:

"How the treaty in its present form has come to have any acceptance at all in this country is a question which needs to be answered. Perhaps the explanation is to be found in the words of Senator BENNETT CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri, at the St. Louis meeting. He said: 'Let me make it perfectly clear at the outset that there has been very widespread misapprehension and misrepresentation as to the provisions of this treaty. For several years a lobby has been maintained in Washington with propaganda agencies throughout the country the like of which has possibly never been seen in the country before. This lobby, headed by a man named Craig, has collected and expended literally hundreds of thousands of dollars in propaganda * * *.'"

Newburgh (N.Y.) News, January 13, 1934:

"The State has, or should have, ample power to regulate public-utility rates. It should not find it necessary to develop power resources in the St. Lawrence, for which there is no need, as a club against electric corporations."

Jefferson City (Mo.) Post, December 26, 1933:

"If and when the United States ratifies, its people as a whole will gain or lose by the transaction. But the Senators from the Middle West will think long and hard before they give their consent to an agreement which may hurt their constituents economically and themselves politically."

Passaic (N.J.) Herald-News, January 16, 1934:

"When the great St. Lawrence project was conceived we were rejoicing in good times. As matters are, we doubt the wisdom of visiting almost certain ruin on our railroads in return for a canal which freezes up in winter and would be of doubtful value to the Middle West in the long run.

* * * * * * *

"In opposing the Canadian Treaty now, we feel Al Smith is entirely right. And what may affect New York disastrously certainly cannot be good for New Jersey."

Manchester (N.H.) Union, January 12, 1934:

"The President's claim that Canada will probably proceed with power developments on the waterway within her own borders is irrelevant. This is certainly not a time to consider an investment of half a billion dollars simply to gratify an administrative dream of power development that may or may not be needed."

Clarksburg (W.Va.) Exponent, January 6, 1934:

"The development planned under this project would be of no benefit to our State, and as a whole would work detriment to the great ports of New England, to New York, and to Baltimore. It would permit a flood of foreign coal to reach the Great Lakes regions, where our State now gets a goodly portion of its all-too-small coal trade."

Springfield (Mass.) Union, January 20, 1934:

"The President calls attention 'to the simple fact that Canada alone can, if desired, provide a seaway within Canadian control.' As Canada is to reap the lion's share of any benefits that may accrue from such a development, why not, in fairness to United States taxpayers, allow Canada to proceed along that line if so disposed?"

Cincinnati (Ohio) Enquirer, January 12, 1934:

"The project is not economically sound, is not national in its possible benefits, and would not provide any significant volume of employment soon enough to aid in recovery."

Houston (Tex.) Post, January 11, 1934:

"'The United States never lost a war, nor won a conference', Senator CLARK says, but he thinks our record in that respect could be maintained without submitting to 'such an ignominious route as is proposed in the St. Lawrence Treaty.'"

Baltimore (Md.) Manufacturers Record, January 1934:

"At a recent conference in Philadelphia of those opposed to the ratification of the St. Lawrence Treaty, it was agreed to present demands to the present Congress for the defeat of the treaty, which was described as being 'damaging to American commerce and adding unnecessarily to the burden of taxpayers.' Two hundred commercial organizations east of the Mississippi River presented their opposition. Mayor Moore of Philadelphia, in voicing the adverse sentiment, pointed out that of the initial $300,000,000 expenditure, the United States would have to supply the major part of it, and when completed the entire project will probably cost the people of this country nearly $1,500,000,000."

Dayton (Ohio) Herald, January 12, 1934:

"The claims are so many and conflicting that the average American probably is 'on the fence' as to the wisdom and necessity of spending many millions of dollars on an investment whose benefits are, on the whole, of debatable character and whose ownership would be international."

Charlotte (N.C.) Textile Bulletin, January 18, 1934:

"Although it may be treason to oppose anything desired by President Roosevelt, we are bold enough to say that his advocacy of the St. Lawrence Treaty with Canada is unfortunate."

Poughkeepsie (N.Y.) Eagle-News, January 15, 1934:

"If it be selfish to try to keep the public money out of an undertaking that can only prove an economic failure, the foes of the treaty are convicted of the charge that Senator PITTMAN makes against them. If not, they are not deserving of his criticism.

Petersburg (Va.) Progress-Index, January 15, 1934:

"The direct and indirect benefits promised from the waterway are too intangible at this stage to warrant the support which the President feels it should have."

Newark (N.J.) Call, January 4, 1934:

"In his demand that Congress ratify the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty, President Roosevelt, it seems certain, will find that body far from amenable to his wishes."

Bluefield (W.Va.) Telegraph, January 19, 1934:

"Coal men are of the opinion if the St. Lawrence project is completed shipments of coal from England will supplant the tonnage from this section because it would be cheaper to boat it over than pay the freight by rail from this section."

Boston (Mass.) Christian Science Monitor, January 12, 1934:

"* * * the Government's case for the canal, as a canal, rests on economic studies made years ago when American crops were really moving to Europe and before farmers were paid to destroy their surplus.

"Whatever reason there may have been then for desiring the waterway, these studies are now out of date."

North Sacramento (Calif.) Journal, January 5, 1934:

"We believe Mr. Roosevelt is going too strong on the proposed St. Lawrence River canalization. It is liable to be a serious injury to this Nation."

St. Louis (Mo.) Star and Times, November 29, 1933:

"The plain truth seems to be that this treaty was a butting contest between a hard-headed Canadian diplomat and a soft-headed American, and the American—Secretary of State Stimson—came off a bad second."

Clarksburg (W.Va.) Exponent, January 11, 1934:

"Such a route as proposed would be open to navigation for about one half of each year, and the vast sums to be laid out would not be equitable in any way in view of the small amount of benefit which our country as a whole might reap."

Waterville (Maine) Sentinel, January 17, 1934:

"Probably the weakest of all President Roosevelt's policies is his St. Lawrence River development and it will be no great loss to the country as a whole if Congress refuses to support him in this."

New York (N.Y.) Gaelic American, January 20, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty, in spite of President Roosevelt's deserved popularity, will probably not be ratified by the United States Senate. The waterway project is, to a certain extent, in the line of progress, but it must be considered that it will be controlled by Canada where the St. Lawrence empties itself into the sea. At any moment, if any crisis should arise between the two countries, the canal could be closed to American shipping."

Lewiston (Maine) Journal, January 11, 1934:

"Maine's interests are certainly not located in the St. Lawrence project. Portland would be deadened. Our seaports would see no future in revival of commerce."

Boston (Mass.) Herald, January 12, 1934:

"A multitude of valid objections may readily be advanced against the ratification for which the President asks of the St. Lawrence Treaty with Canada."

Morgantown (W.Va.) Post, January 15, 1934:

"In addition to the compelling general reasons why the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty should be rejected by the Senate there is one strong local factor that should appeal to all West Virginians.

"According to James D. Francis, president of the Island Creek Coal Co., the construction of this waterway would permit European coal to be shipped into the Great Lakes territory and sold at prices under the present level."

Cincinnati (Ohio) Christian Standard, January 20, 1934:

"In addition to the antipathy of representatives from the Mississippi Valley and the railroads, there is the serious question whether we expect to have any such international trade as would justify this expense, and there is the further difficulty that electric power can be produced in steam plants much more cheaply than formerly, and there is no immediate prospect of needing as much electric power as this would produce."

Roanoke (Va.) World News, January 4, 1934:

"Counting interests and maintenance, it will hardly be claimed by anyone that without liberal Government subsidies, the proposed waterways can be operated as cheaply as the present freight rates from the Midwest to the Atlantic seaboard. Minnesota wheat is now laid down at Montreal for 6 cents a bushel. The proposed St. Lawrence waterways cannot meet that price without an immense amount of Government aid."

Seattle (Wash.) Times, January 20, 1934:

"Experience points the fact that St. Lawrence development is a doubtful business enterprise, and no war scare is pertinent."

Butte (Mont.) Standard, January 16, 1934:

"Opposition to the St. Lawrence project by economists is well typified by a report published in 1929 by the Brookings Institution of Washington, D.C. The Brookings report held that the larger and more modern ocean-going steamers would not use the St. Lawrence route because it was open for less than one half the year. It would be difficult for such vessels to find profitable employment elsewhere for the remainder of the year. Also, studies indicated that export traffic of grain from the Great Lakes area was economically destined to disappear."

Portland (Maine) News, January 17, 1934:

"But there exists a very great doubt in the minds of Americans everywhere as to the wisdom of embarking upon such a costly project, particularly now, when every dollar spent for recovery should be spent for recovery at home, not abroad."

Boston (Mass.) Post, January 12, 1934:

"While from his previously known attitude on the subject it was a foregone conclusion that President Roosevelt would recommend the ratification of the St. Lawrence River Waterway Treaty with Canada, the Post always was, and still is, utterly opposed to this project."

New York (N.Y.) Commercial and Financial Chronicle, January 13, 1934:

"It is to be remembered also that wheat is only one item where Empire preference is operating to the detriment of the United States. There are dozens of other items where the export trade from this country to Great Britain has also been virtually extinguished by the action of the Ottawa conference. Great Britain, of course, and her dominions are clearly within their rights in establishing the preferences referred to; but when it comes to opening a waterway for ocean steamships extending all the way to Duluth and having the United States itself pay for a large part of the cost, there ought to be insistence that the United States and Canada be once more placed upon equal terms in competing in the British market."

New Orleans (La.) Tribune, May 4, 1933:

"Our understanding of the St. Lawrence River Treaty convinces us that it should either be radically amended or else rejected."

Wichita (Kans.) Eagle, January 16, 1934:

"Marine engineers of Canada, in convention, said deep-sea shipping for the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes is a political dream. American experts point out that this water course would be frozen 5½ months per year."

Davenport (Iowa) Democrat, January 11, 1934:

"Residents of the Upper Mississippi Valley will keep an open mind as to the value to the valley of the St. Lawrence waterway, but are still to be convinced that it merits the favorable consideration which President Roosevelt asks as he submits to the Senate the so-called 'St. Lawrence Treaty with Canada.'"

Staunton (Va.) News-Leader, January 18, 1934:

"Disputes over water rights, power rights, control, rates, and many other questions are certain to arise.

"Canada and the United States have been at peace for over a hundred years, without a fortification on the entire border. Is it worth while to threaten that peace for a waterway of questionable economic advantage, at principal cost to ourselves, most of the advantages of which may accrue to our neighbor?"

Fall River (Mass.) Herald-News, January 20, 1934:

"It is hard to see the Senate agreeing to a plan to build up a port in Canadian territory at the sacrifice of the ports on the North Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico. That would be the result of the deepening of the St. Lawrence River, as is agreed by shipping authorities, and it appears not to be warranted in the possible savings which would result from the project and the great cost of completing it."

Albion (Mich.) Evening Recorder, January 13, 1934:

"We are not at all sure this St. Lawrence Waterway is anything the country needs or wants.

"Unless it can be shown that the seaway would, in fact, benefit the central regions of the Nation as it clearly would the northern fringe, the Senate would do well to disapprove this treaty and the colossal expenditure entailed by it."

Jackson (Miss.) News, January 23, 1934:

"President Roosevelt can be wrong, although he rarely is. That St. Lawrence-to-the-Great Lakes waterway project doesn't look good—mighty nice for Canada, of course, but not much in it for this Nation."

New York (N.Y.) Sun, January 12, 1934:

"Canada will not go it alone for the obvious reason that if the combined business of Canada and the United States will not justify the seaway the business of Canada alone will certainly not justify it."

Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Gazette, January 14, 1934:

"The issue, it appears, is whether the economic policy of the United States from now on is to be aimed at national self-containment or at a broad expansion of international trade. If the latter, the seaway may benefit the country considerably by reducing transportation costs on exports from the Middle West. If the former, the United States will have about as much need for the seaway as it has for a transcontinental bobsled course."

Albany (N.Y.) Knicker-Press, January 20, 1934:

"Wouldn't it be surprising if it were discovered, after the hundreds of millions had been poured into the St. Lawrence, that American shippers could save nothing by using it? The claims of St. Lawrence economy need official examination, and no survey of that sort has ever been made."

Williamsburg (Va.) Virginia Gazette, January 12, 1934:

"The advantages and gains of the St. Lawrence Canal system would not help the southern area nor the Pacific coastal area, but would have an opposite effect."

Niagara Falls (N.Y.) Gazette, January 11, 1934:

"General opinion is that the project is too costly to undertake in these times and quite too problematical in its ultimate value to warrant the experiment."

Boone (Iowa) News-Republican, January 13, 1934:

"It is deplorable that just as the American farmers of the Mississippi Basin were about to realize on their long-cherished dream of cheaper transportation of their produce by water, perplexing snags should develop in the treaty governing the construction of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway. These must be eliminated before the waterway can be finished."

South Bend (Ind.) Tribune, January 12, 1934:

"The Brookings Economic Institute compiled and published impressive facts and figures in 1929. The Brookings economists condemned the St. Lawrence waterway project for various reasons. Not the least important objection in the Brookings report was that the St. Lawrence waterway is ice-bound and worthless for transportation for about half of each year. President Roosevelt did not see fit to mention that in his message to the Senate."

Lawrence (Mass.) Tribune, January 9, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence waterway development has been under discussion for nearly a quarter century. * * * From a strictly commercial view there would seem less reason for the development now, either for shipping or power, than at any time in the past."

Centerville (Iowa) Iowegian, December 28, 1933:
"As the discussion proceeds considerable doubt is raised as to whether it is wise to proceed with the St. Lawrence waterway improvement."

Lynchburg (Va.) News, January 18, 1934:
"In view of these facts it is with poor grace that advocates of the treaty speak of sectionalism and there is no foundation for any charge that opponents are blocking any part of the President's recovery plan."

Baltimore (Md.) Evening Sun, December 28, 1933:
"There are a great many very good reasons for opposing this treaty. * * *"

St. Petersburg (Fla.) Independent, January 9, 1934:
"At present the opponents of the treaty predict that there are sufficient votes in Congress to kill it. It looks as if the subject might better be postponed until we find out which way we are going."

Gloucester (Mass.) Times, January 15, 1934:
"Shipping Mississippi Valley freight down through Canada would mean great loss of traffic to all eastern railroads and of business for all Atlantic ports. We doubt even that this fact would be offset by any such cheaper water rates as the Midwest expects for its freights."

Noblesville (Ind.) Ledger, January 16, 1934:
"Other countries feel that Uncle Sam has so much money that it is all right to take a part of it away without any real benefit to the old gentleman, but just now this country needs all the money it has, and more, too. So, let all the necessary reservations be added to the treaty."

Oneonta (N.Y.) Star, January 17, 1934:
"In view of the many valid objections that have been raised it is inconceivable that Congress will ratify the treaty and almost inexplainable that the administration is urging such a course."

Rock Island (Ill.) Argus, January 15, 1934:
"The Senators from the Middle West if they have regard for the best interests of their section, and for that matter of the country at large, will oppose ratification."

Lowell (Mass.) Evening Leader, January 12, 1934:
"Judging from news stories and comments in the press, New England is not enthusiastic for the St. Lawrence waterway proposition. The Providence Chamber of Commerce went on record against it the other day. And similar organizations elsewhere have taken the same stand."

New York (N.Y.) Marine Journal, January 15, 1934:
"Many who have earnestly supported the President in his efforts to rehabilitate the financial and industrial structure of the country cannot go along with him on the St. Lawrence waterway project."

Peoria (Ill.) Star, January 11, 1934:
"The treaty is particularly objectionable to the entire Midwest and especially the Mississippi Valley. Possibly the greatest objection is recognition of the right of Canada to have something to say regarding Lake Michigan."

New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Times, January 13, 1934:
"Senator WALSH'S opposition to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty is in accord with the attitude expressed by many commercial and civic bodies in this State."

Flora (Ind.) Press, January 5, 1934:
"On the basis of impartial estimates as to the amount of American commerce the canal would carry, it is claimed every ton of freight moved along it would cost the taxpayers $4."

St. Augustine (Fla.) Record, January 8, 1934:
"Yes; the St. Lawrence needs more investigation."

Peoria (Ill.) Journal-Transcript, January 14, 1934:
"Senators concerned with the development and protection of American interests as against international interests object to the surrender of American money to the benefit of Canadian labor and financial interests."

Schenectady (N.Y.) Union Star, January 11, 1934:
"In neither its electric-power nor its navigation aspects does the proposed St. Lawrence canal merit at this time the support of the American people."

Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin, January 13, 1934:
"Sentiment in New England hasn't been changed because the President has asked for the ratification of the St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty. Democrats as well as Republicans are outspoken against it and urging members of Congress to refuse to ratify."

Fort Wayne (Ind.) News Sentinel, January 12, 1934:
"The St. Lawrence waterway project would probably cost more than a billion dollars before construction was completed, rather than the half billion that its advocates have counted on."

Newburyport (Mass.) News, January 15, 1934:
"Shipping Mississippi Valley freight down through Canada would mean great loss of traffic to all eastern railroads and of business for all Atlantic ports. We doubt even that this fact would be offset by any such cheaper water rates as the Midwest expects for its freights."

New Haven (Conn.) Register, January 11, 1934:
"The objections to such a venture are historic. It has been pointed out repeatedly that the greater part of such benefits as would come from it would be to Canada, greater in the way of aiding Canadian commerce, trade in grain from the interior in particular."

Chicago (Ill.) Journal of Commerce, January 19, 1934:
"Late in the Hoover administration a nonpartisan committee, headed by the late Calvin Coolidge, and listing in its membership such distinguished men of affairs as Mr. Alfred E. Smith and Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, surveyed the utility and the practicality of turning the Great Lakes into links of an international waterway from the interior of Canada and the United States to the sea.

"In the minds of these distinguished men, the St. Lawrence project could not pay for itself—could not even pay carrying charges."

New Britain (Conn.) Herald, January 11, 1934:
"Business interests in New England appear to be whole-heartedly opposed to the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway, joining New York in this opposition."

Salem (Mass.) Evening News, January 11, 1934:
"It is claimed nowadays that the generation of electric power from steam plants is nearly or quite as economical as the operation of water-power plants, and if so, the advantages from development of such power would be mythical. In a time when economy is so much needed, such a project seems both wasteful and dubious."

Brooklyn (N.Y.) Citizen, January 16, 1934:
"The treaty would result in depriving the southern and Atlantic ports of much trade. There is plenty of electric current for this part of the country to be obtained from the northern part of New York State, which is largely mountainous. And, as Senator WAGNER points out, this is not the time to expend so large a sum of money as would be called for, which would go largely to pay Canadian labor, when millions of our men are out of work."

Gloversville (N.Y.) Leader-Republican, January 19, 1934:
"Senate endorsement of the venture has been asked on a basis of national judgment, with sectional objections put aside. If the project is to be considered from that angle alone, one prime point on which to judge it is the question of whether the Nation with its present debt load and the Nation's people with the burden they are going to carry for a generation to come in paying off that debt, can afford any half-billion-dollar venture such as this, or one costing even half that sum."

Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, January 16, 1934:
"The people along the Atlantic seaboard, as a general proposition, are opposed to the St. Lawrence deeper waterway."

Brooklyn (N.Y.) Eagle, January 12, 1934:
"President Roosevelt's message urging the Senate to ratify the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty with Canada falls far short of being as compelling as most of his communications to Congress."

Chicago (Ill.) Daily Tribune, January 16, 1934:
"It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the freight rates on grain from the head of the Lakes to Montreal in recent years have been as low as they ever are likely to be after a St. Lawrence seaway is constructed. It cannot be argued, then, that high freight rates are keeping our northwestern grain from the world markets. As a matter of fact, Dakota wheat would not have been shipped to Liverpool if there had been no freight charge to tidewater."

Bridgeport (Conn.) Telegram, January 15, 1934:
"If we have too much wheat, we plow it under and destroy it, paying the farmers out of the Treasury. If we have too much corn, we do likewise. With too much cotton we reduce the acreage and give the farmers baled cotton out of the Government warehouse. With too many pigs, we kill the litters of young pigs and pay the farmer for having put less pork and bacon on the market.

"But when we have too much transportation with existing facilities only partly used, we dip into the Treasury to build a parallel line that will throw thousands of American railroad men out of work in order to keep Canadian ships busy. Is that the spirit of the 'new deal'?"

Mobile (Ala.) Press, January 17, 1934:
"The least the President could do for the opponents of the treaty, who have not been slow to point out that the waterway may work havoc in many sections of the country, including our own, is to order a new survey. The question of whether the potential worth justifies the expense is one that ought to be answered honestly if the 'new deal' is to mean something more than the continuation of the old political fallacies and weaknesses."

Plainfield (N.J.) Courier-News, January 18, 1934:
"Never has there been a survey to study the economic effects of this project on American trade, nor a study as to the ability of New York State to absorb the power created. Without this knowledge it would be folly to plunge into a costly experiment with an international canal. If we have money to spend, it would better be spent on American waterways which have been neglected. We cannot afford to lay out large sums at the cost of American commerce."

Chicago (Ill.) Tribune, January 18, 1934:
"One by one the alleged benefits of the St. Lawrence route are being broken down by practical application, just as the theory of a 7 or 8 cents per bushel saving on grain vanished when the inland-lake lines proved during the last 2 or 3 years that they could handle the traffic from the head of the Lakes to the seaboard for 4 cents per bushel and even less."

Bridgeport (Conn.) Telegram, January 13, 1934:
"The excuse for the existence of this St. Lawrence waterway, which seemed good at a time when maximum prosperity was the rule and when factories were hardly able to move their goods and raw materials fast enough, has ceased to exist since the collapse of 1929 left our common carriers with less business than they needed to stay alive."

Rockford (Ill.) Register-Republic, January 12, 1934:
"Senators will do well to determine whether the cost of securing cheap navigation and power and the cementing of Canadian friendship are not too high a price for American taxpayers to pay."

New Haven (Conn.) Register, January 11, 1934:

"The objections to such a venture are historic. It has been pointed out repeatedly that the greater part of such benefits as would come from it would be to Canada, greater in the way of aiding Canadian commerce, trade in grain from the interior in particular. A more recent objection on the benefit score is that such immediate industrial activity and employment as it would bring would go in major part to Canadian contractors and workers. Objections to its adverse effect on Atlantic-seaboard ports have seemed well founded. If it will not take existing commerce from them, then it must be seen to have little commercial possibility at all."

Rockford (Ill.) Star, January 12, 1934:

"The program Mr. Roosevelt has offered is nationalistic. The seaway treaty runs a discordant color across his fabric. There are national programs which for a similar expenditure of money will give many more Americans work and will result in far more practical benefits to northwestern farmers and Lakes manufacturers than the St. Lawrence seaway."

Huntington (W.Va.) Advertiser, January 15, 1934:

"Considerations of general economic stability and the good of all sections of the country are against the project."

Galveston (Tex.) Tribune, January 8, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Treaty isn't a major item of legislation in the present Congress, because it is outweighed by other outstanding matters. But its effect may be far-reaching, and it should not be rushed through without proper safeguards. All present signs indicate that attempts to force it through without reservations will be strongly resisted."

Danville (Va.) Register, January 12, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Treaty is complicated by questions of foreign policy and is actually an undertaking begun in the Hoover administration. It is not, strictly speaking, the type of issue on which there should be a confidence vote. It is true that party policies are public policies, but the ratification of the St. Lawrence Treaty involves entirely questions of public policy that are not party questions."

Nashville (Tenn.) Tennessean, January 17, 1934:

"Our Government is now engaged in the experiment of curtailing farm production so as to make it fit domestic consumption. It therefore seems somewhat of an economic paradox that at the same time we should be undertaking such unusual outlays to improve a route to foreign markets."

Greenville (S.C.) News, January 15, 1934:

"The American citizenship, generally speaking, is probably not in position to pass intelligent judgment on the merits of this project; but it has sound ground to feel that before we agree to the expenditure of several hundred million dollars in this fashion, the wisdom and value of the project should be demonstrated beyond doubt."

Providence (R.I.) Journal, January 19, 1934:

"There are substantial reasons that would justify the Senate in refusing to ratify the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty."

Erie (Pa.) Times, January 2, 1934:

"* * * an extravagant proposal that would bring business havoc to the port of Erie and American shipping on the Great Lakes."

Tulsa (Okla.) Tribune, January 21, 1934:

"It would be a great thing for our country if we could open the Great Lakes ports to deep-sea shipping, but in so doing we should guard against giving away too many of our national rights and crippling our own potentially important water transportation facilities."

Amsterdam (N.Y.) Recorder, January 10, 1934:

"If the times were not out of joint, such vast sums would in themselves act as a deterrent, but when there is such a hysteria for extravagance as now persists there is no telling what may happen at Washington. We can only hope, in such circumstances, that a sufficient number of Senators will have retained enough of their common sense to persuade them of the folly of such an undertaking at this time."

Cincinnati (Ohio) Times, January 13, 1934:

"The biggest objection to the St. Lawrence Treaty is based on sound public policy. Senator WAGNER, so friendly to the administration in all other respects, opposes the treaty because it would encourage fresh competition in transportation at a time when the Government is trying to unify and coordinate our transportation facilities."

Asheville (N.C.) Citizen-Times, January 14, 1934:

"The strongest thing in favor of the ratification of the St. Lawrence Treaty with Canada is the fact that it has President Roosevelt's approval.

"We must confess, nevertheless, that after carefully reading both the President's message to the Senate urging that the treaty be ratified and a summary of Senator WAGNER's report opposing ratification we are more impressed by the Senator's arguments than we are by those of Mr. Roosevelt."

Syracuse (N.Y.) Herald, January 15, 1934:

"So far as it threatens the established transportation interests in a great section of the United States—and this is only one of several valid objections—the St. Lawrence Canal Treaty is a remarkable departure from the spirit and principle of the national recovery movement * * *."

New York (N.Y.) Barron's, January 22, 1934:

"Certainly the project, which at earliest will not bring in a return until 1942, will not facilitate our already difficult fiscal task. And this for two reasons: First, the direct costs will be a drain on the Treasury, and if the Panama Canal and Muscle Shoals are any precedent, the actual costs will be more than double the estimates. Second, the threatened Government competition with private transportation and power may seriously affect the return of investor confidence so essential to new private financing, which alone can relieve the Treasury of emergency relief expenditures."

Ralston (Nebr.) Industrial, December 28, 1933:

"All living in the section of the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys should insist on a waterway to the Gulf, and keeping the section limiting the diversion of the Lake Michigan out of the St. Lawrence Treaty is one step in attaining the final seaway to the Gulf."

St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat, May 25, 1933:

"The Senate should not ratify it in its present form, if at all, and every effort should be made to convince the Senate that it is not a fair treaty, that it will work great harm to a large section of the United States, and that it contains an inexcusable surrender of American sovereignty."

Greenville (Miss.) Democrat, January 20, 1934:

"It would hinder progress in the development of the Mississippi as a navigable stream, and certainly it would take away tonnage from the railroads that are now big taxpayers to the United States."

Baltimore (Md.) Sun, January 12, 1934:

"There should be a resurvey of the cost of the project and also of its need in view of the profound alterations that have occurred in our foreign-trade relations."

Jamestown (N.Y.) Post, January 12, 1934:

"In view of present economic conditions it does not appear that we need new shipping facilities or any great addition to power. At any rate these developments could wait until there would be need for them."

New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune, January 12, 1934:

"The treaty under fire is, be it remembered, a Hoover carry-over, outside and apart from the Roosevelt administration's recovery program. Those Senators and the millions of other Americans who object to the pact as it stands, on the fundamental grounds they have stated, can insist upon saving reservations without fear of reproach or disloyalty to Mr. Roosevelt or his recovery program."

Atlantic (Iowa) News, January 3, 1934:

"There has arisen considerable doubt as to the value of this waterway project. * * *"

Chicago (Ill.) Tribune, December 23, 1933:

"How the treaty in its present form has come to have any acceptance at all in this country is a question which needs to be answered."

Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph, December 21, 1933:

"Analysis of the general proposal, and especially of the present form of the treaty, has led to the wide-spread belief that the United States got the worse end of the bargain in the negotiation of this treaty."

Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union, January 18, 1934:

"Leading newspapers of the country are voicing protest against the ratification of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty, signed by Mr. Hoover a short time before his term of office as President expired.

"If previous big jobs are to be taken as examples, the cost of the St. Lawrence project would probably run nearer to a billion dollars than anything else. It would be surprising if the Senate accepts the offer made by Canada—which general report suggests is 'a good thing for Canada', and an unnecessary and undesirable thing for the United States."

Jamestown (N.Y.) Evening Journal, January 10, 1934:

"SHOULD BE DEFEATED

"If there are at present a sufficient number of votes in the Senate to prevent that ratification of this treaty, it cannot be submitted too soon. Knowledge that this vast waste of public funds had been prevented would be encouraging to the overburdened taxpayers of the State and of the Nation."

Hartford (Conn.) Courant, January 12, 1934:

"That the project has no immediate urgency few can question. As a transportation agency, the saving it would effect seems largely theoretical, and when viewed in its most favorable aspect entirely unjustified by the cost. As a power development it is not needed, nor will it be while there continues to exist the great surplus of electrical energy we now have."

Birmingham (Ala.) News, January 16, 1934:

"Without attempting to go into a complete analysis of the project, one can take it for granted that the effectuation of the St. Lawrence Treaty would tend to be disadvantageous to the southern part of the United States."

Las Vegas (N.Mex.) Optic, January 26, 1934:

"Casual study of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty will induce most American citizens to protest its acceptance by the Senate of the United States Congress. Our citizens owe it to themselves and posterity to enter early and vigorous objections to the proposed acceptance."

Huntington (W.Va.) Advertiser, January 24, 1934:

"No section of the country would feel the blow more than southern West Virginia, dependent as it is for its prosperity and well-being upon the coal industry's profitable trade with the Great Lakes region and the railroads engaged in carrying the coal to the market.

"The appeal of the Kanawha operators to Senator NEELY and Senator HATFIELD to set themselves against the waterway project unquestionably speaks the sentiment of every West Virginian who has given a moment of serious thought to the matter."

Shreveport (La.) Journal, January 24, 1934:

"No difficulty need be experienced in finding ways to spend our money just now, and with the annual deficit increasing at a terrific rate as the national debt climbs to hitherto unknown heights, it would be extremely unwise for the United States Government to engage in any enterprise about which there is such wide difference of opinion. The St. Lawrence waterway project can wait until times are flush again and we have money to 'throw at the birds.'"

Martinsburg (W.Va.) Journal, January 24, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence canal very well can wait until it is much more needed than it appears to be at the present time. The proposed waterways would be a severe blow to the railway systems which, should they be driven out of existence, would throw thousands of men out of employment."

Huntington (W.Va.) Advertiser, January 20, 1934:

"Such a waterway would find little use as a canal, the basic purpose of which ought to be to carry ships. Such use would be limited and expensive, subsidized by the taxpayers and presenting a threat to the railroads now embattled and to the great eastern seaports. Authorities on the subject say that the canal, as projected, would be frozen over 5½ months of the year. After all, the purpose of a canal is to carry ships, and it is not good logic nor sound business to build one for any other purpose. We again urge Senators NEELY and HATFIELD to oppose ratification of this St. Lawrence Treaty."

Yakima (Wash.) Herald, January 23, 1934:

"It does not rate highly as a necessary power project, because the territory it would serve already enjoys a surplus of electrical energy. As the facts become known, Congress will be less inclined to approve the work."

Jamestown (N.Y.) Evening Journal, January 11, 1934:

"With the national debt mounting to figures beyond the comprehension of the average mind, a halt should be called to adding any further burden for gigantic engineering undertakings to change the face of the earth."

Hastings (Mich.) Banner:

"Theoretically the St. Lawrence waterway seems feasible. Nothing we have yet read, however, has convinced us that the project is practical."

Albion (Mich.) Recorder, January 18, 1934:

"Apparently the waterway is far from being accepted by either country as an essential project."

Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, January 15, 1934:

"This treaty does not benefit the American farmer. It gives the Canadian grain producer, now enjoying lower rail rates to lake and ocean port, an added advantage over his American competitor in world markets."

San Jose (Calif.) Mercury-Herald, January 18, 1934:

"Finally the waterway might lead to complications in war. Great Britain blockaded Germany in the last war, and we have no assurance it would not close the St. Lawrence waterway should it become involved in war."

Brooklyn (N.Y.) Times-Union, January 7, 1934:

"The treaty provides for the canalization of the St. Lawrence River and practically for the erection of Montreal into the leading north Atlantic port."

Newport News (Va.) Press, January 25, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence waterway project is both unsound and unfair; and we are surprised that the President, regardless of the pressure which very probably has been brought to bear upon him, has let himself in for such an abortive undertaking."

Grand Island (Nebr.) Independent, January 16, 1934:

"The St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty contains provisions, in its original form, that ought to be intolerable to every Senator who has a regard for the integrity of the Nation, in a physical sense, and likewise a regard for the interests of all sections."

Little Rock (Ark.) Democrat, January 15, 1934:

"Doubtless Congress will have something to say about amendments before the treaty is accepted."

Chicago (Ill.) Traffic World, January 20, 1934:

"The treaty proposed by President Roosevelt with Canada for construction of a St. Lawrence canal should not be ratified."

Buffalo (N.Y.) News, January 15, 1934:

"Extended studies made by experts have convinced New York State that the St. Lawrence is economically unsound, and, therefore, would be wasteful. * * * It is time to call a halt on further great expenditures, particularly for such an unnecessary project as the St. Lawrence seaway. It must be hoped that the treaty will not command the necessary two-thirds vote in the Senate."

Manchester (Conn.) Herald, January 12, 1934:

"President Roosevelt has sent in his St. Lawrence Treaty to the Senate with every outward manifestation of his usual confidence that the Senate will grant his request for its ratification. But we don't believe he has any expectation whatever that it will. It is a perfectly fine scheme, logical and scientific, and in about a hundred years, perhaps, it might fit into the American set-up—maybe in a good deal less than that. But it is not a matter of the nervous, apprehensive today."

New Brunswick (N.J.) Times, January 15, 1934:

"It would be far worse to increase the transportation facilities of the Nation, either by rail or by water, than it would be to increase the pork, cotton, and wheat supplies, because the railroads, suffering now from too much competition and too much taxation, form the backbone of the Nation. Proceeding with the St. Lawrence project now or in any time in the future would be tumbling this once giant structure, which needs strengthening."

Red Lake Falls (Minn.) Gazette, January 18, 1934:

"With the railroads on both sides of the border line getting Government aid we can see no immediate demand for the completion of this project, which would not give one cent of actual benefit to the farmers of the Middle West."

Albany (N.Y.) News, January 6, 1934:

"The real joker, of course, is that after being required to put up all the new money, pay the interest charges, and make good any losses during construction (which is a likely element in building the St. Lawrence River power dams), the United States retains no control, and the treaty specifically gives Canada complete ownership of the works built on her territory with American money."

Elkader (Iowa) Register, January 18, 1934:

"As a measure to employ labor, it would help Canada more than our own country. Apparently the Canadian diplomats who negotiated the treaty were more clever than our own representatives."

Portland (Maine) Express, January 11, 1934:

"From the national point of view which the President so emphasizes, the Senate cannot look with favor upon a proposal that so seriously dislocates American interests and so unwisely fosters Canadian."

"THE GOOD NEIGHBOR YEAR"—ADDRESS BY AMBASSADOR JOSEPHUS DANIELS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address by Ambassador Josephus Daniels to the Lions Club in Mexico City on Thursday, February 1, 1934, on The Good Neighbor Year.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The present year, as it relates to policies on this hemisphere, will be known in history as the "good-neighbor year." Already it is reaping the fruits of new and better understanding between Pan American countries. The object lesson of this new spirit reached its climax on Monday of this week when, for the first time in this generation, representatives of every Pan American nation sat down with Secretary Hull as host at a dinner which marked an important milestone of unity and cooperation. As some members of the family, for a time separated, reunited at the common board presided over by the president of the Pan American Union, sat down at the table to break bread they were cheered by the realization that no member of the American family of States was absent from the board. From Terra del Fuego to Campabello every son and daughter, with full recognition and with every privilege of a happy home, rejoiced that, outside the Chaco controversy, perfect peace and amity and accord reigned supreme. This happy situation, inaugurating a solidified and understanding unity perfected at Montevideo, was fittingly characterized by Secretary Hull in these words:

"No finer or more valuable example of nations coming together in a spirit of whole-hearted friendliness, full-faced in each other's motives, and purposes and the disposition and will to promote peace, economic and cultural ideals for the mutual benefit of each, has been exhibited within two generations than that of the American nations recently assembled at Montevideo.

"When all of these righteous movements are at their lowest ebbs in other parts of the world the peoples there should be heartened and encouraged by these timely and outstanding achievements in this hemisphere."

The spirit of the Montevideo Conference, taken in connection with President Roosevelt's good-neighbor policy announced a few days after his inauguration, and his declaration in Washington at the Woodrow Wilson Foundation dinner on December 28, emphasized the realization of the heart's desire of peace-loving people in both Americas. Three outstanding policies, not always understood and not always observed, deserve to be emphasized today. They are:

1. The Monroe Doctrine, enunciated to protect all nations on this hemisphere from colonization or colonial ambitions of European governments, was proclaimed in a decade when the rule of nations was "let him take who has the power, and let him keep who can." The Monroe Doctrine was limited to putting a veto on European designs upon nations not always able to defend themselves against superior forces. It forbade any interposition by any European power for the purpose of oppressing or controlling in any manner the destinies of the Latin American Governments "who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great considerations and just principles acknowledged." It was first conceived in the mind of Jefferson, and grew out of his belief that the United States ought "never to suffer Europe to meddle with cis-Atlantic affairs." Our early purpose with reference to the countries on this hemisphere was thus stated: "We aim not at the possession of any portion of them ourselves." No claim to violate that declaration was ever made by the United States, and it never assumed under the Monroe Doctrine to do for itself what it forbade to European nations. It was a self-denying declaration as well as notice to Europe that it could not establish colonies on this side of the Atlantic. Most of the misunderstandings in Pan America have grown out of the misconception either in the United States or other American nations. They have sometimes forgotten that the Doctrine gave no right or power for any nation on this hemisphere to invoke the Monroe Doctrine to justify any policy that trenched upon colonialism or annexation.

2. In order to give assurance to all Pan American States, troubled because of the supposed desire of certain forces in the United States to add to its domain at the expense of its neighbors, President Wilson, in an important utterance at Mobile,

Ala., on December 27, 1913, with reference to what he called "our neighbors, the Latin American States", declared:

"We must prove ourselves their friends and champions upon terms of perfect equality. You cannot be friends at all except upon terms of honor. We must show ourselves their friends by comprehending their interest, whether it squares with our interest or not."

He then laid down this Wilson declaration, a worthy addition to the Monroe Doctrine:

"I want to take this occasion to say that the United States will never again seek one additional foot of territory by conquest."

And in the face of organized propaganda at home, and with misunderstanding as to his motives and actions abroad, he sternly set his face in delicate and grave situations to hold his country to his Mobile declaration. It is now the fixed policy of the United States, and no weak nation need ever fear the loss of a foot of its territory by action of the United States.

3. When President Roosevelt came into office less than 1 year ago, he found the compelling need of closer accord between the nations of the New World. American marines had been employed in some small countries. All the countries were not officially on speaking terms. There was necessity for a clarification and amplification of the Pan American policy of the new administration. Mr. Roosevelt lost no time in making known the new policy in three important declarations:

(a) In his inaugural address he announced his broad policy, embracing Latin American nations as well as others, in this statement:

"I will dedicate this Nation to the policy of the good neighbor—the neighbor who resolutely respects himself and, because he does so, respects the rights of others—the neighbor who respects his obligations and respects the sanctity of his agreements in and with a world of neighbors."

(b) In April of this year before the governing board of the Pan American Union, in celebrating Pan American day in Washington City, President Roosevelt heartened all on this hemisphere when he said:

"I regard existing conflicts between four of our sister republics as a backward step."

After enunciating his idea of the good neighbor, the President said:

"In this spirit the people of every republic on our continent are coming to a deep understanding of the fact that the Monroe Doctrine, of which so much has been written and spoken for more than a century, was and is directed at the maintenance of independence by the peoples of the continent. It was aimed and is aimed against the acquisition in any manner of the control of additional territory in this hemisphere by any non-American power."

(c) In his address at the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, December 28, President Roosevelt quoted former President Wilson's Mobile observation:

"Comprehension must be the soil in which shall grow all the fruits of friendship."

And his declaration:

"The United States would never again seek an additional foot of territory by conquest."

And his statement, with special reference to our Latin American neighbors, that—

"Material interests must never be made superior to human liberty."

President Roosevelt frankly said:

"As we know, and largely as a result of the World War and its after effects, the complete carrying out of that policy of unselfishness has not in every case been attained."

And he added:

"In this we, all of us, all of these American nations, have some share of the responsibility."

The President then laid down a doctrine worthy of ranking with those of Monroe and Wilson and a necessary corollary to guarantee their effectiveness in this generation, in these words:

"It therefore seemed clear to me as President that the time has come to supplement the declaration of President Wilson by the further declaration that the definite policy of the United States from now on is one opposed to armed intervention.

"The maintenance of constitutional government in other nations is not, after all, a sacred obligations devolving upon the United States alone. The maintenance of law and the orderly processes of government in this hemisphere is the concern of each individual nation within its borders first of all. It is only if, and when, the failure of orderly processes affects the other nations of the continent that it becomes their concern; and the point to stress is that in such an event it becomes the joint concern of the whole continent in which we are all neighbors."

Here we have a frank avowal of a policy that is a radical departure from the assertion, never accepted by his countrymen, of a former President of the United States to the effect that the Monroe Doctrine could be invoked to force the authorities of one nation to intervene if another nation on this hemisphere did not pay its debts or preserve order. The newer and broader doctrine quoted above is truly a Pan American new deal.

The best part of President Roosevelt's declaration is that he has made the deed follow the word. This is seen in the United States acting in concert with other nations in the changed and improved relations with Cuba, El Salvador, and Haiti; in cooperation to settle the Chaco controversy without war; and by other evidences showing that he regards the weal of nations on this hemisphere as a joint obligation of a score of countries bound together by nature, by interest, and by common destiny. "They all", at Montevideo "perceived", as Secretary Hull says, "the foolhardiness of letting the world drift when 21 strong and enlightened republics all bound by the same ties could bring their combined strength to bear by united action." He acclaimed the Montevideo Conference as having won the greatest actual gain that has come since Independence Day. Minister Puig, head of the Mexican delegation, and Secretary Hull, head of the United States delegation, saw eye to eye upon the vital questions of the peace pact, respect by each nation for the territorial integrity of its neighbor, perfection of communications and transportation, and the wisdom and necessity of economic cooperation to restore the interchange of products and the return of prosperity. Each of these foreign ministers exchanged cordial felicitations, gave public expression of gratification for their mutual agreements at Montevideo which cheered the people of these two sister republics. Upon his return to Mexico, Minister Puig said:

"An era of unprecedented cooperation is dawning in America as the result of the Montevideo Conference, with the complete elimination of the shadow of intervention. This spiritual and material union of the countries of this continent will serve as an example to the whole world."

The first concrete fruits are to be garnered in the lowering of artificial barriers which are partly responsible for the distress which has afflicted the world. "The conference agreed", says Secretary Hull, "with unanimity upon far-reaching proposals for bringing order gradually into the economic affairs of hemispheres and the world by lowering tariffs and removing senseless prohibitions and restraints upon the mutually profitable exchange of products among nations." Having put their hands to the plow, these Pan American nations will carry out the pledges, essential of fulfillment to diffused prosperity, by renewing former exchanges of products and by opening new channels of trade by the revival on a large scale of the old-time method of barter, called in our day by the bigger word of "reciprocity." Events of recent years have proved that as no man liveth unto himself, so no nation can measure up to its destiny unless it lives in harmony and trade relations with its neighbors. Every artificial device which encourages narrow and selfish nationalism is warring against the stars in their course. When a girdle can be placed around the world by an airplane in 7 days 18 hours 49 minutes, and the sweet cadence of Mexican songs can simultaneously delight the lovers of music in all the States of Mexico and in the United States over the radio, who dares to preach the doctrine that the nations of the earth are not indissolubly linked together? Happiness and prosperity in the Americas alike demand an early approachment to the carrying out of the reciprocal trade policy approved at Montevideo. The quicker this is in action the sooner will come an end to unemployment and the earlier will men of all nations live together in the fellowship of real neighborliness. Toward the hastening of that day comes the challenge to the Lions and all other fraternal and civic organizations to hold up the hands of officials charged with this imperative task.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Walter Lippmann appearing in the New York Herald Tribune on February 7, 1934, with relation to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Feb. 7, 1934]

A GREAT ENTERPRISE

By Walter Lippmann

If there were not so many other things to be interested in, the country as a whole would find plenty of excitement in the St. Lawrence Treaty with Canada which is now before the Senate for ratification. Under this treaty the interior of the North American Continent will, for the greater part of each year, obtain access to the high seas. The only important barrier which still blocks the passage of ocean-going steamers into and out of the Great Lakes is in a section of the St. Lawrence River where for about 120 miles there are rapids. There is already a Canadian canal, available to small ships, around these rapids. To remove the barrier effectively for large ships, joint action by the United States and Canada is necessary. This joint action is provided for in the treaty. The cost to the United States is estimated at $272,000,000. The time needed to complete the project is estimated at from 7 to 10 years.

The effort of the people of the interior, both in Canada and the United States, to obtain access to the high seas covers a period of more than 200 years. Step by step they have built locks, dredged channels, and dug canals around rapids and waterfalls in their struggle to connect the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean. They are now within sight of their goal. They have all but overcome the obstacle at Sault Ste. Marie between Lake Superior and Lake Huron. By means of the Welland Canal they have circumvented Niagara Falls. The only big work remaining to be done is at the rapids of the St. Lawrence River.

The project now before the Senate has been investigated for more than 12 years. It has been approved by the engineers on both sides of the boundary. It has been advocated by President Hoover. It is advocated by President Roosevelt. The general public does not need to investigate any further. A project which after 12 years of debate has the support of the two Governments, of the experts of both Governments, of the leaders of both parties, ought to be acceptable to the layman, who has no time to study the technical aspects of the question. For how are we ever to make up our minds about anything if we reject endorsements based on prolonged expert, nonpartisan, and international inquiry?

As a matter of fact, the easiest way to assure one's self that the treaty should be ratified is to look at the arguments against it. They have been presented by Senator WAGNER, of New York. There are few abler or more public-spirited men in the Senate than Mr. WAGNER. But if ever there was a lame performance, it is Mr. WAGNER'S minority report. It is so lame that I am almost inclined to suspect that the Senator is opposing the treaty because he thinks it is his conventional duty to "protect" the port of New York from the supposed competition of the seaway.

Mr. WAGNER objects first of all on the theory that the new deal has given up the notion that foreign markets are of any account. Even if that were true, which it is not, the argument would be a boomerang, for how is the Senator ever going to make a case for using Federal money to improve New York Harbor? He then objects because the cheaper rates on ships will play havoc with railroads. There are two things to be said about that. One is that the railroads have been playing havoc with themselves throughout the depression by holding up rates at an uneconomic level and, as they are beginning to see, if their rates came down, they would do more business. But the more important argument is that cheaper transportation for the interior of the continent will in the long run increase the volume of commerce; the fear that it will ruin the railroads is based on the fallacy that the volume of commerce is a fixed quantity which has to be divided up. It is not fixed. Commerce increases when costs are reduced. The effect of this seaway should be to increase the total of all goods that have to be transported, and therefore the amount of goods which railroads can transport more efficiently than ships.

Mr. WAGNER'S third objection is that the cost to the United States will be not $277,000,000, but $573,000,000. Let us suppose he knows more than the engineers. Still the argument is a poor one. The city of New York in the years between 1927 and 1931 spent $360,000,000 on subways to carry its population to and from work. Surely the United States is entitled to spend at least as much on a system of transportation which would be immediately available to the people of about 16 States. It is strange to hear Mr. WAGNER, who has been a pioneer calling for public works, declaring that this is a public work which is too extravagant.

The argument is so feeble that it is inexplicable except on the theory that Mr. WAGNER thinks it his duty to go on record for the alleged interests of New York. But if that is what he is doing, it may be recalled that Mr. Roosevelt is a New Yorker, too, and has twice been Governor of this State, and presumably has no intention of injuring it.

Apart from the intrinsic merits of the project, there is a compelling reason why this would be an appropriate and dramatic moment to decide to carry it out. For nearly 4 years this country and the rest of the world have been overwhelmed with the sense that there were no great enterprises left, that the period of construction was over, that we were sunk under the weight of useless wealth, and that all that was left to do was to accept economic defeat and make the best of it. This is the psychosis of every great depression, and a nation does not emerge from depression until it breaks away from it and begins to believe again that there is more to be done in the future than was ever done in the past.

To ratify this treaty now is to affirm our faith in the future, to act in the spirit of enterprise, to do the same sort of thing which men did when they spanned the continent with railways, when they opened Suez and Panama, when they believed as all vital peoples must that the breaking down of the barriers to the movement of commerce is in the long view a benefit to everyone. We have had quite enough of the idea that we must not plant, must not manufacture, must not build, must not expand, must not work, that we have too much machinery, too many people, too much capital, too much land, too many roads, too many buildings, and that our only hope is to restrict, reduce, limit, control, diminish, tear down, plow under, close down, raze, dump, throw away.

This is a good treaty and a good project because it is based on the simple truth that the way to raise the standard of life is to increase commerce by making it more efficient.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, February 10, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 9 (legislative day of Feb. 6), 1934

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Douglas W. McGregor, of Texas, to be United States attorney, southern district of Texas, to succeed Henry M. Holden, whose term will expire July 1, 1934.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Felipe Sanchez y Baca, of New Mexico, to be United States marshal, district of New Mexico, to succeed Joseph F. Tondre, term expired.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE

Clarence Ogle, of Oregon, to be register of the land office at Lakeview, Oreg., vice Frank P. Frost.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we bless and praise Thy holy name. Thou, whose infinite heart sends the blood coursing through the arteries of the boundless universe, condescend to our need, we humbly beseech Thee. Thou, who art mightier than the sun that walketh through the starry heavens, invest us with a tenderness bathed in wisdom and clothed with conviction. Be Thou the light that shows the way and that quiets restlessness and keep us from being under the dominion of care and trouble. Heavenly Father, lead us to renew the flagging spirits of men and refresh their starving souls. May we never overlook the marvels of the roadside and the divine beauty in common folk. We are all one and are interlocked in the comfort and welfare and the very life of our fellow men. The blessed Lord inspire us to be leaders and teachers of the humanities. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, the bill (H.R. 7527) entitled "An act making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes"; that the Senate insists upon its amendments to said bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HALE, and Mr. KEYES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 313) entitled "An act to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 85. An act for the relief of Paul J. Sisk; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 172. An act for the relief of the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co., of Camden, N.J.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 193. An act to amend section 586c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 194. An act to change the name of B Street SW., in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 252. An act for the relief of the American Bonding Co., of Baltimore; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 256. An act for the relief of Milburn Knapp; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 258. An act for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 356. An act for the relief of the Great American Indemnity Co., of New York; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 377. An act for the relief of the Fred G. Clark Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 413. An act for the relief of Edith N. Lindquist; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 503. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of A. C. Messler Co.; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 606. An act to authorize the waiver of remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 749. An act for the relief of the Fairmont Creamery Co., of Omaha, Nebr.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 866. An act to provide for recording of deeds of trust and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia, and for the releasing thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1075. An act for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1076. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1077. An act for the relief of Lueco R. Gooch; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1078. An act for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1082. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1084. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N.J; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 1086. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Frank Spector; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1088. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of White Bros. & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1118. An act for the relief of George J. Bloxham; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1119. An act for the relief of Fred A. Robinson; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1191. An act for the relief of the Sulzbach Clothing Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1192. An act for the relief of the Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd.; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 1258. An act for the relief of Charles F. Littlepage; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1460. An act for the relief of Edgar Stivers; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1504. An act for the relief of Walter J. Bryson Paving Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1528. An act to amend section 3702, Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1531. An act for the relief of Elizabeth Buxton Hospital; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1540. An act for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1600. An act for the relief of S. G. Mortimer; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1680. An act for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1683. An act for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1692. An act for the relief of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1693. An act for the relief of the International Mercantile Marine Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1753. An act for the relief of Marcella Leahy McNerney; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1804. An act to authorize the transfer of certain real estate by the Secretary of the Treasury to C. F. Colvin in settlement of the Northfield (Minn.) post-office site litigation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1853. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1859. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Rio Grande Southern Railroad Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1934. An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1935. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the steamship W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1949. An act for the relief of C. J. Mast; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2006. An act for the relief of Della D. Ledendecker; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2057. An act authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2278. An act for the relief of R. B. Miller; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2308. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2315. An act to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2317. An act for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2337. An act to declare Noxubee River in Noxubee County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2372. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to maintain a bridge already constructed across Youngs Bay, near the city of Astoria, Oreg.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2461. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2496. An act to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2601. An act to amend section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 with respect to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 248. An act for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett;

S. 313. An act to amend section 5 of the act approved July 10, 1890 (28 Stat. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming;

S. 381. An act for the relief of Samson Davis; and

S. 727. An act for the relief of Francis N. Dominick.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order today to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SOME NEEDED ADJUSTMENTS AND CITIZENSHIP BUILDING FACTORS IN OUR NEW NATIONAL PROGRAM

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as part of my remarks, to insert an address by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] before the Pennsylvania

State school directors at Harrisburg, Pa., February 7, 1934, a very able address, which I am sure will be interesting to the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. J. BUELL SNYDER before the Pennsylvania State School Directors' Convention at Harrisburg, Pa., February 7, 1934:

One of two things a nation must always do: Pay small sums for the education of its people or large sums for war and the building of prison walls. This has been the history of nations since the beginning of time.

In looking over my files I found a little manuscript I prepared for a teachers' institute 20 years ago, in which I said in part, "The light of education now illuminates our entire land and every child is invited to stand in that light." At that time I was a mere boy and enthusiastic about that expression. I am not so enthusiastic about it today. The first part of the expression is still true, but how about the second part—"and every child is invited to stand in that light"?

It was, indeed, most gratifying to me, as a Member of the United States Congress, last Thursday, when the United States Commissioner of Education's office called me and told me of the action of the Government in setting aside enough Federal aid to keep open for this fiscal year those schools of the Nation in districts that cannot financially keep their schools going. It is, indeed, most encouraging to live under a government that is flexible enough to take care of a vital citizenship-building crisis in this manner.

Such a procedure in Pennsylvania was not necessary 100 years ago. This year we are participating in the centennial celebration of the establishment of the public-school system in Pennsylvania. Things have changed since 1834.

If an artist were to paint a picture of Pennsylvania as it was in 1834 and one as it is in 1934, he would include in the 1834 picture farms, but very little farm machinery, as the sickle and the scythe; a few cities; small industrial establishment; the stage coach; the little country church; a college or two, some private academies, and widely scattered public one-room schools which a few children of the several neighborhoods attended a few months each year and for only a few years in order to learn to read, write, and cipher.

In the 1934 picture the artist would include hundreds of cities, farms, and farm machinery of every description, factories of all kinds, railways, airplanes, automobiles, paved roads, theaters, churches, and scores of colleges; but in the very center of the picture would be the public-school building. Indeed, this 1934 picture could not be painted if the people of Pennsylvania had not now established and developed a system of public education.

The kind of picture that may be painted 25 or 30 years hence will depend very largely upon the type of school that the State maintains. The scope of the school has been widening since 1934 and must continue to widen so as to provide educational opportunities for all from early childhood well on into adult life, and so as to meet the increasing needs of our changing social order.

It appears from recent social and economic trends that there will be little or no opportunity for boys and girls under 16 or 19 years of age to find employment, and that when they are older and have employment they will have much leisure time at their disposal. The use of this leisure time should be a matter of the gravest concern to the people of the country. Instead of eliminating from the schools those subjects and activities that will be helpful to the boys and girls in making worthy use of their leisure time after they leave school, such activities should be still further emphasized as important factors in education. If all the boys and girls are to remain in school until 18 years of age, courses of study especially adapted to their varying abilities should be provided.

The little one-room school, although it met the needs of an earlier day, should pass away just as have the oxcart and the stagecoach. The small school district has also outlived its day even if it is found by the thousands throughout the country. Many small districts that were able to support a small school or two of elementary grade find that they cannot support an educational program that is generally considered desirable. Larger units for the purpose of administration and support would help solve the problems of many of the school districts of the country. This unit should be at least large enough to support an elementary and a high school.

When all school districts were about equally wealthy one district could support schools about as well as could another, but all this has been changed. Some school districts now have many more times the ability to support schools than have others. It would thus seem that the financial support of schools in order to help equalize the burden among the school districts and in order to provide more nearly equal educational opportunities is a problem that needs to be solved in practically every State and especially in Pennsylvania.

This brings us to a full realization of the fact that the social, political, and economic set-up we have been pursuing for 40 years no longer functions. The Nation realized a new set-up was necessary, and thus practically 120,000,000 of our people asked the Seventy-third Congress of the United States to give them a new program.

In 100 days following March 4, Congress did this very thing. Congress enacted 13 constructive major measures that gave the American people an administrative program—a program that requires action on the part of everybody; a comprehensive program that places the responsibility of every business in the country on the heads of those who run their business.

There is nothing unusual in the new national program. Every good school system in the country has been practicing the basic principles of the new program for years. Almost every high school has student participation in all activities—that is all there is to the new program. It gives each business its own code under which it must operate. It is citizenship participation program. The Government does not make any of the codes. The cotton people made their own code and now the Government says, "You must follow it." The tobacco people made their own code and now the Government says, "You must follow it." The lumber people made their own code and now the Government says, "You must follow it." The farmers made their own code and now the Government says, "You must follow it." Of course, these codes will be adjusted from time to time until they work effectively.

The United States Congress has not given away any of its powers. Congress can at any time step in and regulate any and all the Nation's institutions and all phases of our national life.

I mention this before this body because if there is a group that exercises more power than any other one group in different governing bodies it is school authorities. The school board adopts a course of study and a budget for the year, and the superintendent carries it out to the letter. In the case of Congress, it adopted a program, and the superintendent—in this case the President of the United States—is directing the activities in carrying out this program, just the same as the superintendent directs the activities of the teachers and other groups connected with carrying out a school program.

In this new citizenship and Nation building program, I beg leave to call attention to three or four of the fundamental measures adopted by the recent Congress and now in operation long enough for all of us to see the fruits of our efforts.

First: The N.R.A. program: This is a program designed to put all able-bodied men back to work at a living wage, and all factories, mills, and mines on a basis of operation that will assure them a living and operating profit. We are fortunate indeed that the new national program is so flexible that the Government is able to reach out, as it did last Thursday, without any redtape and say to the Nation, "We will give you funds where they are needed in order that you may keep your schools open the rest of this year."

Many under the sound of my voice have made speeches in which they reached a climax by saying that "every child is entitled to equal educational opportunities"—then went to the polls and voted to make it impossible in emergency for such a principle to be carried out. This is one time the strong hand of the Government reached out and said, "We must educate or we must perish; and since we are at the crossroads where multiplied tens of thousands of children are going to be deprived of an education, we choose to keep the schools of the Nation open."

Second. The strength of the Nation is determined by the stability of its citizens. Our three institutions—the home, the school, and the church—that stand first in building a stable citizenship have marched shoulder to shoulder since the days of Washington, in the struggle to make our land a better place in which to live. The fourth institution that must function in every industrial nation is our banking system.

Because of poor management and bad practices for a space of years, these institutions, the banks, collapsed and we found ourselves on the very threshold of economic destruction. The recent banking bill that insures the depositor to the extent of $2,500, and after July 1 to the extent of $10,000, has done more to restore confidence in the hearts and the minds of the American people than any other one financial movement in the last 50 years.

Third. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, in which the Government reaches out to the little home owner and actually gives him financial help when he is about to lose his home, is in keeping with all our sacred teachings in this country. We have always taught that the strength of a nation lies in the home owners and the farm owners of that nation. The same protection is being given to the farmers, and in the space of 2 or 3 years the home owners and the farm owners of this Nation will come into their own.

Fourth. The fundamentals in citizenship building and nation building that are embodied in our reforestation and rehabilitation program are numerous and far-reaching.

Let me paint just one picture to you. The depression put more than 1,000,000 single boys between the ages of 17 and 27 on our highways and byways and streets and alleys, looking for work day in and day out. To get a more vivid picture of these million young men, let us see them marching. If they were lined up in columns of four abreast and these columns were 10 feet apart and they marched at the rate of 20 miles a day, it would take 25 days to pass a single point; and when the last column of four had passed a point here in Harrisburg, the first column would be marching into Chattanooga, Tenn.

My friends, I know these young men. I took scores of them in my car as I went from city to city and town to town. I asked them where they came from and what they were doing. They invariably told me that they were looking for work. Some came from the West and the North, and some from the South and the East, all looking for work. Yes, my fellow educators, we told them in our public schools and in our high schools that if they would take on the educational equipment we offered them that when they would be graduated and go out into the business world that the business world would say to them, "Come, John. Come, Mary. Here is a job for you."

We taught them the right thing and we should continue to teach the same thing. But the social and economic fabric of our country collapsed and left these millions of young people stranded. In other words, our social and economic fabric is not functioning. These boys and girls have not failed. Those of us who have handled the reins of our Government for the last 40 or 50 years, we have failed to keep our economic and social structure functioning.

History will record in years to come, in big headlines, that the reforestation and rehabilitation program of this Seventy-third Congress was the most outstanding citizenship and nation-building procedure enacted in this Nation within the last hundred years.

From the social and service point of view, I have been fortunate in life by being so placed as to spend my marginal time in activities that make better facilities and better environment for young people. And I was most happy and enthusiastic when I had an opportunity to help push through Congress a measure that took from the alleys and the unfortunate homes of the Nation 300,000 single, unnourished, discouraged young men and placed them in the Nation's best citizenship and civilian camps, to not only serve their Nation by useful activity but to receive instruction and equipment that will make them strong and courageous citizens.

The health angle alone was worth all the cost. During the first month that these young men were in the camps, more than 20,000 of them required medical attention; the sixth month, less than 2,000 required medical attention; they had gained at an average of 14 pounds. That is not all. Many of them had a communistic attitude of mind last March 4, but today you will find them proud of the fact that their Government has made for them such a paradise.

I worked for and would like to have seen four times as many of our youth placed in such camps and in such environment, but legislation is at best a compromise. However, reforestation and rehabilitation institutions are here to stay. There will be changes made, of course, but the Nation from now on will have such a program, not merely to plant trees and build trails and what not, but to build citizens, to build young men into patriots like Nathan Hale, who lamented that he had but one life to live for his country; to build citizens that will always realize the full meaning of the poet when he said:

"The riches of a commonwealth
Are free, strong minds and hearts of health.
They are more to her than gold or grain,
The cunning hand and cultured brain."

How much of a bonded indebtedness did your grandfathers hand to your fathers? How much of a bonded indebtedness did your fathers hand down to you? How many times has this bonded indebtedness multiplied that you are about to hand down to your children?

My friends, we are failures as individuals, we are failures as school boards in our respective school districts, if we hand down to our posterity a greater bonded indebtedness than was handed to us by our fathers. We are failures if we hand to our children an education heritage that will not equip them to handle the social and economic fabric of their day.

And in conclusion, permit me to say that it is our business in this great Commonwealth and in this great Nation to put our economic and social house in order; and as for me, I shall continue to do my part to bring this about.

EMERGENCY RELIEF

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 7527) making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—this is a matter of extreme importance, in which the entire country is very much interested. I assume it is the intention to expedite it as quickly as possible.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly. The bill came over from the Senate just a minute ago, and I am now asking that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BUCHANAN, TAYLOR of Colorado, AYRES of Kansas, TABER, and THURSTON.

ELECTION CONTEST, SHANAHAN v. BECK

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted a privileged report (H.Res. 259) in the contested-election case of John J. Shanahan v. James M. Beck, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

ELECTION CONTEST, BOWLES v. DINGELL

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted a privileged report (H.Res. 260) in the contested-election case of Charles Bowles v. John D. Dingell, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

ELECTION CONTEST, REESE v. ELLZEY

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted a privileged report (H.Res. 261) in the contested-election case of L. G. Reese v. Russell Ellzey, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have just introduced a bill which has for its purpose prohibiting any member or employee of the N.R.A., who may be now employed or who at any time has been employed by that organization, from appearing in any capacity before an N.R.A. board after the termination of their services with the N.R.A.

There is a perfectly legitimate reason for the introduction of such a bill, and it grows out of a practice that has come within my knowledge. In several instances employees, particularly lawyers, drew some of the codes of the N.R.A.; and after having participated in the formulation of these codes almost to the conclusion and adoption of the code, severed their services with the N.R.A. and immediately entered the employ of an industry whose code they helped formulate. It can readily be seen what advantage this would be to such an industry. To have a representative on the board while the code was in process of formulation and then, after the adoption of the code, to have this same representative appear before the board in behalf of the company.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad the gentleman has introduced the bill, but it meets only part of the vice. For instance, in the code regulating the manufacture of whisky the code authorities in Washington put in charge of all the codes representatives taken directly from the Whisky Trust who handled the whole thing. The paid employees of the Whisky Trust are representing the Government in all codes pertaining to the importation and distillation of rum.

Mr. BOLAND. I should be pleased to have the gentleman prepare and offer an amendment along that line when the bill comes up for consideration, because I am in hearty sympathy with the gentleman's position.

The particular industry which has disturbed me and which I am incensed at because I believe they are arrogant and selfish in every respect, is the brewing industry of this country. The brewing industry of this country is controlled by a few big brewers and the American Brewers' Association, which does not represent the entire brewing industry. It probably represents not more than 145 breweries in the country, yet this association has an absolute control of the industry and in my opinion has no regard for the problems or wants of the independent brewers or the public at large. In other words, it is a closed corporation, and I am satisfied that this same arrogant organization was responsible for prohibition being foisted upon this country because of this same selfishness that is being portrayed so conspicuously at the present time. I might at this time warn them that prohibition can come to this country again if their selfishness is not curbed. The same thing applies with regard to the whisky industry referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Now, we must get ahead of these chiselers of the N.R.A. The N.R.A. was formed for one particular purpose, to start the wheels of the industry of this country going so that industry would be able to take care of itself. We are all familiar with the birth of the N.R.A. We need go back no further than last year to recall the conditions the N.R.A sought to correct. When this great movement was formed and the President brought the N.R.A. forward, we found some of the industries trying to take advantage of the situation and exploiting human misery to their own advantage. I believe it is the duty of this House to say that no man who was ever employed in any capacity by the N.R.A. shall be able to appear before that body in a representative capacity within 2 years after the termination of his services as an employee of the body.

Mr. Speaker, in adopting this bill we will not be establishing any precedent in regard to governmental departments, because we have the following regulations that are being adhered to at the present time:

SEC. 99. Ex-officers or employees not to prosecute claims in departments.—It shall not be lawful for any person appointed as an officer, clerk, or employee in any of the departments to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claims against the United States which was pending in either of said departments while he was such officer, clerk, or employee, nor in any manner, nor by any means, to aid in the prosecution of any such claim, within 2 years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employee (R.S., sec. 190).

SEC. 100. Prosecution of claims for supplies for Military Establishment.—It shall be unlawful for any person, who as a commissioned officer of the Army, or officer or employee of the United States, has at any time since April 6, 1917, been employed in any bureau of the Government, and in such employment been engaged on behalf of the United States in procuring or assisting to procure supplies for the Military Establishment, or who has been engaged in the settlement or adjustment of contracts or agreements for the procurement of supplies for the Military Establishment, within 2 years next after his discharge or other separation from the service of the Government, to solicit employment in the presentation or to aid or assist for compensation in the prosecution of claims against the United States arising out of any contracts or agreements for the procurement of supplies for said Bureau, which were pending or entered into while the said officer or employee was associated therewith. A violation of this provision of this chapter shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both (July 11, 1919, ch. 8, subchapter IV, 41 Stat. 131).

The reasonable logic of the above is quite apparent. Associations and daily contact in any department over a period of time makes it possible for those persons to have great influence in the department in which they served. Some private industries, in my estimation, have been very instrumental in having placed men in key positions in the N.R.A. during the progress of these codes, and I believe it is quite necessary for Congress to see that these special interests will not have these instruments of their own making to help defeat the purpose of this great movement.

I will read the bill so that you will understand it:

That any person employed by the N.R.A., or any branch thereof, either as an officer, salaried employee, or voluntary assistant, or in any capacity whatsoever, shall be prohibited from appearing either directly or by agent in any matter before the N.R.A. for a period of 2 years from the date of his first employment with the N.R.A.

Any person convicted of violating any of the foregoing provisions of the act shall be subject to a sentence of not less than 1 year's imprisonment nor more than 5 years, and to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000.

If you men in Congress see the justice of this and pass this bill, I assure you that the great objective of the N.R.A. will be accomplished and that the owners of small industries will have the same protection and rights as the larger ones, and when this great movement has gained its objective, contentment and happiness will again reign in this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for an additional 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. While the gentleman is speaking of chiseling in the N.R.A., we know that the minute industry picks up the manufacturers will chisel. I am informed that in my city they hire men, give them a pay check for the regular N.R.A. hours, and then pay the men in currency after that. I complained to the Department about this matter and they are investigating it. Does not the gentleman think the solution to the whole matter is to pass the Black-Connery bill and write into the law the 30-hour limitation, not allowing them to build up a bureaucratic system in the Government, which will prevent this chiseling? I think if we would pass that law we would abolish code hearings and make industry conform to the limit of the law.

Mr. BOLAND. I believe there is a lot of merit in what the gentleman says, but I still believe this proposed bill quite necessary.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEARIN. Does the gentleman have any information in reference to the number of N.R.A. employees at the present time who have gone into private business after their employment with the N.R.A. ceased?

Mr. BOLAND. I have concrete evidence of this situation.

Mr. WEARIN. I should like to have that placed in the RECORD.

Mr. BOLAND. I would rather place it in the hearings than in the RECORD. We will have a hearing before a committee, and that is the place to bring it up, if it is all right with the gentleman.

KEY TO PROSPERITY

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address I made last evening on the subject of Key to Prosperity.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address I made last evening on the subject "Key to Prosperity":

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, I came to Congress to represent the Thirteenth District of Ohio. This district is interested in agriculture, manufacture, and lake shipping. After coming to Congress I was assigned a position as a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. This committee immediately attracted my attention, because its jurisdiction dealt with money, and I have since given 2 years of intensive study to this subject.

Early in 1932 the Coinage Committee started a study of the money question. We studied the depression; we analyzed its causes and the various ramifications of the money question as the same related to the depression. And I found this committee dealing with the problem that I now consider the most important of all the problems that confront this Nation and the world.

As one goes back over the pages of history, one reads of the rise and fall of empires. One reads of the decline and wiping out of nations, and also of a period when the whole civilized world went into what we call the "Dark Ages." The history of these important periods is directly connected with the tragic mismanagement of money.

I am speaking to the radio audience tonight on the subject of silver. I have no interest, direct or indirect, in silver as such. My State produces no silver. Nevertheless, I say there is no instrument of civilization, certainly no instrument known to the United States, as important as silver and the part it plays in the happiness and contentment of our people and in the forward progress of civilization. In my humble judgment it is the key to American prosperity. The people of the United States must understand the relation of silver to depressions.

The Coinage Committee, after weeks of hearings and deliberations, reported: "That the investigation revealed that certain European nations in an effort to protect their manufacturing industries by affording a better cost basis through lower prices of raw materials and foodstuffs depressed the world commodity price levels below the point that admits of any profit to the American producer. We found that this result followed directly and definitely from certain governmental acts."

I have heard no one challenge that report on the floor of the Congress. It seems to me very serious to say that nations "depressed the world commodity price levels to the point that admits of no profit to the American producer." If they do that—and no one has come forward to say that they do not—do you suppose they do these things in the interest of the United States, which is your interest and my interest, or in their own interest? These nations are interested in cheap foodstuffs to feed cheap labor. Is that to your interest or my interest?

In the limited time at my disposal I want, to the best of my ability, to arouse you to a personal sense of your responsibility, for, in finality, you, the people, determine the policies of this Government. Crystallized sentiment is what Washington hears and acts upon. Make no mistake about that. It is necessary for you to understand this question because the very home in which you live can be doubled in value or it can be halved in value, and your income can be doubled or halved in value, depending upon what use is made of silver by the laws enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Boiled down, the issue is: Whether the international bankers of Europe will fix the value of your property and income through the means of a managed currency, or whether you fix this yourself through your Congress and the legislation it enacts by the control of gold and silver.

On the one hand this issue involves managed currency, managed largely by foreign bankers. On the other hand nature controls currency through the instruments of gold and silver held under regulation by the Congress of the United States. It is necessary for you to know what currency is. Currency in this sense is a piece of paper recording the promise of some bank or perhaps some government. Generally it is the promise of some bank to pay something to somebody at some time. It is a paper I O U It is a form of a contract. Powerful nations like Great Britain, for instance, under managed currency, can maintain a market value for these pieces of paper just as market manipulators may maintain a market value for the common stock of a sewing-machine company. This places the value of these pieces of paper under the control of market operations. This gives tremendous power to banks. This power takes the form of controlling values, not only the values of stocks and bonds but the values of real estate, and anything that is bought and sold for this so-called "money."

You have the opportunity to avoid giving away this power by restoring full-value money or metallic money to its former usefulness as a basis for business. There is a certain amount of money in the world, and, like anything else, the value of money depends upon its supply and demand. When I refer to money I mean primary money, gold and silver.

In gold-standard countries the value of property varies with the value of gold plus the gold value of the monetary silver of the world. There has never been a failure in this as a general movement, and I defy any economist to show to the contrary. The nation that can control the value of the world's monetary silver therefore can control the world's price levels.

In the United States we have the gold standard as a standard of measure, and I advocate keeping it. The condition we call depression has never existed in this country except when the value of gold plus silver of the world has fallen off or undergone a shrinkage. Between the years 1920 and 1922 there was a shrinkage at the rate of 4.6 percent per year. This brought a depression in our price level from 143, which was the high peak of prosperity, down to 96. From 1928 to 1931 there was another shrinkage of 40 cents per ounce in the world's monetary silver, which was followed by the lowest price level within our memory. You may go back 100 years and find a continuation of this same principle.

Why do we permit these cataclysms? The United States is a great producing Nation. It is interested in high price levels. Why do we permit European nations to "depress the world commodity price levels to a point that admits of no profits to the American producer"? Why do we stand by and do nothing about it? What is this great Nation doing in such a serious situation? Why do we not protect ourselves? I will tell you. President Roosevelt in his messages to Congress has spoken of the importance of silver, but there is a certain propaganda and prejudice among the people which should be overcome before, in my judgment, he can be free to approve.

One of the great troubles about silver is the fact that it has been a political issue. Certain prejudices grew out of the 1896 Presidential campaign. William Jennings Bryan was a great political leader, but he was not an economist. Bryan had the correct diagnosis of our ills in that silver had been kicked out of the money system with the inevitable effect of changing the value of what was left. He understood that decreasing the amount of money increased the value of money, and he understood that this meant hard times in America. It meant depression. What he did not understand was how to solve the problem of putting silver back into the world's monetary system without setting up two standards of value.

The trouble with 16 to 1 is a fundamental defect in one respect. It limits the power of the Government unless you have international agreement. It restricts the very thing you want your Government to do. You may say to the Government, "We want you to restore silver to a monetary use so as to take the load off gold", but the Government acting alone cannot do this if you set a certain fixed price for both gold and silver.

Make silver a part of your basic money, use it just for the value it is worth, and have America control the amount of silver so used. If you do that you have a complete solution of the problem of depressions. This is all very clear to me, now that I have studied with the committee of Congress and gotten away from the influence of false teaching and propaganda. Before that it was very confusing to me. There is so much that I did not know of the silver question before the study of this committee that I consider it extremely important to tell the Nation this story and hope that the opportunity for freedom of debate on this subject may soon be allowed to the Congress of the United States.

This treatment of silver is not a new and untried experiment. It has been in use successfully in Holland, a most conservative country. In Holland, since the World War, there has been in circulation a silver certificate redeemable at its full value in silver. No gold is required. These silver certificates have actually circulated in foreign countries at the full face value. Can you guess how this was accomplished?

Well, it is very simple; a 2½ gold guilder value is printed on the face of the certificate and is met on redemption by exactly that value in silver. I have a bill pending in Congress to accomplish the same purpose. The same principles were included in the amendment to the gold bill offered by the distinguished Senator from Montana, Senator WHEELER, which was recently voted upon, as you know, by a vote of 43 for and 45 against.

Why not deliver 100 cents' worth of silver for a silver-dollar certificate? What is the sense of short changing the holder of the silver certificate? Why not pay out the silver by value rather than by weight? This is a very simple solution of the problem.

If the United States will adopt this method, by putting silver into circulation it can place in its reserves in the Treasury either 1,000,000,000 or 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver. It can place enough silver for this use to counteract what European nations may do in kicking silver out of the monetary picture. We can put silver in the picture as fast as they kick it out. By this simple operation, which will cost us practically nothing, we can maintain and we can control gold at the purchasing power of the average value of commodities as of 1926. This is the key to American prosperity. With it you can maintain in the United States a stability of value of the income from our great natural resources. This will assure us continued prosperity.

The Constitution of the United States says that the Congress shall coin money and regulate the value thereof. It also provides that gold and silver shall be the money of the country. If we would adopt the method I am advocating it will be the first time in 150 years that the Congress of the United States has performed its constitutional duty with reference to regulating the value of money. The regulation of the value of money is for the Government. The regulation of credits is for the banks. The two functions are entirely different and they must be treated separately.

In concluding let me tell you that dividing the ounce of gold into 35 parts instead of 20 parts does not change the buying power of the ounce of gold. This is fixing the dollar, not regulating it. The change in the gold content of the dollar may be a good thing or it may be a bad thing. I am not arguing that question, but it has nothing to do with regulating the value of gold in the sense that I am speaking of here. I am speaking of the value of gold. I mean value in terms of what an ounce of gold will buy, not in terms of how many fractional parts the ounce of gold may be divided into to make your currency unit.

No matter what weight you fix, you still have to regulate the value of that weight of gold under the requirements of our Constitution. Unless we regulate the value of that weight of gold we cannot have stable prosperity, and the use I have proposed for silver is the only tried and proven method for regulating gold values known to mankind.

I state this as a positive fact and I challenge contradiction of this statement.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, much has been said on the floor of this Chamber about veterans' legislation; and I wonder, as a matter of fact, whether we have a clear-cut notion as to what the American Legion's four-point program seeks to achieve or what it will cost, and the number of veterans and dependents who will be affected thereby. This program has been styled the "four-point program", and I shall be content during the 5 minutes at my disposal this morning to submit figures on only one element in this program—namely, as it refers to the so-called "presumptive cases."

If I were gifted with the eloquence of a former compatriot of mine, the celebrated Robert G. Ingersoll, who lived in my district, I should talk on man's inhumanity to man as evidenced by the figures submitted before a committee during the last week. These figures speak for themselves and require no embellishment from me. I am referring to the presumptive cases.

First of all, 128 boards were selected or appointed, which expended for various purposes $602,498 to conduct the review work on presumptive cases. They reviewed 51,213 cases. Of that number, 42.87 percent were allowed and 57.13 percent were disallowed. Let me point out some of the disparities. In the region of Albuquerque, N.Mex., they disallowed 64.77 percent of the cases reviewed; at Boise, Idaho, they disallowed 75.28 percent; at Portland, Oreg., they disallowed 30.92 percent; at Hines, Ill., they disallowed 76.30 percent; and at Oklahoma City, Okla., they disallowed 32 percent. You have a high of 76 percent disallowed in one place and a low of 32 percent disallowed in another place.

While some of these disparities can be explained because there are veterans' tuberculosis hospitals in some of the regions, yet the disparity has most assuredly not been completely explained by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

We will consider for a minute the nature of the cases involved. As I said previously, 51,213 cases were reviewed. Of that number, 27,000 were insane. That includes boys who were shell-shocked; boys in whom that little slender cord that holds the present to the past and the present to the future has somehow been snapped away by the explosion or detonation of a high-explosive shell; 27,000, or more than 50 percent, of all the cases reviewed were insane. Then there were 19,476 tubercular cases. You have seen them, the boys to whom that tongue of livid flame suffuses pallid, chalky, sunken cheeks; you have seen them in the hospitals with that ever-present hacking cough; you have seen them falling back exhausted on the beds of the hospitals. These cases constituted over 19,000 of the cases reviewed.

Let us look at the number of cases that were actually disallowed. Almost 11,000 tuberculosis cases of boys who have been ravished by the white plague have been stricken from the rolls by the review board. Over 15,000 of the so-called "neuropsychiatric cases" have been taken off the roll. Almost 29,000 cases in toto have been disallowed.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. With pleasure.

Mr. BYRNS. It was announced in the morning paper—and that is the only authority for my statement—that the President has determined to modify the regulations in order to permit these presumptive cases to be appealed and pending the appeal that they be restored to the rolls.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. BYRNS. If that is done, we can reasonably assume that the board of appeals will take those cases up and give them the consideration for which the gentleman is pleading, and which I think all the Members of the House want them to have.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the majority leader that my interpretation of the article in the press this morning would be that not all of these so-called "presumptive cases" are to be reinstated, although a great many of them may be. I believe all of them should be reinstated, as a matter of fact.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand it, this law will reinstate them for the time being, or until their cases are finally disposed of by the appeal board?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is true, and my purpose in presenting these figures this morning is twofold: First of all, to familiarize the Members, if they have not already consulted the hearings, with the exact number of cases involved, and to utter the hope that every single one of the presumptive cases will be restored ultimately to the rolls.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And my purpose was to give the figures in compressed form.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any information as to whether the Bureau will be a little bit more lenient, a little fairer to the veterans in its interpretation of "service connection", because, otherwise, it is very nearly useless to have the appeal, except it does keep them on the rolls a while longer. At the present the administration's regulations are against the veterans.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would answer by saying I have seen no indication of a softening of the attitude of the Bureau insofar as these cases, or any other cases, are concerned.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Then, legislation is an absolute necessity.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And the veteran element can never be satisfied until the veterans' rights are definitely ascertained and written into the law, rather than have them subject to regulation and to the whims and caprices of a Veterans' Administrator.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Surely the gentlewoman from Massachusetts would not want to deny them this appeal?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, indeed not.

Mr. RANKIN. I hope that these appeals are going to accomplish a great deal of good, and I hope they will put these men back on the rolls who were put there under the 1924 law. To say in advance that these appeals will not accomplish anything, I think, is going a little far.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts expressed a lack of confidence in the Bureau, and I quite share that lack of confidence for this reason: Of the number of cases that were adjudicated in favor of the veterans, over 50 percent, upon final appeal here in Washington, were decided against the veterans, and on this basis one can scarcely have any faith in the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. RANKIN. But this is a new board of appeals, and this new board of appeals has been created in response to the appeals of men who believe, as I do, that these men ought to go back on the rolls; and these cases are not going to be decided by the Bureau, but by this new and independent board of appeals.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Quite true; but some administrative appeals have been perfected—in fact, 639 appeals have been perfected where adjudication was in behalf of the veteran; and of this number, over 303 were resolved against the veteran by reversal.

Mr. RANKIN. But that was not done by this new board.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Possibly not.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is perfectly obvious the board will follow the Bureau's regulations. It is not so much a question of the board, but of the regulations by which the board must operate.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts has no grounds upon which to base such a statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. RANKIN. And furthermore, why should we impeach this new, independent board that we are having created to try to bring justice to these disabled men. Why should we impeach the board before it is appointed and organized?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is not so much impeaching the board as impeaching the procedure. I understand the procedure will be to have somebody identified with the Bureau prepare the case and submit it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I first want to make a statement to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] on this matter of procedure. When these cases come before this final board on appeal they will not have the entire file. Manifestly, time will not permit an examination of all the facts and all the evidence in the files. Instead of this, they will have before them a prepared statement from the Veterans' Bureau on which to make a final adjudication, and this is not fair to the veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that these men go on the roll and remain on the roll until these cases may be ultimately decided by this new board.

Mr. DIRKSEN. True.

Mr. RANKIN. And the gentleman has no grounds on which to base the argument that this new board will not have all the facts, all the proof, and all the evidence before it, because we are going to try to see that they do get all the information, and that these men are given the most liberal treatment possible by this new board.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say to the gentleman that if he is familiar with the number of cases adjudicated by the 128 boards per day——

Mr. RANKIN. I am not talking about the boards to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am talking about the number of cases that have been adjudicated per day by the boards heretofore existing, the number of cases that must be appealed and the number of cases that the board here can possibly handle. It would take them over 7 years, at the rate they have been going heretofore, to take care of all the cases.

Mr. RANKIN. All right; the longer it takes them, the longer the men are dead sure of staying on the rolls.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If there is any assurance they will stay on the rolls, and that is our only concern.

Mr. RANKIN. They will certainly have to stay on the rolls until these cases are finally adjudicated, if it takes 10 years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STUDLEY and Mr. PATMAN rose.

Mr. STUDLEY. Does the gentleman think the intelligent public opinion of the country will longer permit the veteran to be turned out to die like an old horse beside the road and to be thrown back on the community instead of being compensated by the Government?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I doubt it, and, particularly, so far as it pertains to the insane and tubercular cases.

Mr. STUDLEY. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. I am quite sure the gentleman would like to be corrected if he has made an incorrect statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman has stated in the RECORD that on appeal from these various boards only part of the testimony will be in the RECORD, and from this testimony the Appeal Board will have to pass on the case.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The final board.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct, but if the verdict is against the veteran, then it is sent back and all the evidence is gathered up by the Government for the veteran, and his own testimony is taken, as well as the testimony of every witness whose name is given to the board, and therefore all the evidence will be before the Appeal Board in the same way as if all of it had been taken down in the first instance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In that case they are acting as the agents of the veterans. They never go to the trouble of ascertaining all the facts necessary.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman wants to impeach everybody connected with the administration of the law, the gentleman can do that. The veteran will have an opportunity to get all the testimony he wishes and have the Government to assist him and Government money to pay for it, if he wants those facilities.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman will admit that we have seen some tragic cases thus far.

Mr. PATMAN. Suppose the gentleman investigated some cases and was convinced in his own mind that they were not service-connected cases. Would he be willing to put them back on the roll?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If there is the slightest doubt, if the veterans cannot establish a case because of proof that has been lost, I say restore him in that case. There are a limited number.

Mr. PATMAN. If the evidence shows that these veterans served in the Army during the war, but had no evidence—not the slightest evidence—that the disability was service-connected, would he put them back on the roll?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Inasmuch as in the N.P. cases it is difficult to prove that the disability is service-connected——

Mr. PATMAN. But if the gentleman was absolutely convinced that there was no service connection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have not seen a case of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that the Bureau is merely administering and carrying out the laws passed by Congress, and is it not a fact, also, that practically every member of these boards are themselves ex-service men, and they should be sympathetic in every case?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have not heard of any sympathy in the Bureau down there.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there ought to be, for they are all buddies. I am in favor of the Government granting compensation to and taking care of every veteran who is afflicted with tuberculosis, regardless of the date that it developed. It is absolutely impossible for any veteran who has tuberculosis to get a job anywhere, either with the Government or in private industry, because other employees shun them and will not work with them. They are practically outcasts. And in addition to giving them hospitalization and treatment, they should receive compensation so that their dependents will not suffer. I am thinking not only of these afflicted men but also of their dependent wives and little children.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Lincoln Day ceremonies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

WASHINGTON, D.C., February 10, 1934.

WALTER G. BROWN, Esq.,
Chairman Republican County Committee of Orange County, Goshen, N.Y.

DEAR WALTER: Thanks for your kind invitation to the Lincoln Day Dinner at Goshen on February 12. Please express to the members of the Republican county committee my regrets that, owing to the high-powered legislative salesmanship and activity in Washington at the present time, I am unable to get away to break bread and maybe quaff the genial cup with my friends on the county committee.

The quicker the Republican Party gets back to the early principles of our party, as enunciated by Abraham Lincoln, the sooner we will regain the confidence of the American people. Lincoln announced the doctrine that human rights were superior to property rights and that labor was prior to capital. We should reaffirm these fundamental principles of our party openly and make them the cornerstone of our present-day Republicanism.

We should, however, stand boldly with Lincoln for the maintenance of the Federal Constitution, our free institutions, and our representative form of government, and against State socialism, a socialistic dictatorship, or actual socialism, all of which are destructive of American ideals and principles of government as advocated by Abraham Lincoln.

In view of the vast amount of propaganda issued from Washington daily to the press and nightly over the radio by half a hundred publicity agents employed by the various governmental departments and bureaus and paid out of the Treasury of the United States, it is difficult for the people back home to get the facts. Step by step, under the leadership of the brain trust and former Socialists, the country is moving toward Government ownership, State socialism, and the destruction of individual liberty and business enterprise.

I predict that this administration, pledged to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent of the cost of the Federal Government, will this year alone unbalance the Budget by $10,000,000,000. Where the money will come from no one knows, but one thing is certain, the taxpayers have become the forgotten men.

The Republicans must have the courage to demand a balanced Budget, a stabilized dollar, a reduction in the stupendous spending by the Federal Government, and insist that an opportunity be given to honest business interests to start the wheels of private industry going so that American labor will be employed.

I shall leave for another occasion an expression of my views on debasing the dollar to 59 cents, which amounts to confiscation of the wealth of the masses and will work a hardship on the laborer, consumer, and people of small incomes.

There was never more need for the sound principles of the Republican Party than today, and if they could be put into effect, confidence would be restored throughout the land and the wheels of industry begin to turn. As it is, half of the socialistic experiments are failures and retard the return to better and happier times. The South and part of the West are feeding on huge Government subsidies, and for the time being are satisfied with unsound economic policies, such as the destruction and plowing under of crops and the slaughtering and birth control of pigs. We in the East are being loaded down with taxes by such wasteful policies and our farmers are compelled to pay for the increased price of western feed for their cattle and poultry and the eastern wage earners and consumers required to pay for the increased cost of clothing, bread, and meat from the South and West.

The situation today reminds me very much of a story that is supposed to have been told by Abraham Lincoln. He said two men started a fight with their overcoats on, and they fought so hard that they fought themselves into each other's overcoat. It looks to me as if the Democratic Party had fought itself into the Republican overcoat of centralized government, and not stopping there, has gone on away beyond that into State socialism, if not actual socialism. What has become of the party of Thomas Jefferson, which stood for individual liberty, State rights, and against governmental bureaucracy and Federal control? Where are the principles of Thomas Jefferson, of no interference by the Government with private industry or with rights of the individual citizen? They have been abandoned and knocked into a cocked hat, and will stay there just so long as the present administration doles out enormous sums and Southern Democrats can feed at the public crib. As former Senator Ben Tillman once said of his Democratic colleagues, "The Democratic wild donkeys break into the green corn whenever they get into power."

My message to the members of the county committee is to reaffirm their belief in a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, and see to it that it shall not perish from this earth, and to stand steadfast for sound, progressive, and constructive Republican principles of government which are badly needed to lead us back to prosperous times.

Hoping you will have an enjoyable and successful dinner, and with best wishes and kind regards to all the members of the Republican County Committee from Orange County, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH, Jr., Member of Congress.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, the discussion which has taken place this morning omits the Spanish War veterans and their widows, who are the forgotten group in America.

I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has said in reference to World War veterans, but I think we should take cognizance of the fact that we did have a Spanish-American War, a war where every man who served was a volunteer.

Yet these men have had their pensions reduced as much as 75 percent, and the widows 50 percent. I think in the discussion of legislation we should take that into account.

Now, may I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article I have prepared embodying the principles of the C.W.A. in behalf of the scientific men of America, and in connection with that article to have printed a copy of a bill I introduced in behalf of these highly trained scientific men.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman realize that the Spanish-American War veterans, although they should be more substantially provided for, have an advantage over the World War veterans in some instances? For instance, take a Spanish-American War veteran now 50 years old and substantially disabled; he gets a pension of $15 minimum a month, while the World War veteran of the same age and the same disability gets nothing.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The World War veteran should receive the same benefits as the Spanish-American War veteran.

Mr. PATMAN. I agree with the gentleman, and talking about widows, the Spanish-American War widow, whose husband died of non-service-connected disability gets a minimum pension of $15 a month, while the World War widow, under the same circumstances, gets nothing.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am in accord with the gentleman. The World War veteran's widow who is in need should also receive a pension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a certain article. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SHALL SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH BE ENCOURAGED?—JOBS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, on January 16 I introduced a bill in the House providing funds for the Federal employment of technically trained college graduates in the field of scientific-research work in the colleges throughout the United States. This bill has been favorably criticized by several famous educators, educational institutions, and national educational societies. It has been justly proclaimed to be one of the most progressive steps that has been taken in our relief program.

This bill provides for the immediate employment of 10,000 technically trained college graduates for a term of 1 year at a salary of $1,600 per annum, who will work in specially equipped college laboratories on problems of a research nature dealing with physics and chemistry and the allied practical sciences—that is, civil, mechanical, electrical, and chemical engineering, and so forth—and who will be under the direction of a member of the college faculty. The colleges providing this direction and these facilities shall be compensated by a sum not to exceed $400 per man per annum to cover the salaries of directors and the cost of supplies and equipment. Applicants, after having demonstrated by written examination their fitness for the research project in question, will receive appointments bearing the title of "Federal research fellow."

The merits of this bill are readily foreseen. New jobs will be created, colleges will be helped, and knowledge of immense importance will be obtained. Science in the past has eased the burdens of man, shortened distances, prolonged human life, and lessened human suffering, not to mention the countless improvements in industry it has afforded. For instance, research work at the University of California has disclosed the unseen terrific ravages of the termite or wood borer upon our wooden structures and suggested means of combating these animals. At this same institution research work upon cement and concrete was carried on preparatory to the construction of the giant Boulder Dam, the results of which will prove to be of utmost importance to the construction engineers and indirectly to the people of the United States who have invested hundreds of millions of dollars in the project. Moreover, information derived from this thorough investigation, now available to the public, will be used to a great advantage in designing future dams and concrete structures. This Boulder Dam investigation might be likened to that provided for in this bill, in that it was financed with Federal funds and carried out with college facilities which at the time were the most adequate available. Other universities and educational institutions have been engaged in research ventures in these and other fields. It is this work that should be encouraged and financed.

One may look into the future and plan thousands of jobs for these young research fellows without depriving any one of the laboring classes of his present position; in fact, work of this nature tends to create new industries, and hence produces more jobs for the future. For example, there are needs for a better means of sewage disposal, for more efficient machinery, for improvement in laborious industrial processes, for greater economy in fabrication, for the production of cheap lightweight corrosion-proof metals, for stronger and more durable building materials, for earthquake-proof structures, for faster and safer transportation, for methods of utilizing our dormant natural resources and waste products, for the improvement of our national defense, for the lengthening of the span of human life, and the lessening of human suffering. These are only a few of the countless problems which might be suggested to these Federal research fellows, and which, when solved, will enable us to reap the profits of the original paltry expenditure a thousandfold.

At present the Government of the United States, according to a recent report of Science Service, utilizes only one third of 1 percent of its expenditures in the promotion of scientific research despite the merits of such research exemplified on every hand today. Moreover, by a recent so-called "economy bill" our Federal Government has even curtailed its previous meager program of scientific research by limiting the expenditures of the Bureau of Standards and other civil-service organizations engaged in research work. Unfortunately, also, many of the industrial concerns, with the notable exception of certain large successful companies which have had the foresight to see the value of research, have limited or removed their research staffs, as a consequence of which many technically trained men have been deprived of a livelihood. These great numbers of unemployed men from the civil and Federal research fields are each year augmented by the large masses of young college graduates, trained in technical fields, who find it impossible to obtain work in their respective professions.

In desperation many of these men have temporarily taken mediocre jobs, and in doing so have deprived the unskilled laborer of his source of income, casting him out upon the charity of the Government. Others, not having money to pursue scholastic work toward a higher degree during their unemployment, have become subjects of fraternal and governmental charity. In total, the minds of these college-trained men are stagnating and retrograding, remarkable brain power is being wasted, and the Nation is suffering a scientific stalemate. Climaxing this situation, the many undergraduates, observing the plight of their graduating seniors, who have spent much money and four of the best years of their lives in attaining their goal, are wondering if this goal is worth the struggle. Consequently enrollment in colleges is inclined to drop faster than the present financial situation would warrant.

Hence the colleges are in an unfortunate plight. With their enrollment drastically diminished, their funds depleted, and their income curtailed, they are seeking financial assistance from the Government. They are obtaining but few fellowship grants from industry and, in the case of State institutions, their maintenance funds have been greatly reduced by rebudgeting.

This bill seeks to relieve these situations. The technical man will be provided with work, leaving in many cases his past mediocre job to an unskilled laborer. The sum allotted to the colleges at which these projects are in progress will aid in the expansion of college facilities and in the payment of certain faculty members acting as directors. The general activity and added facilities and accomplishments ensuing will improve the morale of the students, with a consequent expected increase in enrollment, while the municipality in which the college is situated will, of course, benefit from the residence of each new worker.

This bill is unique in that it provides a very simple system of administration which will be entirely free from political influence. It makes more jobs than it provides for, rewards the youth who has spent precious money and time on his education, and stimulates the quest for knowledge. It does not call for the redistribution of working hours, for the destruction of property, or the like, but rather grasps from the progressive minds of the sages of today the practical problems of tomorrow, which are to be the subject of the worker in his exploration into unknown realms of science, and which, when solved, will maintain the standards of the past by retaining the United States first and foremost in world progress.

Under the C.C.C. appropriations, we are expending $1,000 per individual for the purpose of clearing firebreaks, cutting out underbrush, and removing debris in forests, which work is, in a sense, unnecessary and absolutely inconsequential, and the total effect of which may be destroyed by our continually recurring forest fires. The most illiterate and incompetent laborer can do this class of work. What my bill proposes can only be performed by men who have already established their intellectual superiority through long years of sacrifice of time and finances. What these men will develop in the various research problems will belong forever to future generations and cannot be effaced through any act of nature or the work of man. There can be no comparison between the C.C.C. and their accomplishments and the benefits which would accrue to our Nation through the consummation of research fellowships which would put the most active and alert minds in America to work on problems for which future generations would sing our praises and which, from the standpoint of economic and industrial advantage, would compensate our Nation a thousandfold.

H.R. 6968

A bill to apply the principles of the Civil Works Administration to create employment for technically qualified individuals through the establishment of Federal research fellowships in the institutions of higher learning in the United States and to give financial aid to colleges and universities

Whereas thousands of eminently qualified technically trained individuals are without employment or are employed in unskilled work, thus lowering the morale and fitness of these individuals in the vocations in which they have been trained at the expense of much valuable time and money; and

Whereas the creation of jobs for these scientifically trained individuals, in the many cases where they are now employed in menial tasks, would vacate jobs to an equal number of unskilled individuals; and

Whereas the United States Government can ill afford to permit individuals who have devoted years to higher scientific research to stagnate or retrograde; and

Whereas the expenditures involved in this act are infinitesimal compared with the benefit which would accrue to our Nation in research and development along scientific lines in order to make America more economically secure and self-sustained; and

Whereas in the interest of advance in civilization it is essential that the standards of education of our higher institutions of learning should be fostered and encouraged along inventive channels in the interest of giving a fuller expression to life and safeguarding public health; and

Whereas because of decreased attendance our colleges and universities are unable adequately to make advances along scientific and educational lines: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby set aside to the credit of the Secretary of Commerce any unappropriated funds in the Treasury of the United States, not to exceed $20,000,000, which shall be administered by the Secretary of Commerce as hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. Any citizen having completed 4 years of education leading to a bachelor's degree in any reputable college or university in the United States, who, in addition, can demonstrate by examination his suitability to the work selected, shall be eligible for appointment to a research fellowship as provided in this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Commerce, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, is authorized and directed to issue research fellowships, no one of which shall exceed $1,600 per annum, to individuals technically qualified for the purpose of conducting research work in the various colleges and universities for the benefit of the various departments of the Federal Government and/or for private industry in the fields of chemistry and physics and the applied sciences relating thereto, including electrical, civil, sanitary, mechanical, chemical, and aeronautical engineering, and medicine.

SEC. 4. An amount not to exceed $400 per year per fellowship may be utilized for the purchase of equipment and supplies necessary in the problem in question to which the candidate has been assigned. Equipment and unexpended supplies thus purchased for the research project shall become the property of the institution on the completion of the work. Wherever practical, educational institutions shall be called upon to furnish the required equipment.

SEC. 5. Candidates designated by the Secretary of Commerce for research projects at the various educational institutions shall work in collaboration with and under the direction of members of the faculty familiar with the projects or research problems involved.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman and the Members of the House realize that those Spanish War veterans who are now put back on the roll and given $15 a month pension, will be given that pension only from the date of the application of their claim. It will not be retroactive.

Mr. HOEPPEL. That is true.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think it is extremely unfair and should be remedied. Every Spanish-American War veteran should be notified that he must immediately file his claim in order to be paid from that date. Most of them believe that the law is retroactive to the passage of the regulation.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the gentlewoman, I am pleased to state that I have so advised all Spanish-American War veteran commanders in my district.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

BERYL M. M'HAM

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the bill (H.R. 992) for relief of Beryl M. McHam was passed, be vacated and the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H.R. 992 was passed and to lay the bill on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to now consider Senate bill 558, for the relief of Beryl M. McHam.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider Senate bill 558, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Beryl M. McHam, who served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment, and Company C, Eighth Regiment, United States Infantry, World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 7th day of July 1920: Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Line 10, strike out all after the word "Provided", in line 9, and insert "That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance, except adjusted-service compensation, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

ALBERT N. EICHENLAUB, ALIAS ALBERT N. OAKLEAF

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 891) for the relief of Albert N. Eichenlaub, alias Albert N. Oakleaf.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Does the gentleman know that this man Oakleaf is the same man as Albert N. Eichenlaub?

Mr. LAMNECK. I know the man personally. He is a German, and Oakleaf is the translation of the German name Eichenlaub. I was raised in the same town with the man.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Albert N. Eichenlaub, alias Albert N. Oakleaf, who was a member of Company G, Seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a matter of that organization on the — day of ————: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "matter" and insert the word "member."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "the", insert "22d" and after the word "of" in the same line insert "October 1900."

The committee amendments were agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ERNEST B. BUTTE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 305) for the relief of Ernest B. Butte.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Ernest B. Butte, late of Company L, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 13th day of March 1906: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HUGH CALLAHAN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 320) for the relief of Hugh Callahan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits Hugh Callahan, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 8th day of April 1904: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ROY BECK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 883) for the relief of Roy Beck.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand the situation in this case, this boy enlisted in the Army when he was 15 years old and served about 3 months. He was then discharged because of his youth. It was not an honorable discharge, nor was it a dishonorable discharge. I do not say that the boy has been harmed in any way or that anything will be accomplished by the passage of this bill.

Mr. LAMNECK. They seemed to think it would harm him and that the records are not what they should be; that he ought not to have been dishonorably discharged.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That was not a dishonorable discharge. It is what is known in the Army as a "straight kick"; neither with nor without honor.

Mr. LAMNECK. Does the gentleman consider there is any harm in passing the bill? Is there any objection to passing the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It might make him eligible for a pension.

Mr. LAMNECK. It says he is not having this bill passed for a pension. The bill specifically provides that.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman will accept the committee amendment, will he?

Mr. LAMNECK. Certainly.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Then I have no objection; but I do not see anything to be accomplished by the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Roy Beck, private, Second Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 9th day of June 1920: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the proviso and insert "That no bounty, pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue because of the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK FERST

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 889, for the relief of Frank Ferst.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Reserving the right to object, I find nothing in the report of this committee to show that this man was ever sick or disabled in any way, although he claims that his refusal to obey orders, for which he was discharged, was because of illness. The report of the committee makes no showing whatsoever of any illness on the part of this man, and there is nothing from the War Department to show that he was ever ill.

Mr. LAMNECK. I have a statement here from the man himself in which he says he was ordered to go swimming, and complained to the captain that he could not, because of illness; and because of that fact he was charged with violating the sixty-second article of war, and convicted and discharged dishonorably. I have a statement somewhere in my records of a companion who made a statement that he was ill; and the statement in this report says that he had a doctor's services after he was confined in prison, and that he was sick.

Mr. GRISWOLD. There is no statement in this report from anybody to that effect.

Mr. LAMNECK. Well, I do not know who makes the statement.

Mr. GRISWOLD. There is no statement to show that this man was ever ill or confined or anything else, and yet he gave as the reason for his absolute refusal to obey a direct order of his commanding officer the fact that he was ill, for which refusal he was afterward dishonorably discharged.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It does not seem to me that is a very serious offense. However, I do not think the man's record warrants his becoming eligible for any pension. I have no objection to the bill, if the gentleman will agree to the proviso.

Mr. LAMNECK. I will agree to that. The committee report says that the captain ordered him to the guardhouse, where he was later attended by a physician who pronounced him ill, and that was his excuse for not swimming; and because of that fact he was dishonorably discharged.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I agree with the gentleman that I think it was an excessive punishment; but, on the other hand, I do not think the man should become eligible for a pension or bounty.

Mr. LAMNECK. That is satisfactory to me.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Frank Ferst, who was a member of Battery B, Fourth Regiment United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 6th day of November 1905: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Strike out the proviso beginning in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof: "Provided, That no bounty, pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue because of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. EDGERLY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 860, for the relief of George W. Edgerly.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not think I shall object—but I should like some information. Would this officer have been entitled to come before a retiring board, instead of resigning, had he requested to come before the Board?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not familiar with the law as to that; but if he had remained in the service, even though he was non compos mentis, he would have been retired in the usual course of procedure.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon George W. Edgerly, late captain of Infantry and temporary major, Regular Army, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his resignation, September 18, 1919, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said George W. Edgerly a captain of Infantry and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said George W. Edgerly shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALEX TERLIZZI

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1247, for the relief of Alex Terlizzi.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I reserve the objection.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman please tell me the basis on which he objects?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. On just the same basis that I am going to object to a bill on this side later. I am going to object to any refund to a surety company for the loss of a bond. They charge at least 10 to 20 percent as a premium. On this particular $2,000 bond, which you are asking to be refunded to this surety company, they have already made a profit of $200 if it was 10 percent.

They could lose 1 bond out of 10. As a matter of fact they do not lose on more than 1 bond out of 100; yet if they lost 1 out of 10, they would still be even. Under all the circumstances, if they gamble upon a man and do not require sufficient collateral to protect themselves, they should suffer the loss.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman appreciates the fact, does he not, that this has been the custom under similar circumstances up to the present time, and, in fact, the only way to rectify this situation? And the Comptroller General so states in a letter that he has filed and which is contained in the report.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not know what the custom is, but I know what the bonding companies are; and I know from a lawyer's standpoint how they conduct themselves. They should take a loss occasionally.

Mr. SNELL. As long as the matter has been approved by the Department of Justice, the Comptroller General, and by every representative of the Government all along the line, it seems to me that the interests of the Government have been fairly well taken care of and its rights preserved and well looked after. I hope, unless the gentleman has some information the House has not, he will let this bill go through.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will allow me to make this statement, as far as profits are concerned, the indemnity companies have made more profits during the depression than any other form of business has made.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact the records show that practically every one of the surety companies is in bankruptcy; a greater proportion of them than any other line of business.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If they have gone into bankruptcy, it must have been because they paid salaries of two and three hundred thousand dollars a year to their presidents and other officers.

Mr. BLACK. On the other hand, there is no reason why the Government should make this money. The Government is not out of pocket at all. They produced the defendant, and he paid a fine of $25. So the Government is $25 ahead on the strength of the National Prohibition Act. The surety company should not pay a $2,000 fine because somebody else violated the National Prohibition Act.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I am going to object to the gentleman's bill when it comes up, a $20,000 bill.

Mr. HOPE. It is a fact, is it not, that this defendant received no notice to appear? He was in default of appearance on two occasions; but he received no notice. Does not the evidence show this to be the case?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Regardless of what the report shows, I know as a matter of fact that the bonding companies know better than either the court or the clerk of the court when a defendant is supposed to be present in court; and if they are negligent in producing him, that is their own fault. They have charged him from $200 to $400 for a bond and have assumed the obligation of bringing him into court when he is required. If they do not get him into court, they should not go entirely free. They should stand a loss occasionally. Theirs is a game of heads we win, tails you lose.

Mr. SNELL. In this case the record shows there was no fault on the part of the bonding company. The fault lay with the court in not properly notifying the defendant to be present.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The bonding companies are perfectly familiar with the rules of the court in the matter of the production of defendants. If they do not produce them when needed, there must be some negligence.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if he is one of the official objectors on his side?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I am one of those that have been so designated.

Mr. SNELL. If that is going to be the attitude of the objectors on the majority side, we can object as well as they; and I serve notice that there will be no more bills passed here this morning or this session by unanimous consent.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is entirely up to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Here we have an absolutely legitimate bill, but the gentleman objects to it merely because he does not like bonding companies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the minority leader ought not to get angry because a posted and very valuable youngster, whom we have well trained on this side, is able to answer him.

Mr. SNELL. But the youngster is not answering me.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the youngster took care of himself pretty well when he answered the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. He made certain statements that should not have been made and have nothing to do with the bill under consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. The youngster made a mighty good argument; and when the minority leader cannot make an argument in reply, he gets angry.

Mr. SNELL. I am not trying to make an argument; but the gentleman from Washington says he objects to the bill because he is against bonding companies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, the Clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

CALVIN M. HEAD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5163, for the relief of Calvin M. Head.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SNELL. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BLANTON. If we are going to have peremptory objections, let us find it out now, and then we might as well adjourn.

Mr. SNELL. Well, we had a peremptory objection just a minute ago; and you are going to have a lot more of them.

Mr. BLANTON. That one the gentleman from Washington made was followed by a long argument with the gentleman from New York. It was pretty well administered to the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. If you are starting to administer something to the minority leader, you will find he has some rights under unanimous consent. And I admit he has no rights under any other situation in the House, but under unanimous consent he has just as much right as a member of the majority.

Mr. BLANTON. Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad.

Mr. SNELL. Well, go ahead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If that is going to be the attitude of the minority leader, we might as well find it out now as later, and adjourn here, and attend to some other business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I object.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill coming up on the Private Calendar. I want it considered on its merits. I feel it is going to be objected to; in fact, that is plainly evident, and if it is once objected to, it will not be reached again during this Congress.

As I said, I want my bill considered on its merits. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] insists that he will let no more bills pass; that he will object to them as fast as they are reached. In view of his determination to prevent further consideration of the Private Calendar, I see no reason why we should remain in session.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, for the reason just stated, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McKEOWN and Mr. BLACK) there were—yeas 35, nays 14.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 57 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, February 10, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

348. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting draft of a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to abandon or evacuate real estate no longer required for cemeterial purposes in Europe, and for other purposes, with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

349. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1935, amounting in all to $2,115,000, to restore to the State agricultural experiment station and cooperative agricultural extension work the 25-percent reduction which was made in such items in accordance with section 18 of Executive Order No. 6166, dated June 10, 1933, which section was revoked by Executive Order No. 6586, dated February 6, 1934 (H.Doc. No. 247); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KERR: Committee on Elections No. 3. House Resolution 259. Resolution in the case of Shanahan v. Beck; without amendment (Rept. No. 694). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KERR: Committee on Elections No. 3. House Resolution 260. Resolution in the case of Bowles v. Dingell; without amendment (Rept. No. 695). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KERR: Committee on Elections No. 3. House Resolution 261. Resolution in the case of Reese v. Ellzey; without amendment (Rept. No. 696). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4035. A bill for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman; without amendment (Rept. No. 664). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4067. A bill for the relief of the mayor and aldermen of Jersey City, Hudson County, N.J., a municipal corporation; with amendment (Rept. No. 665). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4078. A bill for the relief of William H. Ames; without amendment (Rept. No. 666). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4082. A bill for the relief of John J. Corcoran; with amendment (Rept. No. 667). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4269. A bill for the relief of Edward J. Devine; without amendment (Rept. No. 668). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4274. A bill for the relief of Charles A. Brown; with amendment (Rept. No. 669). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4390. A bill to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to R. W. Dickerson; with amendment (Rept. No. 670). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4393. A bill for the relief of the United States Bank of St. Louis, Mo.; with amendment (Rept. No. 671). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4425. A bill providing compensation to M. J. Harbinson for injuries sustained while in the Government service at and on the Belknap Reservation, Mont., engaged as a moundsman; with amendment (Rept. No. 672). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4444. A bill for the relief of Lt. James Floyd Terrell, Medical Corps, United States Navy; with amendment (Rept. No. 673). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4445. A bill for the relief of John Worthington; with amendment (Rept. No. 674). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4447. A bill for the relief of Vertner Tate; without amendment (Rept. No. 675). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4533. A bill to reimburse D. W. Tanner for expense of purchasing an artificial limb; without amendment (Rept. No. 676). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4541. A bill for the relief of George Dacas; with amendment (Rept. No. 677). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4608. A bill for the relief of Martin-Walsh, Inc.,; with amendment (Rept. No. 678). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4611. A bill for the relief of Barney Rieke; with amendment (Rept. No. 679). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4670. A bill for the relief of Lyman D. Drake, Jr.; with amendment (Rept. No. 680). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4683. A bill for the relief of Oswald Bauch; with amendment (Rept. No. 681). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4690. A bill for the relief of Eula K. Lee; with amendment (Rept. No. 682). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4774. A bill for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during October 1918; without amendment (Rept. No. 683). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4780. A bill for the relief of Moreau M. Casler; without amendment (Rept. No. 684). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4913. A bill for the relief of Pete Jelovac; without amendment (Rept. No. 685). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4932. A bill for the relief of Judd W. Hulbert; without amendment (Rept. No. 686). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4957. A bill for the relief of F. M. Peters and J. T. Akers; with amendment (Rept. No. 687). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4966. A bill for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway; with amendment (Rept. No. 688). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4992. A bill authorizing the payment of compensation to Laura Roush for the death of her husband, William C. Roush; without amendment (Rept. No. 689). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5004. A bill for the relief of Joe Petran; without amendment (Rept. No. 690). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5122. A bill for the relief of William S. Steward; without amendment (Rept. No. 691). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5142. A bill for the relief of Eustace Parks; with amendment (Rept. No. 692). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5161. A bill for the relief of Wiener Bank Verein; with amendment (Rept. No. 693). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH: A bill (H.R. 7829) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to facilitate the repair and renovation of buildings; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BOILEAU: A bill (H.R. 7830) to restore to veterans and dependents of veterans of the Civil War, Indian wars, Spanish-American War, Philippine insurrection, and Boxer rebellion pensions as they were being paid on March 19, 1933, and to provide a uniform system of compensation and pensions and other benefits for veterans and dependents of veterans of the World War, recognized expeditions, and for the Regular Establishments; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BOLAND: A bill (H.R. 7831) to prohibit any person employed by the National Recovery Administration now or hereafter from appearing before said National Recovery Administration in any capacity for a period of 2 years after his service is dispensed with; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCRUGHAM: A bill (H.R. 7832) providing for the purchase, by the Secretary of the Treasury, of sufficient amounts of silver for addition to the monetary resources of the United States, and the issuance of certificates therefor; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. RANDOLPH: A bill (H.R. 7833) authorizing the State Road Commission of West Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Potomac River at or near Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, W.Va.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GILCHRIST: A bill (H.R. 7834) to provide for conveying to the State of Iowa certain lands within the nonnavigable meandered lake beds within that State for use as public parks, recreation grounds, and game refuges; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina: A bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LANHAM: A bill (H.R. 7836) to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the northern district of Texas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLETCHER: A bill (H.R. 7837) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to amend the contract for sale of post-office building and site at Findlay, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FISH: Resolution (H.Res. 262) requesting information in regard to war debts; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, joint resolution (H.J.Res. 268) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering the United States and the several States to lay and collect taxes upon income derived from certain securities; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STOKES: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 269) to amend the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BAKEWELL: A bill (H.R. 7838) for the relief of Samuel Chaplovitz; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H.R. 7839) for the relief of the Citizens State Bank of Marianna, Fla.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CROWE: A bill (H.R. 7840) granting a pension to Eugene Moody; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H.R. 7841) for the relief of Frank V. Kennedy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HEALEY: A bill (H.R. 7842) for the relief of Joseph V. Rogers; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7843) for the relief of Allan McClure; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7844) for the relief of Ralph DelVerde; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7845) for the relief of Albert Henry George; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LEMKE: A bill (H.R. 7846) for the relief of Lillian Morden; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7847) granting a pension to Hans Simonsen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H.R. 7848) for the relief of the heirs of Sarah S. Wilson; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: A bill (H.R. 7849) for the relief of certain creditors of J. R. and J. A. Whelan, Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWANK: A bill (H.R. 7850) for the relief of Sidney M. Blackburn; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOODRUM: A bill (H.R. 7851) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, adjudicate, and enter judgment on the claim of William W. McElrath against the United States for compensation for the use or manufacture of an invention of William W. McElrath covered by reissue letters patent issued by the Patent Office of the United States on the 19th day of February 1924; to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2198. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress in favor of proper consideration for granite in Federal construction projects; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

2199. By Mr. BAKEWELL: Petition of the National Guard Association of Connecticut, praying for the restitution of the 48 drills annually, the minimum provided in the National Defense Act, and the elimination of the 15-percent pay reduction; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2200. By Mr. HESS: Petition of various residents of Hamilton County, Ohio, asking for the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2201. By Mr. LAMBERTSON: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Blue Rapids, Kans., urging the passage of House bill 6097, providing for higher moral standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2202. By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Petition of the voters of the town of Bourne, Mass., in town meeting assembled, earnestly protesting against and objecting to the establishment of a National Guard camp in the towns of Bourne and Sandwich, Mass.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2203. By Mr. WITHROW: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation establishing a 30-hour week and a living wage; to the Committee on Labor.

2204. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact necessary legislation for the continuation of the Civil Works Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2205. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress of the United States to substantially increase the estates' tax and gift tax and allot a definite part of the proceeds thereof to an old-age pension fund and unemployment insurance reserve; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2206. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to unemployment in the State of Wisconsin and requesting extension of the Civil Works Administration and the increase of Wisconsin's Civil Works Administration quota to at least 160,000; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2207. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact proposed legislation for the control of the grasshopper menace; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2208. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the national administration to provide relief for the potato-growing industry in Wisconsin; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2209. Also, petition of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the Civil Works Administration to make lime crushing for agricultural purposes an eligible project under the Civil Works Administration program; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2210. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to the corn-hog program; to the Committee on Agriculture.